Dear Bishop White—You must excuse my apparent lack of courtesy in not replying to your letter of 3rd August and to your telegram of 2nd instant ere now. I have, however, only just returned from a visit to Sydney and Melbourne, and being pressed for time was obliged to defer writing to you till my return.

I am pleased to know the views you hold on the Amending Education Bill now before the House and I recognise your feelings are strong on the subject, so strong indeed that your vote at the next State election may be largely influenced against me should I vote against the Bill. It is as well at any rate to know what I can expect in the attitude I intend adopting on this measure.

I have the greatest amount of respect for the conscientious views of your people and I fully believe that the children of the State should be taught the Bible and receive as much religious training as possible in their youth. The Bill before the House however does not convey the benefit that a large section of our community might expect, and unless some provision is made for dealing more fairly with denominational schools at present imparting secular education satisfactory to the Educational Authorities I feel obliged to oppose the measure.

So far as the majority in my electorate is concerned, I am convinced that a referendum on a religious matter is scarcely capable of being judged without prejudice.

You apparently think that I should consider myself bound by the result, but I do not forget a certain meeting you addressed in Cooktown last year at which I was present by invitation. Your expressions then were that if the referendum was decided in the negative you and your people intended to try and establish and secure State assistance for denominational schools. You expect me to accept the affirmative decision on this referendum although had it been in the negative you yourself would not have let it rest at that! Is this attitude quite fair?

I prefer to see our system of State Education remain free, secular and unsectarian, but if the people by referendum expressed a desire for religious instruction combined with secular, and the recent referendum may perhaps be taken to indicate that they do wish this, then I am quite agreeable to the State granting assistance to denominational schools on condition that the ordinary curriculum is equal to existing standard and that the religious part be entirely at the discretion of the particular denomination. This latter would harmonise with your own alternative expressions. I shall support the Bill only on condition that this is done.

From your telegram I understand that a conference recently held desired me to refrain from voting against the Bill. In justice to myself I would request that my reply above contained be conveyed to your people per medium of your parish publication.—Yours sincerely,

H. A. C. DOUGLAS.

Thursday Island,
September 21, 1910.

Dear Mr. Douglas—I have to thank you for your letter of September 1st which arrived here only yesterday by the Aramac.

I am glad that we at least agree as to the necessity of "the children of the State being taught the Bible and receiving as much religious training as possible in their youth" however much we may differ as to how that object is to be best attained. It is no small matter to be aiming at the same goal. I might perhaps question the propriety of your making the subject of public criticism a statement of mine made at a social gathering of our own people at Cooktown, held to welcome me on my return from England, at which you were as you say an invited guest, but I should not object had you quoted me quite accurately which I think is not the case. What I did say was that if the people of Queensland persisted in refusing to the majority of parents the right they desired of having the Bible taught and their children given religious instruction by their own minister of religion in school hours, then nothing would be left for us but to try to establish and obtain assistance for denominational schools, but I made it abundantly clear that this was a thing which I did not desire or approve of except in the improbable event (and the result has shown that I was right in considering it improbable) of the people refusing us justice.

It seems to me that this attitude is perfectly consistent with our expecting Roman Catholics to accept the result of the referendum. No injustice is done to them by allowing the majority to have their children educated as they wish. If they do not wish their children to be taught the facts of the Bible by the State School Teacher they are at perfect liberty to withdraw their children from that instruction, and surely they are not wronged by the permission given to a Roman Catholic priest to go into the State School and teach the children of his own faith.

I must strongly protest against your statement that your proposal to substitute denominational education for the plan approved by the people harmonises with my alternative expressions. As I have already said I do not regard these plans as alternative. I believe the former to be most undesirable and I have said so often and strongly. I regard it as better than an absolute ignoring of God in education but that is all. The people have clearly shown that they do not wish God ignored in education, and I am going to stand by that decision.

I am sorry that you think that a majority of electors in your electorate are incapable of judging on a religious matter without prejudice, and possibly the judgement of mere majorities is not an ideal way of settling controversies, still we have got no better, and I am afraid we shall have to be content with it. I hope to see you in Brisbane, where I shall be at the end of October.—Yours very sincerely,

GILBERT, Bishop of Carpentaria.

H. DOUGLAS Esq., M.L.A.

P.S.—I will certainly publish your letter in the next issue of the "Carpentarian." Had your letter reached me a week earlier I might have got it into the present (October) number, but as it is the issue is finished and printed.

Copes.

The Archbishop of Brisbane, on being presented by Archdeacon Le Fanu with a cope from the ladies of the diocese, said he thanked them. He placed very little store on externals, his feeling being that garments, as garments, were not worth fighting for, and it was much better for those who loved the æsthetic side of worship, and particular garments to forego them rather than destroy the peace of the Church. There was no doubt, he thought, that it was the duty of Bishops to wear copes in their cathedrals, and no real opposition had ever been raised against their being worn, so he would have pleasure in wearing it. He greatly valued the esteem which the presentation expressed.

All the Queensland Bishops wore copes at the opening of the Brisbane Cathedral. That worn by our own Bishop is a very beautiful cope of white silk, embroidered with Tudor roses and the diocesan arms. It was presented to the diocese by Sister Esther of Melbourne. The jewel on the morse was the gift to the Church of Mrs. Milman.

The Bishop.

The Bishop left for the Gulf on December 14th, and will spend Christmas at Georgetown. He will also visit Normanton and hold a confirmation at Croydon. He hopes to return to Thursday Island on January 9th. In April he hopes to visit Port Darwin, the Roper River, and Borraloola; and in July to ride up the Peninsula with Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, holding a confirmation at Coen.

Letter from Miss A. C. White.

The following letter from Miss A. C. White, the Bishop's sister in Greece, will be of general interest to our readers:—

Kephisia, near Athens,
14th July, 1910

I have just come back from a lovely five day's trip on a Greek coasting steamer. A friend on the Island of Hydra wrote and asked me to join her, and I managed to do so. Contrary to most of her sort the boat was very clean. At least she starts clean each trip, but most of the passengers are such pigs (with apologies to the quadrupeds) that there is enough to do cleaning up after each trip. We left Piræus at 8 p.m. on Thursday bound for Volo. There was no moon, so we had to wait till next morning for scenery. At 5 we were at Chalkis, but I was too sleepy to get up and did not appear on the bridge till 9. The channel between the Island of Eubœa and the mainland is quite narrow, all the way through the coastline is very irregular and exquisitely picturesque. The Northern part of Eubœa is well wooded, and the coast is a succession of pine clad hills rising out of an impossibly blue sea. The effect is very much more like a lake really and reminded me of Switzerland, though much more gorgeous and beautiful. We could see the snow-streaked top of Mount Parnassus, and later on a solitary mountain called Kiona about the same height as Parnassus, and also snow-streaked. We touched at Edipsoa, a hot-spring-cure place with a glaringly new hotel, and then passed the Gulf of Lamia where I forgot to look for Thermopyla. Then we passed the top of Eubœa and got into the Gulf of Volo. At the further end of that was a huge pine-clad mountain with more than a dozen white villages splashed down on it, and I found that was Pelion, and the white splashes some of the "24 villages of Pelion." If roads could be made, hotels built, and supplies of luxuries introduced I think the Gulf of Volo would soon be a famous summer resort. Some of the villages stand very high on the mountain amid pine forest, rocky gorges, running streams, &c., and are cool, healthy and exquisitely situated. We anchored at 2, but got ashore rather later. I had an introduction to a gentleman who could speak Italian, and asked him to direct us to the museum. He did better for he accompanied us. The museum is not mentioned in Baedeker as it is new, but I fancy I have read in a paper some mention of it. It contains a quite unique collection of antiquities unearthed from the ruined town of Pegasæe. There are exquisite marble columns, &c., dating from the stone age, and a wonderful assortment of stone and flint chisels with which the work was done. There are also a lot of lovely things in pottery, and many bronze implements and ornaments. Most of the things dated from 2000 or 3000 B.C., but trying to realize the dates made me giddy, and I preferred admiring the things. The crowning glory of the museum is the wonderful find of painted tombstones. These were all found under an olive wood at a good depth below the earth. They have been buried two or three thousand years, and some are blurred and some almost obliterated, but others are wonderfully clear both in line and colouring. The drawing of all is excellent and the figures very graceful and life like. I fancy the idea was to paint some notable or else some characteristic scene in the life of the departed. One was the death of a woman just after her baby's birth. She lay dead on her bed with her husband leaning over her, and a nurse held up the baby, dressed in red swaddling clothes. Others had the departure or return of sons from their father's houses, great ladies receiving visits, families saying prayers, etc., etc. One group of ladies contained a red mushroom-like parasol, and there were lots of quite "modern" touches about the figures and dresses. They are really beautiful things, apart from their wonderful historic value. I fancy many of them are by the same hand, and of course there would most likely have been one artist who devoted himself to the subject. The excavations are still being carried on and new treasures brought in to classify each day. We saw some tombstones with the earth still caked on to them, waiting to be uncovered, and some cloths of earth bearing the impression of the pictures from which they had been removed. Finding us so charmed by the museum our new friend wanted to conduct us in a boat to Pegasæe to see the site of the town and the excavations in progress, but unfortunately it was too late for that as we had to be on board at 7.30 p.m. and the excursion would have taken some three hours at least. I hope later to go back to Volo and study it all again more at leisure. Next morning I was on the bridge at 5 a.m. just as we got to Chalkis and saw the opening of the iron bridge which connects Eubœa with the mainland. The channel is very narrow there, and an extraordinarily strong current puzzles all the experts, none of whom can explain it in the least. The shore of the mainland was still beautiful after Chalkis, but the southern half of Eubœa is not so lonely as the northern, and some of it is quite barren. We passed the Bay of Marathon about 8 o'clock and could distinctly see the mound which marks the graves of the Athenian warriors. Two or three hours after we rounded Cape Sunion where is a lonely temple of Poseidon standing right up against the sky. Then we got back to Piræus about 2 p.m. and went on shore awhile. At 8 p.m. we were off again in a new direction, bound for the south. I was up at 5 next morning in time to see the ruined fortifications of Monemvasia where we called for a moment. Then we rounded Cape Malea and were in the Gulf of Marathonisi, where for the first time it was a bit rough, and we caught the strong south wind. We stopped a moment at a lonely little town called Neapolis, where we afterwards regretted that we had not landed to await the steamer's return in the evening. Then we went to the Island of Cerigo which is not pretty, and after that up to Gytheion (whose other name is Marathonisi) getting near there we had a splendid view of the Taygetos mountains in the far distance with the highest peak streaked with snow. Gytheion is the "jumping off place" for Sparta, which one reaches by riding or by omnibus as there are no carriages. It is a sordidly little town on the face of a rocky slope. I should prefer to go to Sparta from the north by road. After an hour there we went back, and at 7 p.m. touched again at Neapolis and from there to Cerigo, and then round Cape Malea into smooth water. As I could stay quiet on the bridge regardless of the hours, mealtimes, etc., I was hardly ill at all on that only little bit of rough sailing, but going down stairs just when she rocked was too much for me. Next morning (Monday) at 5 we were at a little place called Hermione, where some people we know have built a house for the summer on an orange and lemon orchard they own there. It is so fever haunted they can't live in it, and other times of the year has other drawbacks. They are not very patriotic, for every time some ground is dug up on their estate some antiquities come to light, but they hide them and say nothing to the authorities. There was once a Roman town out on the edge of the bay, and it seems probable that their house and property are on the site of the Roman Cemetery and would be a glorious spot to excavate. I can't really understand why they don't let it be done as they are very rich and don't have the temptations peasants have to hang on to treasures and sell them on the sly. At 7 a.m. we reached Hydra and dropped my friend Miss M., and about 11 I got back to Piræus.

Thursday Island Notes.

The Bishop left for Sydney at the end of September, where he attended General Synod, and the Bishops' and missionary meetings. After this he was present at the consecration of Brisbane Cathedral, and returned home November 22nd.

There have been many changes on the Island during the past quarter. Mr. and Mrs. Hayne and their children have returned from the south, also Miss Williams and Miss Elsie George have returned from Sydney. Mrs. Turnbull and Miss Mona Corran are away on a holiday, Miss Sinclair is visiting Pine Creek.

On October 12th Miss Madge Bebrouth and Mr. Bromhall were married at the cathedral, a reception being held after the ceremony at the house of Mrs. Eggers, kindly lent for the occasion. Mrs. Bromhall was presented on her marriage with a handsome Bible by her fellow S. School teachers. Mrs. Bromhall had been a S. School teacher for some years and Mr. Bromhall was peoples' warden last year. We are sorry to lose Mrs. Bebrouth and her daughter Nora, who have gone to live in Brisbane. Miss Nora Bebrouth was also a S. School teacher and member of the G.F.S.

The G.F.S. presented Mrs. Matthews on her marriage with a pair of shell salt cellars, butter knife, etc., with which she was much pleased.

We have to thank Mrs. Pierce for two parcels of work from the Tillers Union, West Maitland, which are being sold in aid of the fund for building a church at St. Paul's Mission, Moa.

We are sorry to note the continued illness of Mrs. Wells, and wish her a speedy recovery.

A Lenten Message.

My dear People—

As I have travelled during the last year through the length and breadth of the diocese I have been painfully impressed by the growth of a great wrong, the increasing neglect of the public worship of God. I am well aware of what may be said on the other side—of the rapid depopulation of most of our towns, so that the Church population has fallen in some instances to one-half of what it was a few years ago; of the real poverty of our people; of habits of neglect which have in some instances grown up through absence for years from all means of grace; but when full allowance has been made for all these causes the result is most disquieting, and I feel that it is my duty to raise my voice in warning and exhortation. The fact is that hundreds of our people who do know better, and who have no valid excuse of any kind, habitually absent themselves from Holy Communion and from church going of any kind, so that neglect of the worship of God is rapidly becoming the common and fashionable thing to be adopted as a matter of course by all those people—and they are so many—who never dare to think or act for themselves, but who always hold back and look first to see what their next neighbour is going to do.

It appears to me that this neglect of regular worship is an idle and careless habit into which many of you have fallen or are falling. If it were founded on any disbelief in God, or any real doubt as to the Christian faith, it would be of little use to me to appeal to you against the dangers of your present negligence; but I have no reason whatever to believe that this is to any large extent the case, and much reason to believe the contrary. It is not because you disbelieve in God that you neglect to honour Him, but you have got into a slack, careless way of thinking that God is not going to be very strict with you, and that any excuse is good enough for Him. It is not on God's account that I appeal to you to reconsider your ways. God is very well able to take care of His own honour, and He does not need me nor anyone else to be His champion. It is on your account that I plead.

In the first place, you are doing your neighbour a great wrong when you stay away from Church. God has so made us that we depend very largely on each other. We depend on each other for the supply of food and clothing and the necessities of life; and we depend on each other also very largely for our spiritual needs. Public worship, to be fully effective, needs the enthusiasm of numbers, the volume of united voices, the sympathy of common action, the contagion of a common belief. To come to an early Celebration knowing there ought to be twenty communicants and to find two, to come to Evensong knowing there ought to be a congregation of 100 and to find a dozen, is to have a douche of cold water thrown over you, to have your faith damped, your enthusiasm cooled, your hopes of the joy of worship extinguished; and what right have you who stay away to inflict this cruel wrong and suffering on those who do go and who do care for God's honour? They cannot avoid pain and suffering all through your fault who profess to be a fellow Christian and neglect the most elementary Christian duty. Do you think that God will not judge and punish your selfishness, who for love of your own ease, care not that you wound your brother's soul?

Secondly, you are doing yourself and your own spiritual life a great wrong when you starve and dessicate it by continual absence from the House of God. Although we should go to Church to give, not to get; to offer our sacrifice of praise and worship, not merely to get good for our souls, at the same time there is no doubt that our spiritual life does gain enormously by Church-going, and that habitual neglect of it does dry up and starve the soul, which being no more reminded of God by psalm and hymn and scripture, and no longer receiving grace in answer to prayer and supplication, and no longer being carried out of itself by praise and thanksgiving, becomes cold and careless, and filled with only worldly hopes and cares.

It is not to the godless and unbelieving that I appeal, but to that large class of kind-hearted, well-meaning but careless people who are allowing their sense of duty to be overclouded by a host of petty and unworthy excuses, which they know in their hearts to be no real reasons at all.

One says, "I have work to do on Sunday." It is possible there may be necessary work to do on Sunday, though possibly much of it is not really necessary; but the really necessary is not enough to prevent your coming to church if you want to do so.

Another: "I must have pleasure on Sunday." Here it is a question—which is more important, your pleasure or the duty God asks of you? There is ample time for proper recreation of mind and body and Church too.

Sunday is not the day to choose for a picnic, which deliberately rejects the possibility of worship. Duty to God is more important than pleasure to yourself.

Another: "Friends come to see me." And what do your friends think in their hearts of your preference of their society to that of God? No real friend will be offended because you prefer God to them; and if they are, it does not in the least matter.

Another: "I can worship God at home," but you know that you don't. This excuse is scarcely honest.

Another: "I don't get enough from church-going." You ought to go to give, not to get. If you went in this spirit you would find that you did also get more than you expected.

Put away from you, my people, I beseech you, these and other vain excuses, and turn from your sin of neglect of God in His House. Some of you, I know, cannot possibly go to church, and to you these words do not apply. You must supply the deficiency of opportunity by what private devotions you can, and God will not forget to help you; but to a large number they do apply, and I bid them take heed to them.

You are fond of laying stress on the unsatisfactory and temporary conditions of your life in the North, on the trying nature of the climate, on the bad times of ill-health, on the general hardness of your lives; surely if it be so it is great folly not only of necessity living a life which does not satisfy you, but in addition to miss the opportunity of bringing good out of evil, by making your life such as it is the training ground for a knowledge and service of God which might transform the whole aspect of it here, and make it of inestimable service to you hereafter.

I bid you think on these things during this season of Lent, and urge you to abandon your past coldness and neglect, and to turn again to worship God in His House with penitence, faith, and love. If you do this it will bring you to an Easter in which you can worship God with an honest and thankful heart, and to the hope and joy of the greater Easter which is yet to be.

Your affectionate Bishop,

GILBERT,

Bishop of Carpentaria.

Lent, 1911.

The Bishop left Thursday Island on February 20th for Port Douglas and Cooktown. In April and May he proposes to accompany the missionary reinforcements to the Roper, and then go on to Borrooloola, returning via Port Darwin. On his return he hopes to visit the Mitchell River Mission, and to hold a confirmation at Coen on August 18th.

A Visit to Trubanaman

On September 14th, at 1 o'clock, the Mission assembled to witness the marriage of Mr Matthews and Miss Pick, which was celebrated in the temporary chapel, Mr Morrison giving the bride away.

Just as the ceremony was finished the Police Magistrate from Croydon came in to open an inquiry into the tragedy of August 28th, when a neighbouring station owner was speared by the bush black who was afterwards shot dead. The inquiry lasted three days, and as I felt bound to attend throughout, I had to give up my intended trip to Normanton and Croydon. Accordingly Mr Prankerd and Mr Morrison rode down to the coast on September 15th and embarked in the "Lily" to sail to the mouth of the Norman River; the skipper receiving orders to return with all speed after landing them, in order to take me back to Thursday Island. Meanwhile I rode over to Rutland Plains station for the last part of the inquiry, and back to the Mission in time for Sunday, September 18th, when the usual services were held and I preached twice. The next three days passed quickly, but I began to be anxious at hearing no news of the "Lily."

On Friday I went to see a camp of the bush blacks. Each hut is made of a frame of light boughs tied together in beehive shape and thickly covered with cabbage palm leaves, a tiny opening is left like the entrance to a dog-kennel. A large number will sleep in each hut, crawling through the opening and lighting a smoke fire to keep off mosquitoes.

On two evenings we had corroborees. On the second occasion the bush blacks came and joined in, and the performance was very spirited. The dances are very quaint, and a great effect is produced by the accompaniment in perfect unison of clapping, grunting, and other weird noises.

Being very anxious to get back to Thursday Island by a certain date, I left the Mission on the 22nd and walked down to the coast, hoping to save time by going on board at once as soon as the boat arrived. I was accompanied by nine aborigines, carrying stores for the boat and my luggage. We arrived at the beacon at sunset, and while I had a dip in the sea my companions collected wood, made big fires, and cooked damper. It was a picturesque camp when darkness fell, and the sand made a comfortable bed. But at midnight a heavy thunderstorm came on and soaked us through. When the sun rose many of the boys took their spears and went down to the sea to look for crabs, they soon returned with large numbers of fine big ones, and so prolonged was the resultant feast that I thought they never would go home. However, they suddenly got up, rolled up their blankets, shook hands and marched off, leaving one of their number, named Splinter, behind, as he was to join the boat's crew.

I had not brought much food as I thought the boat could not be far off, so we were on rather light rations most of the time. Of course we could not starve as the ship's flour and rice were there but I did not wish to break into that unless compelled to do so. Twice fresh supplies were sent down from the Mission, so we did well enough.

The sun blazed all day and the flies devoured us; though I don't think Splinter suffered much, he slept peacefully most of the time. I tried to read and write, but the heat and the flies and the driving sand made such exercises almost impossible. I also took short walks in the bush and found many things of interest to a new chum. At sunrise and sunset I bathed regularly, in spite of the occasional appearance of a crocodile. A flock of pelicans fished regularly near our camp; they are handsome birds and pleasant to watch.

As we sat round the camp fire after dark Splinter occasionally got to talking, and gave his opinion of men and things with a clearness and point that were very interesting. Another thunderstorm, more violent than the first, spoilt our second night's rest, heavy rain continued for some hours, and as I had to use the canvas sheet to protect the flour, I had no protection except a rug. It was cold, too, and I had to walk about to keep warm.

A bush black was camping not far from us, and one day when taking a stroll I found him dining handsomely after a successful morning's fish spearing. He had several large fish cooking on his fire and invited me to join him and choose my own fish. I did so and made some show of eating, picking the flesh off the bones with my fingers. He was using as a knife a sharp piece of shell with which he cut neat slices of raw fish liver, which he wrapped carefully in a substance that looked exactly like cotton waste—rolled it into a ball and forced it into his mouth. I want some naturalist very much to tell me what the strange delicacy really was. Splinter was delighted to get some a day or two later when our wild friend brought in a fresh supply. I understood him to say it was obtained from the stingaree, but I may have been mistaken.

One afternoon Mr Woodd rode down from the Mission with one of the boys to bring us a fresh supply of tucker. I was very pleased to see him and have an hour's chat. When Splinter saw him his first thought was to get Tom to shave him!

Four days passed, and we were so tired of looking for a sail, that when it came in sight we hardly realized what it was. Just before sunset on the evening of September 26th, the "Lily" dropped anchor, but she was a long half-mile from the shore, and I had much difficulty in attracting the attention of the crew. Of course they did not expect us to be there, and I was signalling with my towel for twenty minutes before they thought of sending in the dinghy. In great haste, as darkness was fast coming on, we tumbled ourselves and our stores into the boat and paddled out to the lugger; the anchor was got up and sail set for Thursday Island.

The "Lily" had been aground on a sand-bank near the mouth of the Norman River for three days; and her troubles were not quite over yet.

I could no longer hope to see the Bishop before he went south to General Synod; but now I was racing to get back for Sunday. But the wind was light and grew feebler every day, so my "racing", consisted largely of sitting under a roasting sun while the ship lay motionless on a glassy sea. Twice every day we had a spell of dead calm, so progress was very slow; and when Sunday dawned we were still thirty or forty miles from home. A weary struggle against wind and tide took up the whole day, and when at sunset the tide turned and the wind came fair, the "Lily" completed her run of ill-luck by getting on a coral reef where she took up a comfortable position and evidently meant to stay. So without a word Jack Giebo put the dinghy into the water and with the help of Walaby rowed me home some eight miles in the dark. We arrived at 10 p.m. and next morning the "Lily" came into harbour, apparently none the worse for her adventures.

The Laura Mission.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson has put in a year of very hard travelling indeed, visiting the Coen, Ebagoola, and the whole Cape York Peninsula, the O.K., Mount Carbine, the Mitchell River, and the Palmer. Mr. Wilkinson says in a recent letter to the Bishop: "The journeys for the year have been prosperous, I am thankful to say, no accidents, hindrances, or delays. I don't think many have been missed from Mount Carbine on the Mitchell to the Gulf, and from Walsh Telegraph Station to Moreton. Camps, huts, tents, or any other sort of habitation have been visited, and without exception a most hearty reception and cordial greeting was experienced throughout the length and breadth of the country travelled. Thanks to the interest in the work shown by some ladies in England who made a liberal donation of Bibles for distribution there are few homes or camps without a copy of the Scriptures, and some are carrying a copy of the Bible in their swags. Over and over again, when asking a man to accept a Bible he has fairly clutched it and said, 'just what I wanted.' May the seed sown bring forth fruit. It is a work for eternity, the results of which are with God. The more one gets into the confidence of these men the more one feels the burden of the great need. I cannot write of it. It is overwhelming. May God supply strength of body to be used in His service. Pray for me, pray for the people that they may be delivered from sin into that service of God which is perfect freedom."

The industrial conditions are not encouraging, only one place flourishing, i.e., Mount Carbine the growth of which is too sudden to insure stability. O.K. is a place of the past, only about a dozen people left out of about 700. A Melbourne syndicate is testing Maytown. The results are looked forward to with much interest. Ebagoola is fast disappearing, and the Coen depends only on the Great Northern Mine. The tin miners are doing fairly well but the population has fallen off greatly. The pastoralists have been blessed with about the best season for 25 years but those employed on stations are very limited in number. I hope to leave Cooktown on March 1st for Mount Carbine and to be at Coen for Easter Day, Maytown April 30, Thence down the Palmer and Mitchell reaching Trubanaman on May 13, then on the return to Mount Carbine June 4, thence by Rossiter and Tin Mines to MacIvor and Starkie, getting back to the Laura by July 8. Then to Ebagoola and Coen July 30. From Coen to meet you at Weipa on August 7, and take you up to Coen for the Confirmation. After that I hope to visit Pascoe River, Moreton, and Macdonald. I hope to leave Coen on September 10, and go the whole round except the Lower Palmer and Mitchell before Christmas. I did not finish last year's work until New Year's Day, travelling both Christmas Day and New Year's Day to keep ahead of the floods which were rising behind."

The "Worker" and the Pastoral.

It is interesting to find the Sydney "Worker" of December 29th devoting an editorial to commending the Bishops' Pastoral on the aborigines. The article says:—"There can be no question but that as a nation we have shamefully neglected our duty to the Australian aborigines."

"The suggestions made by the Bishops represent a policy which should commend itself to the conscience of the Commonwealth."

"To allow the present condition of things to continue is a disgrace and a stigma which the Australian Labour Party should endeavour to remove."

Rev. Douglas Price.

At the request of the Archbishop of Brisbane, the Rev. Douglas Price has resigned the rectorship of All Saints Church, Brisbane. At a meeting held in Brisbane Mr. Price, after gracefully acknowledging the fair and courteous treatment he had received from the Archbishop, went on, according to the "Courier" of January 13th, to say that he was a modernist. "Modernists believed that they could find a spiritual, divine, world-wide religion, based not on the Bible or the teaching of any one person but on the constitution of human nature. Broadly speaking they believed that Jesus Christ was first among the Sons of God, but they did not look upon him as the Son of God. They did not believe that his death was an atonement for sin nor yet that the Bible was specially inspired." As will be seen by an article in another column, we do not accept Mr. Price's definition of modernism, but Mr. Price's kind of modernism is of course a direct repudiation of Christianity, and absolutely justifies the Archbishop's action. The frankness of Mr. Price's admissions and his honest acknowledgment of the fairness of the Archbishop's action are the only redeeming features in a most painful case, and a pleasing contrast to the wild and foolish language of some members of his congregation.

Moa Island Mission.

Deaconess Buchanan left for the south on a four months' well earned holiday on December 30. She is staying at her brother's station Tinton, Biarra, near Esk. Mr. Jasper Harvey has been appointed temporary superintendent during the Deaconess's absence and has been giving the men the advantage of his agricultural experience. The Banzai continues to give satisfaction and is a most useful boat. A written examination was held at the end of last term, and the answers were of quite exceptional merit. The writing was extremely good and what was especially striking was the high general level, not merely a few exceptional scholars. We trust the Deaconess will return in renewed strength for her arduous work.

Miss White has received a telegram from Miss Matthews (via Normanton) announcing the safe return of herself and Mrs Matthews to Trubananman after their visit to Mapoon.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Georgetown.

Christmas 1910 has come and gone. This year we were again very pleased to welcome the Bishop and needless to say gave him a busy time. He arrived on Thursday morning, December 22nd, and stayed until Wednesday 28th. On Friday 23rd he confirmed two girls in the evening. On Saturday, Christmas Eve, the first anniversary of the dedication of the church, Mr. Hassell invited the church people to an afternoon tea on the church grounds, but as the weather was so threatening, very few people availed themselves of the opportunity. In the evening there was a preparation service for the Christmas Communion, conducted by the Bishop, his earnest words cannot fail to have been helpful to those who attended.

On Christmas Day there was a celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., Children's service at 10 a.m., at which service the Bishop dedicated the font. At 11 a.m. Litany, Holy Communion, and sermon, and evensong at 8 p.m. The afternoon was spent in visiting the hospital and a few people. The church was prettily decorated with greenery and flowers.

On Monday (Boxing Day) the Bishop and Mr. Hassell had a most enjoyable day on the banks of the Delaney River, which was running strongly after the late heavy rains.

On Tuesday, 27th, Mr. Hassell invited all the Sunday School children to tea, and on Wednesday, 28th Holy Innocents Day, the Bishop celebrated at 7.30 a.m., and left by coach in the afternoon for Crooked Creek, en route for Croydon, Mr. Hassell going to Donnyville to perform a marriage ceremony.

Recovery of Lepers.

Many of our readers will remember Tom Moreton, the half caste aboriginal leper at Friday Island, who showed such earnestness in preparing 13 of his fellow lepers for confirmation. The Bishop has just had a letter from Tom saying that his health has improved so greatly under the treatment which he has been undergoing for the last two years that the doctors have decided to separate him and two others from the rest of the lepers on Peel Island, and if after six months the improvement is still maintained, to discharge all three as cured. We are sure that our readers will rejoice. It is a sign of the reality of Tom's religious convictions that he is much troubled as to whether he ought to leave even if cured, as he has two nephews in the lazarette whom he feels he ought not to desert if it can be avoided.

The White Peril.

The London "Spectator" quotes a striking poem entitled "The White Peril." The writer, Mr. Edward Tregear, takes for his text three passages from the Labour Reports of 1908, 1909, and 1910. The first notes a fall in the birth-rate from 41 per 1,000 in 1876 to 27 per 1,000 in 1906, with a decline in the daily attendance at the Dunedin schools from 4,148 in 1887 to 2,882 in 1907; the second asserts that few children between five and fifteen years of age take the places of their elders as vacancies occur; and the third (1910) states that there are this year 1,258 fewer young people under twenty-one engaged in New Zealand industries than in the previous year.

Mr. Tregear dismisses in his opening stanzas the menace of battle, of Germany or of Asia. Utter destruction cannot come from "the men of the Failing Broods"; and why should the Asiatics "leap at our rifles' mouths who have only to crouch and wait"?—

"Peril is here! is here! Here in the Childless Land

Life sits high in the Chair of Fools, twisting her ropes of sand;

Here the lisping of babies and the cooing of mothers cease;

Here the Man and the Woman fail, and only the flocks increase.

Axes may bite in the forest. Science harness the streams,

Railway and dock be builded—all in a Land of Dreams!

Sunk in spiritual torpor ye flout these words of the wise:

'Only to music of children's songs shall the walls of a Nation rise.'

In Australia the peril is as real as in New Zealand. The Australian Bishops gave solemn warning in their Pastoral Letter of 1905, and the Bishops of the Anglican Communion repeated the warning in their Encyclical of 1908. Will Australia heed or will it perish? One or the other must happen.

Cyclone at Port Douglas.

Just as we go to press there comes news of the terrible cyclone at Port Douglas and Mossman. The former is utterly destroyed and the latter most severely damaged. Both our churches, the Port Douglas one the oldest one in the diocese, are levelled with the ground, and the little Rectory at Port Douglas blown away. The damage to the Central Mill and the farmers' cane is estimated at £30,000. Two persons were killed and many injured. It will cost at least £500 to re-erect our churches and rectory in the simplest fashion. The Bishop would be glad to receive any donations for the purpose. Happily the Mossman Rectory in which Rev E. Taffs and his family were residing at the time escaped.

The Progress of Christianity.

While there is much cause for humiliation in the slow progress of the Christian faith, whether among the nominally Christian peoples, who show such a low level of real and practical Christianity, or in the slow spread of Christian missions throughout the world, we must beware of so mistaking the object and design of the teaching of the Christian faith as to fall into the error of supposing that Christ ever led us to expect that the preaching of the Gospel would lead to the conversion of all the world into true Christians.

If we expect this we may well be utterly depressed, but if we remember what Christ told us as to the object and meaning of Christianity we shall have much cause for thankfulness and hope.

Christ never led us to expect that all people would obey the teaching of the Gospel. Indeed He asks on one occasion "When the Son of Man cometh will He find faith (or 'the faith') on the earth?" Again He warns us that the true way is narrow and few there be who find it.

What Christ bids us do is not to convert all nations, or all the people in a nation, but to preach the Gospel to all nations, to teach all nations, to bring them all to a knowledge of the truth whether they will obey it or no when they know it.

The followers of Christ both as individuals, and collectively as the Church, are to be as lights in the world. Their good works are to so shine in an evil world as to lead men to "glorify" their Father in heaven, i.e. to acknowledge that goodness and truth come of Him. As the main object of Christianity is to hold up before men a Divine Character in the person and work of Jesus Christ, so the great work of the Christian is to exhibit to a careless and self-indulgent world a character which reflects that of the Master, and wins from the world here and there such as are being saved. The progress of Christianity, hampered by masses of merely nominal Christians, has never amounted to more than this even in its times of greatest advance. That this is so may be seen from the words of that most sane and careful writer Dean Church, who in his "Anselm" says: "In one sense indeed what is gained by any great religious movement? What are all reforms, restorations, victories of truth, but protests of a minority, efforts clogged and incomplete, of the good and brave, just enough in their own day to stop instant ruin—the appointed means to save what is to be saved, but in themselves failures. Good men work and suffer, and bad men enjoy their labours and spoil them, a step is made in advance, evil rolled back and kept in check for awhile, only to return perhaps the stronger. But thus and thus only is truth passed on and the world preserved from utter corruption."

Now if this be the condition, forseen by Christ from the beginning, of the progress of Christianity, namely, that comparatively few will accept it whole-heartedly while the majority either give a conventional assent or reject it absolutely, but those few who do absolutely accept it are the salt and salvation of the earth, then there is room for thankfulness and hope.

In spite of practical materialism and half-hearted conformity, in spite of the sins and unrealities of nominal Christians it is doubtful if there has ever been a time when there was a more widespread interest in religious truth, a truer desire among real Christians to devote themselves to the service of God, in the service of their fellow men, and a more widespread enthusiasm for the spread of the Gospel throughout the world.

If Christianity has during the present generation lost in Christian countries in the number of its nominal professors it has gained largely in reality and enthusiasm, while in non-Christian lands its influence is spreading as it has never done since the earliest ages of its promulgation, for, during the last century, the number of Christians has doubled in a hundred years for the first time since the third century.

It may be objected that this view leaves a great majority of people in Christian countries outside the Christian hope. This is undoubtedly so, but the difficulty is no greater than that of the at present two-thirds, and in the past far greater proportion of the human race to whom Christianity is unknown. God only knows the heart and the reason why the truth was not realised or accepted, and He will judge all men, heathen, half-Christian and convinced Christian with absolute truth and justice.

It is the business of us who believe, not to judge others, but to strive to let our light so shine before men that by our humility, reverence, charity, and purity of life, they may be led to glorify not us but their Father in Heaven, and his self-revelation in Jesus Christ.

The New Socialism—An Impartial Inquiry.

By JANE T. STODDART, 1909.

This book is what it claims to be, an impartial and most interesting inquiry into the more modern developments and tendencies of socialism. The authoress is well up in all the most modern literature of the subject, and while keenly sympathetic with all efforts to secure justice and higher opportunities for the masses of the people, and deeply appreciative of the unselfish devotion of many of the socialist leaders, is by no means blind to the many weak points and self-deluding sophistries of some of the schemes proposed.

Several of the conclusions of this book will be of interest to our readers. In the first place the whole trend of modern socialism is away from the extremist doctrines of Karl Marx, and from the small body of modern anarchists. Modern socialists believe for the most part that it is not necessary to bring on a social cataclysm in order to inaugurate the new order of things, and that their ends can be gained by peaceful and constitutional methods; in a word, they are tending to become more akin to advanced liberals. They have not modified their aims, however, only the means by which they are to be obtained.

The cardinal principle of socialism is that the State should take out of private ownership the means of production, distribution, and exchange. The ideal is a Democratic Work

State.

The first question that arises is: How are the present holders of property to be dealt with, by confiscation or by compensation? Many of the newer socialists admit the injustice of confiscation and would be prepared for more or less compensation, but there is no agreement as to details, and as to where the money is to come from. On the whole it seems probable that compensation, if given will be very inadequate. At the same time it has to be noted that everywhere small property holders are repelled from socialism by the fear that their little holdings will be lost. The desire to bring over this class to socialism, a class which includes small shopkeepers as well as peasant proprietors, has led many modern socialists to advocate the exemption of small properties, but to do this is really to surrender a vital principle of the socialist creed.

Socialism involves the commandeering of lives; men cannot be allowed to choose their own work. It involves very great difficulties, especially as to who is to do the unpleasant and dangerous work if the reward of all labour is to be the same. These difficulties are so great that most modern socialists admit that inequalities of payment must continue, only they promise a secure and comfortable existence to every citizen.

With regard to the family, many of the earlier socialists regarded it as the great obstacle to socialism, and advocated its abolition in favour of "free love" and State care of all children. Most, but not all, modern socialists have abandoned this extreme position, but, generally speaking, they still advocate a great loosening of family ties and increased facility for divorce. Many socialists hold that women ought to be made to work equally with men outside their home work.

With regard to religion, most of the early socialists were violently opposed to all forms of religion. This was especially the case on the Continent, and much less in England. A deep enmity to Christianity still characterises the greater part of Continental socialism, although in theory most of them accept the principle of toleration for religious belief. There is a comparatively small Christian Socialist party in England and in France. The Pope has lately done his best to crush the latter. In England the Christian Social Union has done good work, but is hampered by the suspicion brought upon it by anti-Christian socialists.

The most modern development of socialism is Internationalism. At first this was accompanied by a crusade against militarism in every shape, but the difficulty has occurred to more modern thinkers that if a State adopts socialism and rejects an army it will be at the mercy of non-socialistic States by which it is surrounded. Hence they are opposed to extreme anti-militarism. It is unnecessary to say that Internationalism does not include the "yellow" or "brown" or "black" races. It is only a European internationalism.

In addition to the main body of Socialists there exists a small but active party which believes in violence, and calls upon the trades unions to take forcible possession of the means of production. These persons call themselves Syndicalists, and were much to the fore in the late French railway strikes.

Australian social conditions may be described as "Socialism Without Doctrine." Its untheoretic, practical character, and its extreme boldness in facing problems which other countries have not yet tackled, seem to be the points which strike most observers. On the other hand, it is pointed out that some of the Australian socialist extremists are on the same plane as the revolutionary syndicalists of France and Italy. They represent, however, only an extreme party of violence.

It is not easy to define socialism except in its main economic object. Its advocates have every degree of moderation and of violence, but the most important point seems to be that on the whole it is coming to prefer peaceful to violent, and constitutional to lawless, methods of attaining its end.

With many of the aims of socialism Christianity cannot but have a sympathy profound in proportion as it is real, but it is surely the duty of Christianity to see to it, at the cost of whatever opprobrium, that the methods of socialism correspond to the loftiness of many of its aims. We desire as much as any socialist the good, not only of all men in Europe, but of all mankind; but we do not believe in doing evil that good may come of it, or righting a wrong by injustice.

The conception of the brotherhood of man and of justice and equal opportunity for all is essentially a Christian doctrine. Whether the nationalisation of the means of production is or is not the best way to secure this end is not a point with which Christianity is concerned. It is concerned to see that whatever economic theory is adopted it is carried out with justice and mercy, truth and righteousness, for so alone can it be really permanent and really help mankind.

Religion As It Is.

The dry season had been prolonged into December and there was a universal cry for rain. The tanks were empty, the gardens dry, drinking water had to be carted and was dear and bad, typhoid and dysentery were threatened. When would it rain? Everyone longed and hoped and prayed for it, but up to the beginning of December not a drop had fallen. Then suddenly, without warning, it came at four o'clock on Sunday afternoon a heavy thunderstorm, and rain fell steadily for two hours, soaking the ground and filling the tanks. At six the rain stopped and the storm was over for the day. The ground is stony and in half-an-hour the streets were dry and cleansed from the dust with which they had been so long encumbered. At half-past seven I went to church for evening prayer. None of the congregation had more than half-a-mile to come, and I expected to see the church filled with a congregation come to thank God for His good gift of the rain. I found four women and ten men composing the congregation, which should have numbered at least a hundred; nor did any of the absent members of the congregation remember to double their offerings next Sunday to make up for their absence. I thought to myself: Here is gratitude! Here is the patience of God! People are longing for God's gift of rain above all other things. It is needed to give them comfort, health, beauty, life. Without it life is a burden. God hears their cry; sends a full and generous answer; sends it at a time when it does not interfere with their business; sends it in full measure; brings it to an end in good time for them to come and thank Him; and out of a congregation of professing Christians, only a miserable few have a word of thanks or gratitude for Him. Yet these people would be astonished if they were told that they were not good Christians; that they were like the nine lepers who when they were healed did not take the trouble to turn back and give God the glory. Is it any wonder that the Church is weak and cold when its members show so little practical religion in their lives? They would go through pouring rain to be present at a dance, but to expect them to go out an hour after the rain has ceased merely to thank God for a great mercy seems to them absurdly unreasonable. But where does their religion come in?

Modernism.

The religious movement called Modernism is vague but represents a sufficiently clear theory and policy. It is undoubtedly growing and destined to grow, and it is well to ask what attitude the Church ought to adopt towards it. Modernism contains many valuable elements of truth.

1. Man was not made for the Christian faith but the Christian faith for man. If it had been the other way man could be forced to conform, as it is the bottles are always getting too old for the wine. Human personality is always changing in knowledge, experience, point of view and Modernism claims that while the elementary truths of Christianity are always the same, that they must constantly be reviewed and restated to correspond to man's ever changing conditions and knowledge.

2. The Christian faith was not meant to grow narrower as the ages go on, but to expand and grow with the human race and to correspond to the ever growing deepness and complexity of life.

3. Language is constantly changing in its meaning and its connotation. Hence old theological phrases no longer mean to us what they did to our fathers, nor can they be explained in the same way. The Christian Faith needs to be re-expressed and re-interpreted to each new generation. The permanent elements must be maintained but their value must be made clear and they must not be confused with the temporary and the particular.

4. In one sense Modernism is no new thing. Every generation has had to do this work and to re-adjust the past to the present. Circumstances have emphasised the movement in the present day, but in itself it is part of an age-long process.

So far to the credit of Modernism, which has in many ways been of inestimable service so the Christian faith, especially in the way in which it has made the Bible a real living book written by men like ourselves, men with strong personalities as well as keen convictions, and in the way in which it has enriched and deepened our comprehension and made God's Word more real and intelligible. But like all good movements Modernism has a tendency to run into wild excess, to drive its particular truths to death, and in a word to go the usual way of heresy which is generally not the promulgation of a falsehood so much as the disproportionate exaggeration of a truth.

There is a general tendency after Ritschl to transfer the proof of Christianity from history to psychology, to insist on the religious "value judgments" rather than on objective facts and to reduce the Christian Faith to a vague and unsubstantial if beautiful and attractive idea.

It is of course true that many of the articles of the Christian Faith cannot be explained in any real or full or adequate sense, as for instance the meaning of the Holy Trinity, or the manner of the atonement, or the method of the Ascension, simply because they are above our full human comprehension; but there are other facts such as the Virgin Birth, the Resurrection, and the fact of the Ascension, which do come within the possibility of human knowledge and experience, and these things are facts or not facts and the position of some modernists, that it does not matter whether they are true or not, is an utterly untenable one. It cannot be denied that some modernists have a tendency to regard Our Lord merely as one on whom the Spirit of God exceptionally rested, to depreciate the element of revelation in the Bible, and to try to explain away all that is not obvious to the knowledge and experience of the day. We believe that these tendencies are absolutely false in fact, as they will be temporary in vogue; but while we resolutely repudiate false extremes we must not be blind to the good work which has also been done. For a fuller discussion of the subject we refer our readers to an excellent article by Mr. Humphreys in a late English "Commonwealth," which has suggested these thoughts.

Sig. Murri.

The "Giornale d'Italia" of December 8th has a long report of an interesting speech in the Italian Parliament by Deputy Romolo Murri, well known as the original of Fogazzaro's Saint. Sig. Murri blamed the Government policy of ostentatious lack of interest in all questions of Church and State. The question of the seminarists for instance was a serious one, and they had a right to protection against being practically forced into religion whether they had a vocation or no. Then again the Government would not say whether or no religious congregations were or were not legal, but left the question indeterminate. A clear distinction ought to be drawn between the localised ecclesiastical system which won respect by its devotion to the teaching of faith, and religious communities composed of men isolated from the life of the country and inspired by a love of domination.

No State can or ought ever to dissociate itself from interest in religious problems, for it did not possess any institutions which supplied the needs of faith. The State should preserve religious neutrality without religious indifference.

We were delighted when his Excellency the Acting Administrator of Papua and his companion turned up at Thursday Island on Friday, March 17th, after being given up for lost in the N.W. of Papua. One of the most satisfactory facts in connection with their long and dangerous journey was that there was no conflict with the natives who treated the party with the greatest kindness giving them food and assistance in their distress. Mr. Staniforth Smith was present at the Cathedral on Sunday and special thanksgivings were offered for the safe return of the party.

Personal.

Rev. W. E. Godson, M.A., the new Rector of Port Darwin, arrived at Port Darwin at the beginning of January. Mr. Godson, who speaks the language, will undertake work among the Chinese in addition to his parochial duties.

Rev. F. T. Lane, Th. L., was ordained priest at All Souls Quetta Memorial Cathedral on Sunday morning, February 5th. He returned to Normanton on February 15th.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson was in charge of Cooktown during January and February, and left on his visitation tour of the Peninsula on March 1st.

Rev. Harold H. Ayseough, Th. L., left for Sydney on January 9th after four years of excellent work, on three years' leave for the purpose of obtaining his B.A. degree at Durham.

Rev. Leonard Ayseough, Th. L., was ordained priest by the Archbishop of Brisbane on St. Thomas's Day, and will come to work in this diocese in November next. He is at present curate at Laidley.

Rev. J. Jones, B.A., is kept very busy in his new work as organising secretary for S.P.G. in the diocese of Southwark, and is making the Diocese of Carpentaria well-known in London. His heart is still in Thursday Island.

Lieut. Miles, who left Thursday Island for Sydney on January 30th, will be much missed. As Churchwarden of the Cathedral Parish and in many other capacities he set a fine example.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, accompanied by Miss Tinny and Miss Hill, leave Melbourne for the Roper River Mission early in April.

Mr. Gerald Massy, a new student for this diocese, has come into residence at St. Francis College, Nundah.

Bishopric Endowment Fund.

News has been received that the Pan Anglican Committee, in accordance with a suggestion of the Australian Bishops, has assigned £3000 to the Diocese of Carpentaria, viz., £2500 for the increase of the Bishopric Endowment and £500 towards the formation of a Central Diocesan sustentation-Fund. The result will be practically an increase of about £120 a year in the diocesan funds, as the diocese has had hitherto to pay £120 a year towards the maintenance of the Bishop's house, and since the increase of the endowment will enable the Bishop to defray this amount himself, the sum will be set free for diocesan purposes, a much needed and most welcome reinforcement in these times of distress and depopulation. We are very grateful both to the Bench of Bishops and to the Pan-Anglican Committee for their thoughtful consideration for the needs of the far north.

On Monday, January 23rd, Right Rev. Chaplain the Bishop of Carpentaria gave a lecture to the men of the R.A.A. Battery at the Barracks on "East and West." Major Osborne on behalf of the Battery thanked the Bishop for a most able and deeply interesting lecture and said that the subject was one of the deepest and most pressing importance to all Australians.

Latest News.

We regret that owing to the printer being short handed, this issue is somewhat late, but it gives an opportunity to refer to our latest news. The Moa Island Mission has been visited with a severe epidemic of dysentery, and at the time of writing nearly half the community are in the hospital at Thursday Island. We are deeply grateful for the kindness with which they have been received and treated in the already overcrowded hospital. There have been three deaths at Moa, but none so far among those in hospital. Deaconess Buchanan returns by the Guthrie on April 13th. A beautiful memorial service was held in the Cathedral on Sunday, April 2nd, for those lost in the Yong-la. We sorrow especially for Mrs. Murray and her children, and feel profoundly for our former church warden Mr. Abi Murray in his sad loss. The Bishop leaves for Port Darwin, Roper and Borooloola by the St. Albans on April 21st and hopes to return to Thursday Island by the Mataram on June 11th. A special service will be held in the Cathedral at 10 a.m. on June 23rd the day of the King's Coronation.

To Australian Subscribers to the Diocese.

It appears from a letter received from a southern Missionary official that he is apprehensive that some persons in addition to those who clearly marked their contributions Mitchell River may have subscribed to the diocese of Carpentaria under the impression that they were subscribing to the Mitchell River Mission.

We do not think that this is so, but to avoid any confusion in the future we wish to state a few facts.

During the last three years, as our readers may see by comparing the balance sheet in this issue with those published in the April numbers of the Carpentarian for 1909 and 1910, there has been received from Australian subscribers for the Mitchell River £98 and for the diocese £420 14s 5d exclusive of three Easter offerings of £100 for the General work of the Diocese. The £98 was refunded to A.B.M. and in addition the diocese has expended on the Mitchell River Mission a sum of over £600 net and apart from all returns. Thus the diocese has expended on the Mitchell River Mission alone in addition to money given specially for the purpose about £180 more than it has received from all its general Australian subscribers for all and every purpose including its other Missionary work.

1. Mitchell River Mission.—At the request of A.B.M. Executive Council we are contributing this year £100 to the Mitchell River expenses in addition to all monies sent to us specially for Mitchell River.

2. Moa Island Mission.—This Mission cost us £180 in 1909, and £226 in 1910 in excess of the Government grant. Average about £200 a year.

3. Melanesian, Chinese, Japanese work.—This work though largely voluntary needs about £55 a year.

4. Grants to Parishes.—Workers absolutely necessary to maintain the services of the Church, about £360.

5. Working expenses of Diocese.—About

Hence we need every year about £350 for our coloured Missionary work, and £350 for the expenses of the Diocese exclusive of special funds for special objects.

Our church population is under 3000 and still decreasing, and it is absolutely impossible for our people to find this money themselves in view of the extreme poverty of most of the parishes.

It is only by the help of the whole church that we can possibly continue the ministrations of the church.

May we again repeat and make it quite clear that money sent to us "for Mitchell River", is returned to A.B.M. and not credited to us at all.

That other funds sent "for the Diocese of Carpentaria" are devoted, if given for Missionary work, to our share of the Mitchell River expenses, to Moa Mission, and to white mission work, and to General Diocesan expenses, unless they are earmarked for any particular purpose.

It must be remembered that the Diocese of Carpentaria has with New Guinea been declared by the Provincial Synod of Queensland "A Missionary Diocese" and that it is by that standard alone that our financial needs can be judged.

Visit to Macarthur and Roper Rivers.

I left Thursday Island on Saturday afternoon, April 22, in the fine new steamer St Albans. Miss White accompanied me as far as Port Darwin. After all the disastrous storms of the preceding month, we were rewarded with the most perfect weather. On Sunday morning, by the kindness of the Captain, we were enabled to have an early celebration of Holy Communion at which, in spite of the very short notice, several of the passengers were present, and at 11 a.m. we had a very bright and well attended service in the drawing-room. The evening was devoted to hymns and sacred music, bringing out a large amount of musical talent. On Monday afternoon we passed the wreck of the Australian, lying as if at anchor, about two miles from the shore. I could not look without sadness on the sad state of this beautiful ship in which I had so often travelled. One of our passengers had been on board at the time of the wreck five years ago, and gave us a vivid description.

We arrived at Port Darwin at 11 a.m. on Tuesday, and I found lying on the other side of the wharf the little s.s. Nelson, in which I was to continue my voyage. The contrast between the magnificent ocean liner and the little tub in which I was to embark on a voyage of over 1,500 miles was indeed startling. I found Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, Miss Hill, and Miss Tinney waiting at Port Darwin, and midnight on the following day we went on board our little steamer. Getting on board was no easy matter as the wharf was 30 feet above the level of the deck, and the only means of descent a shell-encrusted iron ladder. Besides ourselves there was a miscellaneous assortment of passengers consisting of two station men, an Indian hawker, and half-a-dozen aborigines. The only cabin was given up to the ladies, and the rest of us had to dispose ourselves and our belongings on deck and hope that we might neither meet with rain nor a heavy sea. The latter is, I fear, more a hope than a probability. We sailed at 2 a.m., and about sunrise met with a little choppy sea which showed us what our heavily laden boat was likely to do if we met with rough weather; but soon after we reached the Vernons and got for a while the shelter of the land; though the current was so strong that in three hours we only advanced four miles on our way. In the afternoon the wind died down a bit and we lumbered along fairly comfortably, though as we were down by the head she steered very badly. About 11 a.m. on Friday, 28, we entered Bowen Straits between Croker Island and the mainland. So far with light head winds we have been averaging under five miles an hour. What we shall do if we meet with a strong south-easter I do not know. At the south-east end of the Straits is a lonely house, but no one was visible. It is, I think, only used occasionally. A native canoe came off from Croker Island containing two men and two women. It was refreshing to see some life on these desolate coasts. We anchored for a couple of hours to shift some of the coal further aft, but are still too much by the head. We passed De Courcy Head, a fine cliff of red stone, soon after dark; and next morning were well out in the big bight making for Brown's Strait, 220 miles away, a two day's voyage for our lumbering craft which yaws about to every point of a quadrant in turn. The sea was lumpy and most of the passengers were again in various stages of mal-de-mer. As the lower deck is generally several inches deep in water it is a matter of skill and dodging to reach the cabin safely for meals. On Saturday night there was a sharp fall of rain, and one experienced the full discomfort of having no cabin in which to take refuge. To make us fully appreciate the advantages of moving ahead, even at four miles an hour, on Sunday morning something went wrong with the machinery, and for half-an-hour we rolled gunwale under in the trough of the sea. When the boat resumed merely her normal lumbering roll it seemed for a time quite a heavenly calm; but the ladies were too much upset to join in morning service, when we resumed our wallowing to windward at three knots an hour. In the afternoon the wind and sea went down as we neared the Wessel Islands, and our pace increased to over five knots. We came to the entrance of Brown's Straits about 6 p.m., and were able to enjoy our usual evensong on deck. Fortunately all the lady missionaries are good singers, so that we are able to have hymns in abundance. I gave a short address on the "Guiding Star," suggested by the extraordinary beauty of the starlight nights. Our Captain, who has a thorough knowledge of these little-known waters, ran on till midnight when we anchored and found ourselves in the morning in a little cove between two rocky islands, outliers of that beautiful group, the English Company's Islands. We thoroughly enjoyed the first calm night's rest, and were able in the morning to enjoy the sunrise among the islands, as with a light breeze only against us we ran between Astell and Cotton Islands and the north-east point of the mainland through the Malay Roads. The islands are of a considerable height, with red cliffs breaking here and there through the trees. Bosanquet Island is particularly striking, as it terminates to the east in a cliff composed of perpendicular blocks of stone, one of which stands like a stone pillar clear of the cliff. Altogether Malay Roads, as the passage is called, is a very beautiful place and has the great advantage of being completely sheltered from the south-east monsoon. We reached the narrow exit near Cape Wilberforce about 10 a.m., but the Captain would not face the sea that was running in our heavily laden and down-by-the-head condition, and turned round within a few hundred yards of the passage and went back several miles to anchor. Next morning found us still wearily lying at anchor as the wind showed no sign of taking off. Some more coal was shifted aft, but we are not in a condition to face even moderately heavy weather. After breakfast the mate got out the boat and rowed most of the passengers ashore on to a small island called Pobassoo Island. We found an aboriginal camp and a number of human bones in one of the little bark humpies. There were no signs of natives, however, that we could see. The red everlasting flower, so common about the Upper Roper River, grows plentifully; and there are a number of tamarind trees, probably planted by the Malays. We waited till next morning, when we made a fresh start, although it was still blowing pretty hard. We passed through a narrow channel between fine sandstone cliffs and found ourselves at last in the very much rolling waters of the Gulf. We passed Melville Island (not the Port Darwin Melville Island, but a small low Island off Mount Saunders) about 1.30 p.m., and though the sea was very rough three natives came off in a canoe to get some tobacco which the Captain threw overboard, lashed to a piece of wood. One of them jumped into the sea, paddle and all, and soon secured the prize. It was late in the afternoon before we reached Cape Arnhem, and were about to set our course for the south when we sighted a sail coming up from the south-east before the wind. I soon recognised the old John Ward, which Mr. Field was taking over to W. Australia, after leaving some cargo for us at the Mitchell River Mission. The Captain held on his course and we passed within a couple of hundred yards. I dropped overboard a letter and a telegram enclosed in my sponge bag which was in turn put in an empty cigar box and lashed to an old box. The action was at first not noticed though accompanied by hoots of our whistle, but everybody pointed astern and we soon had the satisfaction of seeing the boat jibe and pick up the box, when we gave a farewell hoot of thanks and turned south. Off Cape Arnheim our troubles began. There was a heavy sea running and the Nelson, no longer meeting it, rolled gunwale under in the most disconcerting fashion. We all had to hold on as best we could. The terrible rolling continued without cessation all night, and things were not very much better when day dawned after a weary and sleepless night. During the day the sea got heavier, though the wind continued light; evidently it had been blowing hard and the wisdom of our skipper in anchoring two days in the Straits was amply justified. In spite of the sails hoisted to steady her, our vessel rolled terrifically all day and all night; but fortunately, as it was no longer blowing, we did not ship more than the usual amount of water. During the day we coasted along Groote Eylandt, clearing the southern point just before dark. Another wretched night followed, but in the morning we were cheered by the sight of the Pellew Islands, and by a sensible diminution in the sea. After passing through the islands for about 20 miles we reached the mouth of the Macarthur River and ascended it for about twelve miles, to find a lugger and launch waiting for us. The lugger was loaded up with cargo; and at 9 o'clock the following morning we started up the river for Borooloola, which is about 37 miles from the highest point that the steamer can reach. The Macarthur River is very inferior to the Roper both in size and depth, and the country is flat and uninteresting. The missionary party accompanied me up the river, as the prospect of a week on the Nelson amid the mosquitoes of the river mouth was not encouraging. We had a pleasant trip up the river, though on three occasions we were only just able to scrape over rocky bars, and reached our destination, a rude wharf on the river bank, just at dark. A walk of half-a-mile brought us to the city of Borooloola, which consists of a large store, a well built and clean hotel, a police station, and Court House, and one other house, sole remnants of what was at one time quite a busy town. The country round is flat and uninteresting, though there are a few low hills in the distance.

The following day was Sunday, and Mr. S., in charge of the police station, kindly arranged the Court House for service. We had nearly every white man in Borooloola—there are no white women—both at morning and evening prayer; and thanks to the choir we brought with us, the services were most hearty and cheerful. So far as I could ascertain, it was the first service ever held in Borooloola. A number of natives were also present, both inside and outside the building. One of the white men remarked that it was the first time he had been to church for 26 years. Nothing could exceed the kindness and courtesy with which our party has been treated. On Monday afternoon I walked with Mr. T. to the top of a neighbouring hill, from which we got a good view of the country to the west; and on Monday morning and Tuesday I got some sketches of the river, which has some beautiful reaches above and below the township. We also visited the one other house, a garden about half-a-mile away. The natives here seem to be well fed and well treated to all appearances.

We left Borooloola at 3 p.m. on Wednesday, May 10, and it took us twelve hours to reach the Nelson. The night was bitterly cold and we were glad to sit round the boiler of the launch. When we did arrive we had to wait for the tide, and did not get away until after midday on Thursday. We cleared Pellew Islands about sunset and made good progress during the night before a strong S.S.E. wind, which increased in violence until we were glad to run in behind Maria Island for shelter, anchoring in fairly smooth water about 9.30 a.m. It is of course impossible to make the Roper with a gale blowing, so we are thankful to be at least in shelter till it is pleased to take off. The wind is bitterly cold and everyone was shivering. We left Maria Island at 9 a.m. the following morning and ran down to the Roper Bar in a couple of hours, but when we got within about half-a-mile of it the ship rolled till she dipped her boat in the water; and as it was madness to try to get in without any marks in such a sea, we spent three hours in getting back to Maria Island again, thoroughly sick of our inaction and slow progress. Sunday morning found us with the same weather and every appearance of its steady continuance. The captain is going to make another attempt to-day, as we cannot wait indefinitely. The suspense is very trying. We waited for high water and reached the bar about 1 p.m. It is a most hopeless place. Imagine a bight ten or twelve miles across, with the land almost out of sight. It is all filled with shallow pea-soup coloured water, and with the exception of one bluff there is no mark by which to take any bearings, nor any sign of beacon or buoy. The only way is a narrow channel which is not even straight, and utterly invisible. It is a terrible task to attempt. We anchored and sent in the boat with the mate who found the channel and put down a couple of buoys. We found the first, but failed to find the second, and ran aground. Fortunately we were able to back off again; but the tide was falling and nothing more could be done, and with unutterable weariness we steamed back for the third time to the shelter of Maria Island. Next morning, Monday, we were down again at the bar soon after 7 a.m. and the boat went out on another tour of inspection. This time, favoured by a beautifully calm day and clear water, we managed to get in and entered the mouth of the river about 1 p.m., after a voyage of nineteen days from Port Darwin. We went up for about 25 miles and then anchored for the night, leaving again at daylight on Tuesday, May 16. The river with its broad reaches was inexpressibly beautiful in the light of the early morning. Immense flocks of ducks whistled and wheeled overhead, and in the distance we could see the red cliffs of the ranges we were approaching, a welcome change from the monotony of the coastal salt-pans and dreary flats. About 11 a.m. we reached the Mission Station, which is situated on a bend of the river about 60 miles from the mouth and about a mile above Mount St. George, a hill about 400 feet high, crowned with low red cliffs. We were welcomed by Mr. Joynt, who has had an anxious time, having been alone for the last two months. A number of school children cleanly and tidily dressed also welcomed us at the landing; but most of the adults had been sent out into the bush to find food the previous day, as the steamer was late and the stock of food almost exhausted. We heard that the police at the Roper were in worse straits, having entirely used up all their stores. The mission buildings are good and well put together, though with scarcely enough precaution against white ants. The garden is not very extensive, but a number of banana and cassava trees seem to be doing well. A pump is urgently needed as all the water has to be carried up from the river. Mr. Joynt has shown much capacity and energy, and kept things going wonderfully well under very difficult circumstances. About thirty head of cattle have been recently purchased, and the station is well supplied with fresh milk. In the afternoon I walked up to the top of Mount St. George and got a splendid view of the country for thirty or forty miles inland. This hill is the centre of the reserve which extends 5 miles to the east and 5 miles to the west from this centre. The station is situated on a large flat extending some three miles inland, but elsewhere the ranges come close down to the river. I made a sketch of the country from the hill top, and returned to the station in time to enjoy a bath before tea, much enjoyed after the scarcity of water on the Nelson. In the evening prayers were held in the open air, as there is no sort of building yet for school or chapel. This is a need which urgently requires to be supplied. Most of the children were suffering from bad colds and coughs, and after prayers a spoonful of honey and vinegar was administered all round, reminding one of Dotheboys Hall, save that the mixture was much appreciated by the patients. Next day, Wednesday, I was busy writing all the morning, and afterwards made a sketch of the mission by request, to leave as a memorial of what it was in 1911. Later in the afternoon I walked down to the lagoon about a mile away, on the banks of which a few bananas and pineapples had been planted as an experiment. The water is permanent, though it shrinks greatly in the dry weather. It seems to me that we have as good a site for the mission as any to be found for a great distance round. A pump is needed for irrigation purposes, and with it there should be no difficulty in growing anything. At night I took the service for the natives, and afterwards that for the staff. Next day, Thursday, I inspected the school. The children have done well considering the very small amount of time that it has been possible to devote to teaching, but there is room for much improvement. Regular school work will be taken in hand at once by one of the ladies. I had a talk with some of the men who remembered my first coming with the Francis Pritt. Friday was entirely devoted to a Devotional Day for the members of the staff, and proved to be a very helpful and happy time; and while we were at breakfast on Saturday excited cries announced that the Nelson was in sight, coming down the river. She had a good deal of cargo to discharge, and it was not until noon that we made a start, and I waved farewell to the little band of missionaries who are undertaking so bravely and cheerfully what must be a difficult and trying work. Undoubtedly very real progress has been made since the mission was started three years ago, and with the enlarged staff and especially with women's work among the women and children we may look for still more marked progress in the future. Great credit is due to Mr. Joynt for the splendid way in which he has stuck to his post and kept everything going for the last few months, entirely alone. We got nearly down to the mouth of the river by midnight and anchored there, making a fresh start at daylight. We reached the bar about 8 a.m., but failed to find the channel and had to go back and anchor. It is blowing freshly and, of course, we are sheltered to a considerable extent by the bar; but I wish we were outside. Truly, the Nelson is a great teacher of patience. We lay inside all day and rolled about at night a good deal. Next morning, happily, we got out after a time of some anxiety, as the water was thick and a strong wind blowing, and set our course to the northward. I don't want ever to see the Roper Bar again until proper buoys and beacons are erected; and I am more thankful than ever that the Francis Pitt got in and out so many times in safety. It is a horrible place, and would be much worse but for the certain amount of shelter given by Maria Island. Monday, May 22nd, was a very bad day. Outside we found a fairly strong wind and a very heavy sea. It is perhaps as well that we did not get out the previous day; as soon as we got on our course we began a terrific rolling which made it impossible to sit or lie down with any comfort. With every extra big roll the bell gives a solemn toll suggestive of a funeral. Though I was not ill I confess to shirking dinner for the first time, and at tea I was the only passenger present. About 7 p.m. we got under the shelter of Groote Island, so that a few hours of rest and sleep were possible until 2 a.m., when we got into the open again and renewed our performance. The only consolation is that the wind is warmer and one does not suffer so much from the cold as for the last week or two at sea. On shore at the Roper it was quite warm, but it can be very cold there also. Fortunately we can use the sail, which helped to steady the vessel as well as to add a knot and a-half to our wonted speed. Off Cape Arnhem the sea was especially rough and more than one wave came on board, though being without cargo we were only too buoyant. After Cape Arnhem things were better, as wind and sea were right aft and the Nelson rose to the incredible speed of seven knots. This brought us soon after dark to Cape Wilberforce and the narrow opening into Malay Roads. The night was dark and cloudy, and it seemed difficult to hit it, but just in the nick of time the clouds lifted and Venus shed a ray of light almost like moonlight on the opening through which the tide was raising a turmoil of waters which looked anything but pleasant as we wallowed through it under the starlight. Once inside we made for our old friend, Pobasso's Island, and anchored until the moon rose. Next morning the wind was southerly and on our beam, with a light sea; but the Nelson seemed bent on proving that she could roll just as well with a light sea as a heavy one, and roll she did with the most maddening persistency. However, we had a fair wind and made good progress all day and the next night and day, reaching Bowen Straits on the evening of Ascension Day. I felt quite cheerful with the quick progress, and was moved to make what I flattered myself was rather a successful sketch of the ship until the mate coming up remarked sympathisingly, "Have you nothing at all left to read?" We had to go through the Straits in the dark, and next morning found us at dawn off Cape Don; but so strong was the current that an hour later we had been swept over towards Melville Island and had to alter our course completely to resist it. Reaching the Vernons between 4 and 5 in the afternoon, we found the tide still against us, and we did not reach Port Darwin until nearly midnight, having been exactly 30 days in making the trip, which is supposed to take only three weeks.

FROM THE "PETIT TEMPS" OF JUNE 21, 1904.

Two Japanese spies were arrested in Manchuria by Cossacks while endeavouring to blow up a railway bridge. They were asked their names. "Chiomo Yokoka, forty-four, colonel of the first grade, first class of the higher military school of Yeddo" replied the elder of the two prisoners, a short stout man with a vigorous head.

"Teishko Yokki, thirty-one, captain of the first grade" replied his companion, a taller man and more slightly made, with a sharp and bronzed face, which turned a rather contemptuous look on the bystanders. "Buddhist" he added after a slight pause. "And the colonel?" asked the president of the tribunal. "Is he of the same religion?" "No, sir, I am a Christian," and noting the astonishment produced by his declaration he hastened to add, "I am, however, a true Japanese, son of a Japanese, but in my youth I was attracted by the words of the Christ and converted to Lutheranism."

General Kuropatkin decided that the two prisoners should be shot. "Very well," replied the colonel, "I am ready."

The captain said nothing, but his more and more contemptuous look expressed his indifference for whatever fate was in store for him. Colonel Yokoka asked for permission to write to his family. "I die more calmly than you colonel," said the captain.

"Why?"

"I have done my duty to my country and to my God; you only to your country."

"What do you mean, captain?"

"Colonel, I have thought much of what you have told me of Christianity. You boast its superiority but I find you are not in accordance with Christ. I, however, have nothing to reproach myself with." "Perhaps, captain, you are right. But I have a favour to ask. Authorise me to accomplish the first truly Christian act that I have ever done in my life. You know that we have a packet of Chinese bank notes worth 1000 roubles. Well I want to give this money to the Commandant for him to give to the Russian Red Cross for the poor wounded of our enemies. Do you agree that we should make this gift?" Yokki reflected an instant and then consented.

When the Commandant came to visit the prisoners Colonel Yokoka gave him a packet of white notes with red markings.

"Here are about 1000 roubles which we beg you to hand over to the Russian Red Cross."

"But had you not better send this money to your families?"

"Oh, no," cried both the condemned men together, "the Mikado will not forget our wives and children."

"Do not refuse us this satisfaction," added Yokoka, "distribute the money to the Russian wounded."

The colonel desired to see a pastor before going to execution, but as there was none they sent him the regimental pope. The pope read in Russian and Yokoka followed him in his Japanese Bible. When he came to the verse, "If ye love them that love you what reward have ye; and if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others?" he shut the book, joined his hands, and lowered his eyes for a moment while his lips moved. "Yokki" he said, "you are right; you die with a calmer soul than mine; for I never felt more vividly how little my life has been in accordance with the teachings of Jesus Christ."

C.E.M.S.

To the Editor, "CARPENTARIAN."

Dear Sir—May I through the medium of this valuable paper, urge the necessity of doing something for the young men and lads in this diocese? We are doing all we can for the women and girls by forming branches of those admirable organisations, the Mothers' Union and Girls' Friendly Society; but as far as I can see or hear nothing is being done for the men and boys. Attempts have certainly been made to bring them together, only too often to fall through, "the last state being worse than the first." If I am wrong in this statement, I will gladly accept correction.

I believe this diocese of ours is the only one in Australia where the Church of England Men's Society has not a branch. The amount of good such a society does for the Church at large and parish is untold, provided it is carried out on the right lines and has the right sort of members, of which my short experience in this diocese has shown it has. It is quality we want, not quantity.

I shall be very happy to give anyone any information I can on this Men's Society, or better still, if application was made to the Organising Secretary of the C.E.M.S., Mr. R. Ruegg, Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane, I am sure he would be delighted to give all information required.—Yours sincerely

A. McD. Hassell,

Christ Church, Cooktown.

Unfortunately Easter Day here proved to be a pouring wet day. The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson came in from Laura to administer the Holy Communion, of which there were three Celebrations, at 6.30, 7.30 and 11 o'clock, fifty-four communicants receiving the Blessed Sacrament on that day—a slight improvement on last year. The Church was very nicely decorated by a party of ladies, flowers being so scarce the chief feature being ferns, which grow so luxuriantly in this part. The 11 o'clock service was choral, the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson preaching.

During Holy Week, Evensong was said daily at 7.30 p.m., with short addresses on the Seven Words from the Cross. The offertory during the week was devoted to the Australian Board of Missions, and totalled £4 15s. 8d. The Sunday School having collected £2 11s. 9d. for this purpose, enabled us to send a cheque for £7 7s. 5d. to be devoted to this great cause.

The Mothers' Union and Girls' Friendly Society meet at the Rectory monthly, a great amount of interest being taken in both.

On Easter Monday the G.F.S. had arranged to have a picnic, but as the day turned out so wet, the Rectory was thrown open to them, where (if we may judge from the noise which proceeded from its walls) a very enjoyable time was spent. They assembled soon after 3 in the afternoon, and at 6 o'clock all came in to the church for Evensong, afterwards returning to the Rectory until 9.30 p.m.

We are all anxiously awaiting to hear some news of a Rector, and can assure him of a very warm and hearty welcome.

The Coronation.

Some people are inclined to think that Kings are out of date, or that they are inconsistent with the enlightenment of a modern democracy, but there is in reality little ground for either belief.

The word King was originally Kining—i.e., "Son of the tribe (kin)," one who was truly a representative of the tribe and chosen by it as such. Gradually several thoughts grew up round the name of King. First came the idea of heredity; just as the King represented the tribe most fully, so his son was par excellence "the son of the tribe," and the most fit person under ordinary circumstances to succeed his father. Secondly, the King came to be regarded as a representative of the tribe before God as well as before men; hence the anointing and the priestly garments in which the King is still clad at his coronation, or as it used more fitly to be called, his consecration. Thirdly, the King became, as the representative of the tribe towards God and man, invested with a mysterious power and sanctity above and apart from his personal character.

It is obvious that all these things are capable of grievous abuse, and have as a matter of fact been in all ages so abused. The principle of heredity, if unchecked, may place a knave or a fool in the highest office of State; the doctrine of divine right may lead to gross spiritual tyranny and a deadly Erastianism, while the royal prerogative may be pushed to extremes in which it is utterly inconsistent with personal liberty and popular rights. In the case of a carefully regulated constitutional monarchy like our own the dangers are small and the benefits great. The hereditary system secures that the ruler will be no novice, but one trained from his earliest youth for the high office which he is to fill; while it saves the country from furious struggles for presidential office. The fact that the King represents the nation towards God, which is so fully brought out by the coronation service, emphasises the much-needed truth that the nation has a national duty towards God as well as a national duty towards its neighbour; while the royal prerogative has come to be a prerogative not of selfish enjoyment or cruel tyranny, but a prerogative of work and duty and untiring devotion to the interests of the nation. The late King was, like his predecessor, a real "son of the tribe," truly representative of national life and feeling; and we believe that George V. is even more truly a "son of the tribe" than his father. We look forward with trust and hopefulness to the future, and all pray that when the burden of the Crown is laid upon the King's head, the blessing of God may go with it to give power to bear and to endure to a great and noble end.

We call the attention of our readers to the appeal on behalf of the Mossman and Port Douglas Cyclone Church Restoration Fund, contained in our supplement. He gives twice that gives quickly, and it is important to know as soon as possible what can be counted on. At the time of writing £145 have been received and we need at the very least £500

The Mothers' Union.

By THE BISHOP.

The Mothers' Union has been established for some years in one of our eight parishes, and has done most excellent work. It has recently been started in a second parish, and it is earnestly to be hoped that it will be eventually found in every parish in the diocese, for it is doubtful if any organisation has greater possibilities for good.

It should be distinctly understood that the Mothers' Union is essentially a lay movement. Although the consent of the rector of the parish is required for the starting of a parochial branch, and although his sympathy and assistance are always to be sought and are of great value to the Union, yet it was never intended to be something "run" by the rector. It is intended to be organised and worked by the mothers themselves; all the impetus and sustaining power should come from them, save for a quarterly service in church at which the parish priest may give counsel and encouragement. Otherwise he is not present at the meetings, which are presided over by the president of the local branch.

It is not necessary to dwell on the enormous power possessed by mothers if they will but use it, especially during those earliest years when the child's character is absolutely in the mother's hands to make or to mar. Unhappily, it is these years that young mothers through ignorance and inexperience most often misuse or neglect. The Mothers' Union gives an opportunity to older mothers to help the less experienced in an impersonal way, and without that assumption of superior knowledge which is so irritating to the young. It also gives an opportunity for mothers to express their views collectively, and so to exercise a very powerful influence in directing and moulding public opinion.

The objects of the Mothers' Union are three in number:

1. To uphold the sanctity of marriage. That there is great need indeed for work in this matter few will dare to deny.

Not so long ago the Chief Justice of Victoria, Sir John Madden, drew an appalling indictment of the immorality of our Australian boys and girls, an indictment the truth of which no one has ventured to deny. It is heartbreaking to see the way in which boys and girls are allowed to wander about in the streets to all hours of the night without any attempt at control on the part of their parents. The result is that marriage is degraded from the very start. One of my clergy informs me that out of eleven marriages which he celebrated in twelve months nine were marriages of necessity. When married life begins under these conditions, which mean that the wife has no confidence in the husband who has betrayed her, and the husband no trust in the honour of his wife whose moral weakness he has such reason to know, we cannot wonder that married life is often a ghastly failure, or that married folk often fall into those yet darker sins which are the disgrace of our age and country. Here lies ample work for the Mothers' Union, in upholding the sanctity of marriage and endeavouring by warning and remonstrance, to mould public opinion, and by refusing to condone offences, setting a good example in regard to all those with whom they personally have to do.

2. The second object of the Mothers' Union is to awaken in mothers a sense of their great responsibility as mothers in the training of their boys and girls. At present the sense of parental responsibility is deplorably low. Thousands of parents seem to think that it consists simply in providing food and clothing and sending them to school when they are not too urgently needed at home. Now, the State School teacher does not profess to do more than train the children's minds. He has no time to teach other moral virtues than those of order and obedience, which are necessary to enable him to do his proper work. It is no part of his work, or it has in the past been no part of his work, to teach honesty, truthfulness, gentleness, kindness, unselfishness, purity. We may, indeed, gratefully acknowledge the enormous moral influence for good that many teachers are exercising upon the children, but this is not a primary and direct part of their duty, and cannot take the place of the teaching and influence which should belong to the parents. Parents will have to answer to God for the use they have made of the opportunities given them of influencing their children, and they cannot shift the responsibility on to anyone else in the world. Schoolmaster and parish priest may help and co-operate, but they cannot relieve the parents of the responsibility which belongs to them alone. Especially is this true of the first four years of life, when the child is entirely in the mother's hand, and when the mother can make of it practically whatever she likes. It is during the first three or four years that the child's character is practically formed for life; when the child begins to go to school it is already too late to radically alter it. The mother has already made or marred the child.

3. The third object of the Mothers' Union is to organise in every place a band of mothers who will unite in prayer, and seek by their own example to lead their families in purity and holiness of life.

As Christians we believe that nothing can be really well and satisfactorily accomplished without prayer. Prayer is a condition that God attaches to our desire for His help. If we want a thing done we must ask Him to help us to do it. If we want a heart softened and inclined to the right, we must pray Him to soften it. If we want a weak will braced and strengthened, we must pray to Him to strengthen it. We have our Lord's promise that when two or three agree together to ask something of God in Christ's name that it shall be done. Here is an object and explanation of a mothers' meeting. A few mothers feel their own responsibility, and desire help to do their duty better; they grieve over the sins and ignorances of those around them, and they desire to help them to better things. What more natural than that they should meet to pray for what concerns them as mothers, for their children, for the children of their town, for the homes of their country? They see much evil and they know of no sufficient power in themselves to remedy it, so they meet to pray to Him Who has the power.

A few practical suggestions may be added. Meetings may be held monthly. Of these, the first in each quarter may consist of a service in church with an address from the rector of the parish, or the reading of an address given at a Mothers' Union service. New members may be finally admitted at this service. The remaining eight meetings will be of members only.

The time will be partly occupied by business, suggestion of new members, communications from the diocesan or provincial headquarters, questions of conduct, references to local matters or conditions. A paper may then be read by one of the members, or communicated by a member of another branch, and a discussion will ensue. Arrangements will be made for the obtaining and distribution of Mothers' Union literature. "Mothers in Council" is an excellent quarterly. A few copies may be ordered and circulated among the members. Especial efforts should be made to induce young mothers to join. From time to time it may be necessary to take some formal action with regard to public matters. Any proposed legislation affecting the home or the children should be watched, reported on and, if necessary, approved or objected to. There will be plenty to do if the members take the work seriously, and remember that the Mothers' Union is a practical society for helping forward the Kingdom of Christ and for the preservation of home and country.

The Cyclone at Mossman.

On March 16th, Port Douglas and Mossman were visited by a most disastrous cyclone. Our churches in both places were utterly destroyed, and also the little church at Mount Molloy. In addition the small rectory at Port Douglas and the hall erected by Rev. E. Taffs next to the church were completely ruined. Houses and buildings were blown down in every direction, and great damage was done to the cane, especially as the cyclone was followed a fortnight later by a great flood which washed away the remains of the buildings. In three days the continuous downpour of rain amounted to 59 inches 35 points, the total downfall for January, February and March amounting to over 124 inches. The church buildings destroyed cost over £1000, and it will take at the least £600 to re-erect them in the simplest possible fashion. The following letter from the Rector to the Bishop will give a clear account of the losses sustained. Either the Bishop or Rev. E. Taffs will gladly receive any subscriptions towards rebuilding the churches, of which the Mossman church is the most pressing:—

"Rectory, Mossman, North Queensland,
4th April, 1911.

My Lord.

The cyclone was a very terrible one and did great damage to Port Douglas and Mossman. Port Douglas is nearly altogether blown down. Both the Roman Catholic and the Church of England churches were demolished, as well as the Roman Catholic Presbytery and the cottage which belonged to the Diocese. At Mossman the damage to private buildings and hells has been almost repaired. The hammers were sounding all about the place and continued until last Wednesday. At Mossman our Church and the Roman Catholic Church were blown down and broken up. Some parts of our church and my hall were blown more than 100 yards away. Our church was blown away about 7.30 p.m. The Roman Catholic Church began to go at 4.30 p.m. and was utterly demolished by 6 p.m. The wonderful escapes and various marvellous incidents in connection with the cyclone are too numerous to tell. There will no doubt be full accounts of it in the newspapers. The flood which came up with it was a high one. It came all around the rectory and stretched away over the floor of the church and over the road right up to the township. Four windows of the rectory were blown in, and I nailed sacks over the openings to keep the wind from getting into the house. We were afraid the French lights in the front would blow in. The shrubs and creepers on the screen for a time kept the wind from getting under the floor and lifting it off the blocks. The trees all around were stripped of their leaves and the bark of some kinds of trees was peeled from them. It was a curious sight to see on the way to Port Douglas some miles of trees without leaves and entirely stripped of the outer bark. The forest was all of reddish-white colour and the hills were quite bare. The cyclone has been totally eclipsed and put into the background by the flood which started on Wednesday last (March 29th). The rain came down in torrents continuously night and day without intermission from Wednesday afternoon until Monday morning. We have had a few hours of rest from the roar of the rain on the iron since Monday. It is raining now. On Thursday night the flood rose to a greater height than has ever been known before. It came to within a foot and a-half of the floor of the verandah of the rectory. On Friday morning our neighbours came on a raft and landed on our verandah. They stayed all day and night and went away again on Saturday. There have been no trams to and from Port Douglas since last Wednesday. The loss through the flood is much worse than that of the cyclone. I forgot to mention that the cyclone caused about £5,000 worth of damage to the sugar mill. The farmers have been terribly struck with the cyclone and the flood. The weather shows no signs of changing. The hills around are quite hidden with the mist. The water stretched from the township right away to Mr. R. O. Jones's house. I obtained a carpenter and a labourer and the re-erection of the hall was begun on Monday, March 27th. They got the floor into position and put up the sides by Wednesday night. In the meantime I had stacked the timber after removing the nails, had packed the remains of the church furniture together and covered them with sailcloth. During the flood the floor of the hall floated away and the walls were all twisted and torn out of shape, so it will have to be pulled to pieces and re-built. The timber and furniture floated away. A carpenter and man are at present re-erecting the picket fence which was blown down, the posts snapping off at the ground. My garden is a total wreck. The heavy flower-stand on the verandah was taken up and hurled right away. The bell-tower fell on the verandah. When the carpenter and man have finished the fence they will go on breaking up the church and stacking the timber. The iron is worthless. We have not yet decided what to do with regard to the re-erection of the church. I would wish them to build and entirely finish off the ceiling, lining, painting outside and inside, a chancel and a portion of a nave which could be enlarged when required and when funds were available. Port Douglas would not require a large church, such as the one blown down, for there are extremely few church people left in the place. The women behaved generally well and were courageous and bright. Mr. Barnard's house was unroofed, and Mr. Welchman's house and office had the side and roof blown away and his effects damaged with rain. Mr. I. has lost over £1000. All have lost much, either in the house or the cane. As it will be extremely hard under the circumstances to collect much in the district, is it possible, my Lord, for you to get any help for us from south or elsewhere, so as to give us a start again? But for this cyclone we should have been in a good position at the start of this financial year, for we have no debts now except the small overdraft at the bank. I hope you received the post cards safely. A photo of the Port Douglas church was unobtainable at the time. I hope to send one later on.

I remain, my Lord, Your obedient servant,
EDWARD TAFFS"

Darwin.

It is not often that we are privileged to have our Bishop amongst us at this distant part of the Diocese, situated as we are some 700 miles by sea from Thursday Island. His Lordship's visits are therefore all the more welcome. Darwin, however, has not monopolised much of the time spent on the visit. Although the Bishop landed on April 26, and left us June 5, only five full days were spent in Darwin itself.

He arrived with Miss White on April 25, and the following evening embarked on the little coasting steamer Nelson with the Roper River mission party for Borroolool and Roper Mission. Owing to rough weather and insufficient lighting of the coast the three weeks' trip there and back extended to a little over four weeks. It had been arranged for his Lordship to go to Pine Creek on Friday, May 26; but the boat arriving too late, it was impossible to go down until the following Tuesday. The journey is 150 miles each way. Arrived there, Mr and Mrs Tamblin provided hospitality. Service was held in the evening at which the Bishop confirmed five candidates. After the Confirmation service the Bishop presided at a meeting of the Church Council, when Church officers were elected for the year and plans for building a church were discussed.

We left Pine Creek the following morning for Darwin, the train journey occupying 8½ hours. The afternoons of the three following days were spent in visiting the people.

On Sunday, June 4, ten candidates were confirmed, 5 males and 5 females, at the Morning Service. In the evening, in addition to preaching, the Bishop instituted the Rev. W. E. Godson as Rector of the parish. The services at Pine Creek and Darwin were well attended. His Lordship spoke with great clearness and force, taking as his subjects the questions, "Where do I come from?" and "Whither am I going?" He spoke of the need for renunciation of the world, the flesh and the devil, quoting Bishops Gore's definition of worldliness as being "Society as organized apart from God," and describing the flesh as shown in drunkenness and impurity. In the evening he dwelt especially upon our need of the Holy Spirit's help in fighting against spiritual foes and building up a strong, holy character. Miss White spent the whole of her visit in Darwin as guest of Mrs. Mitchell at the Residency; and during her stay was busy visiting the people and organising work in connection with the G.F.S.

The Bishop and Miss White left for Thursday Island on June 5, after spending what has been to us a most helpful and encouraging visit.

Visit to Moa.

By the Bishop.

I left Thursday Island on Tuesday, March 14, on the mission cutter Banzai, and after an uneventful run of five and a-half hours arrived at Moa about 4 p.m., and was welcomed by Mr. Jasper Harvey, Acting Superintendent in the absence of Deaconess Buchanan, the school children, and a number of men and women. After a cup of tea I set out with Mr. Harvey to inspect the swamp behind the village, and to consider the possibility of draining it, as it is a great harbour for mosquitoes. We also considered the question of bridging the stream on the way to the cemetery. Since my last visit all the beautiful green cocoanuts which line the village street have their leaves withered and dead owing to a small hispid beetle, Brontiopa frogatti, which has lately appeared and is supposed to have been introduced from New Guinea. It has not previously been known in Australia or, apparently, in New Guinea, but is very destructive in New Britain and the Solomon Islands.

The beetle is yellow and black, shaped something like a white ant, and about a third of an inch in length. It lays small yellow eggs which develop into yellow grubs somewhat larger than the beetle. Both grubs and beetles are found in hundreds in the folds of the young leaves, which they eat, leaving only the main ribs of the leaf. It is difficult to find a remedy, as the folds are too close to be effectively sprayed. Mr. Harvey has sent specimens to the Government entomologist.

Mr. Harvey has been very busy helping the people with advice as to their gardens and planting specimens of new trees and vegetables.

In the evening we had service, and I gave a preliminary address as preparation for Holy Communion. Before breakfast on Wednesday the people gathered for Morning Prayer, consisting of two hymns and the Litany. I felt that we who are accustomed to it do not realise what a grand and complete service the Litany is, with a few local additions, when it is said slowly by people to whom it has not become staled by use.

The morning was spent in school, and in the afternoon the school was given a holiday; and Mr. H. and I, accompanied by a number of the boys, climbed one of the hills behind the village. The view from the summit was most magnificent. To the south was the long line of Prince of Wales, with Thursday Island and its surrounding islands, the mainland from Peak Point to Cape York, Albany and Mount Adolphus Islands, between which the Quetta was lost. Further to the west the sharp conical peak of Naghir, Yam, and Burke Islands; then to the north the peak of Douan, on the New Guinea coast. The further view to the north was shut off by Moa Peak, to the left of which was the wooded centre of the island backed by a silver streak, on the farther side of which rose the hills of Badu and the roofs of the Papuan Industries settlement. Farther round again to the west could be seen the long ridge of Hawkesbury Island, leading the eye again to Prince of Wales on the south. Truly a most wonderful panorama of some thirty or forty islands comprised within a radius of fifty miles in every direction save where Moa Peak rose above us, with the brown roofs of St. Paul's Mission under our feet between the peak and the sea. We descended by another spur, passed a creek where an alligator of exceptional size is supposed to lurk, and reached Cocconut Point where a South Sea man from Murray Island has just built a house, and to which point Mr. H. had thoughtfully sent tea and biscuits to refresh us after our climb. We got back in time to attend a meeting of the men of the community at 5 p.m. Two important subjects were discussed; first, the language question. We endeavour to get the children to speak English as it makes an enormous difference to the boys when they go out to work on boats or whenever they are away from the settlement whether they can speak English fluently or not, as in the former case they are able to take care of themselves and avoid being imposed upon in a way that is impossible in the latter. The parents recognise this and are anxious for their children to learn English. At the same time they set the example of conversing with one another in a local dialect which largely counteracts all the efforts of the teacher. There are stringent regulations against using this language, and some of the parents wanted the stringency of these rules relaxed. The other was the question of visitors. At present the rules are very strict as to the small number of visitors from another island to be allowed to stay at Moa at one time, and it was hoped that this rule also might be more liberally interpreted. The men are learning to speak well and clearly and are not incapable of seeing that there is another point of view besides their own. It was resolved to make a bridge over the creek, but it was generally thought that the matter of draining the swamp was too big to be undertaken at present. The meeting lasted till dark and we had only just time for tea and a short visit to one or two sick before Evening Service, which was most hearty. The very appropriate anthem "How beautiful upon the Mountains" was extremely well sung. I gave a concluding preparatory address on the Holy Communion, and service had only been over a short while when a loud wailing proclaimed the death of a little baby which we had seen very sick the previous evening.

After service a man came to me to confess with penitence an act of wrong-doing which would I fear have sat very lightly on the minds of many white people, and it was characteristic that his conscience had almost immediately led him to throw away any personal advantage he might have got from his act. A penance in the way of restoration was gladly accepted. At 7.15 a.m. we had a most reverent celebration of Holy Communion the men considerably predominating over the women, and I was asked to delay my departure in order to take the funeral of the little child, which I gladly consented to do, and nearly all the community followed the little coffin to the beautiful graveyard on a little bay half a mile away. Then at last we got away and had a good run in, in spite of the excitement of being carried by the tide on to a reef, on which fortunately we found enough water to sail off again with a few slight bumps which did no damage, as there was happily no sea running.

A Religious Festival in Greece.

By Miss A. C. WHITE.

Yesterday was a great Feast Day here, and in the evening I went out to see a procession and some fireworks, which last are almost inseparable from "religious" festivals in Greece. It was the Octave of the Assumption, and is more observed here by the people than the Assumption itself. After dinner I went off, at a quarter to nine to meet Miss R. I found her and we waited at a corner to see the procession pass. By chance we were just at a spot where a streamlet runs across the road, and they had not thought of diverting it just for the evening. By-and-bye we saw in the distance a glare of red light, and the procession arrived headed by two men with bundles of sky-rockets, of which they let off one every time it halted for prayers or turned a corner. There was a band of little orphanage boys who played vigorously; then a cross and banners; then about four men singing through their noses; then six priests with their tube hats who carried a much venerated picture from one of the churches; then an escort of six soldiers. All was illuminated by coloured Bengal fires, and the skipping over the stream was very quaint and quite disorderly. When all had passed we went to the centre of Kephissia, where the procession would return to after its round, and fireworks would begin. At this spot several shaded roads converge, and there is a space, bordered by shops and cafés, known as "to platanos," by reason of the huge plane tree in the centre of it. Here was a very motley throng. There were peasants in costume; ladies and would-be ladies up from Athens, in huge hats and restricted skirts, with attendant cavaliers; and many hundreds of what is here called "the people," with several dozen small babies in arms, not to mention crowds of bigger children. All were sitting before coffee-cups at little tables or parading about and chatting; four or five gramophones were playing. When the procession arrived it made a very weird scene. It halted under the big plane, and the red and green lights flared up into the branches which were hung with gaudy flags. Those nearest the route crowded close to see and climbed up on to tables and chairs. The priest in charge was chanting litanies very much through his nose, and the choir of four responding "Kyrie elieson," while behind us the gramophones ground out comic songs and the throng chatted and laughed. At short intervals rockets went flying into the air, and the devout who were crossing themselves paused to see them burst. No effort of memory would bring home to me that all this was a religious festival. It seemed we must have gone far East and be watching some Buddhist or Brahmin rite. You can say that a procession in England passes through scenes as incongruous, but on this occasion all the gaiety was considered part of the feast, and the Greeks call themselves a nation of all believers; and not one would have been there except recognizing the occasion. Then the picture went back into its church, and the fireworks began out in a waste piece of ground. They were rather good and, of course, the noisiest obtainable. So everyone went home happy.

Our Missions.

MITCHELL RIVER.—Mr. Matthews has been spending a month's furlough in Thursday Island as the guest of the Subdean. Mr. Cole is acting as Superintendent during his absence. Mr. Matthews reports all well, and a good outlook for the corn this year. A number of natives are being prepared for baptism on the occasion of the Bishop's visit in August. Most of the £50 required for the roof of the church is now in view, and it is hoped that the building will soon be completed. The building of the new Francis Pritt will be put in hand immediately, when we hope to have a vessel that will easily enter the Trubananman River.

ROPER RIVER.—We give elsewhere a full account of the Bishop's visit to the Mission.

ST. PAUL'S MISSION, MOA.—Dysentery still lingers on, and the Mission is but slowly recovering from the disorganisation caused by the epidemic earlier in the year with its many deaths and long debilitating illnesses. Deaconess Buchanan has returned and is hard at work. The Mission is looking forward to a visit from Canon and Mrs. Pattinson next month. Much disappointment was felt that the Home Secretary on his recent visit north found it too rough to land at Moa.

The Secretary of the Carpentarian begs to acknowledge with thanks the following subscriptions:—Mr. W. M. Hill, 6s; per Rev. F. Lane, £1 4s; Mr. Hindmarsh, 2s 6d; Messrs. Tuesday, Beryholtz, and McCloskey, 2s each; Mesdames Robeson, Schenke and Huband Smith, 2s each; Deaconess Buchanan, 2s; per Miss Paige, 16s.

The Coronation Service.

The services for the Coronation of the King bears a strong resemblance to that for the consecration of a Bishop, not only in general structure but also in their respective details. Like the Bishop, the King is presented to the people for their acceptance: like the Bishop he is publicly interrogated as to his willingness faithfully to fulfil the duties of the high office to which he has been appointed: like the Bishop, he takes a public oath that he will be faithful to the obligations of his position: like the Bishop he is vested with the robes of his office and presented with the symbols of his authority. In the case of Bishops, this last ceremony, has since the Reformation been reduced to very scant and insignificant proportions, but till the middle of the sixteenth century, English Bishops were publicly vested with their mitres, and presented with a pastoral staff and an episcopal ring as part of the ceremonial of their consecration. The robes with which the King is vested are all ecclesiastical in origin, and are in fact the same robes as those which a mediæval Bishop wore. There is the "Colobium sindonis" or Alb., which is part of the proper vestments of a Priest in celebrating the Holy Communion down to this day: there is the Supertunica, or Dalmatic, another Eucharistic vestment, the Stole (called in the Coronation Service the "Armilla"), and finally there is the "Pallium Regale," which is nothing more or less than a Cope, such as forms part of the ordinary dress of a Bishop, and will, of course, be worn by all Bishops taking part in the Coronation service.

Every part of the ceremonial thus conspires to shew that the Coronation is not a political ceremony but an ecclesiastical one: it is conferring by the Church upon the King, who is a "minister of God" of his "gifts for ministry."—Brisbane Church Chronicle.

New Rector of Cooktown.

Rev. James Henry Brown has been appointed Rector of Cooktown. Mr. Brown, who is a married man with two children, was ordained priest in 1906, and was Rector of Guyon, in the diocese of Montreal, but had to leave Canada on account of the cold. He left Liverpool in the White Star Afric on June 1st, and is expected to arrive in Cooktown on August 1. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brown have had experience of colonial life, and we wish them every happiness and success in their work at Cooktown.

Rev. J. Jones.

Mr. Jones is hard at work in England and ever bringing Carpentaria to the fore in his work for S.P.G. In a recent letter to the Bishop (April 27) he says:—"A year has elapsed since I looked last on Australian soil, it seems but yesterday, and my interests are as much in the north as they were the day I left. We hunger for news of you all and love to see you all at Bishop's House—the scene of so many happy hours and comradeship so good and helpful. The Island also is much in our thoughts, and we pray that the outbreak of dysentery has been stayed. I fear you have all had a most anxious time. The Carpentaria meeting is to be on May 27, I am coming down from Wales specially for it. Afterwards I am going to Dublin and to Hereford for S.P.G. The wife and children have been ill, down with bad colds, but are slowly improving."

Notes.

The building of the new Francis Pritt will be put in hand at once. The new boat will be somewhat smaller and of considerably less draft than the old and will be built specially with a view to the work of the Mitchell River Mission.

We have to regret most sincerely the departure of Mr. A. S. Wells from the diocese, though we are glad that he has obtained the promotion he has so long deserved. Ever since the diocese was formed Mr. Wells has been a faithful and diligent worker for the Church. At Burketown, Cooktown and Thursday Island he has done all in his power by example and precept to uphold the work of the Church, and as Churchwarden and member of the Diocesan Council, has rendered most valuable service. It ought we suppose to be a source of gratification to us that we are so often sending good workers to help in southern dioceses but we are afraid that the sense that we are thus indirectly benefitting the Church at large does not reconcile us to the losses we suffer.

A branch of the G.F.S. has been started at Darwin where Mr. Godson has a flourishing branch of the Boy Scouts. We are very glad to see these efforts for our young people.

Canon and Mrs. Pattinson hope to visit Thursday Island. They will arrive on July 11th and go over on the following day to Moa. They will return for the Sunday and Canon Pattinson will preach at the Cathedral.

We regret to have to record the death of the Bishop of Bathurst, Dr Camidge, the Senior Bishop of the Australian Church. He died like the late Archbishop of Sydney, literally at his post. He was just starting on a bush visitation and giving parting directions to his chaplain when he fell back dead. He rendered real service to the Church not only in his own large diocese but as acting Primate during the vacancy in that office.

Our sincerest sympathy goes out to the Bishop of New Guinea in the serious losses he has sustained by the furious cyclone in March last. We as fellow sufferers know only too well what it means. The story of the noble devotion shown by Edric Taboige who sent his companion ashore and took the launch out to his death in the teeth of the storm reflects infinite credit on the training of the mission boys. He was confirmed only last November.

We are glad to note the great increase of the income of the A.B.M. for last year. The ordinary income has jumped from £4,995 to £8,661, and nearly £4,000 more was given for special objects. We earnestly hope that the increase will be maintained and continued. The Board needs an ordinary income of at least £12,000.

The official programme for the Coronation Celebration at Thursday Island began with a service at the Cathedral, and the Bishop gave an address to the assembled citizens at the parade and saluting of the flag at noon.

Archbishop's Visitation

Last year the Bishop invited the Archbishop of Brisbane, without prejudice to any question of precedent or inherent metropolitical powers (as these matters have yet to be investigated and defined by the Provincial Synod), to hold an informal visitation of the diocese as Archbishop, and to send visitation questions to the clergy through the Bishop. The Archbishop was kind enough to accept the task, and we subjoin his report, which will be of great interest to all who have the welfare of the diocese at heart:—

"Bishopshourne, Brisbane,

June 21st, 1911.

My dear Bishop,—I owe you my apologies for delaying so long my comments upon visitation returns with which you have been good enough to furnish me. I have studied these returns with the greatest interest and may I say at once that they represent in my opinion a very gallant attempt to cope with very great and almost paralysing difficulties.

The problems of the extreme north of our continent are from several points of view most serious. From our own Church point of view they seem at some points insoluble. The difficulties all seem to centre round the one word "population," and the steady fall, shown by the census returns, in all your townships cannot fail to constitute a difficult and depressing Church problem which ought to appeal to the sympathy of the Church at large. I have not the last census figures before me, but looking at your returns, the following figures speak for themselves:—The population of Cooktown is 900, ten years ago it was 1,500; Croydon numbers 1,462, ten years ago 3,245; Normanston numbers 750, ten years ago 1,200; Palmerston numbers 600 whites and 1000 Chinese, ten years ago 800 whites and 2,000 Chinese. Everywhere the population seems to be steadily diminishing, and this fact undoubtedly constitutes in itself, everywhere, an element of discouragement and depression.

Closely connected with this is the difficulty in raising stipends. In secular pursuits, workers who go to outlying regions, or trying climates, or difficult tasks, expect stipends increased in proportion to the special circumstances; but with the clergy in the Diocese of Carpentaria the case is different: the more difficult the conditions, the smaller the stipend. With the exception of Thursday Island, I notice that only one parish is able to raise a stipend of £200 a year, and even here there is no house. The parishes offer £150 and a house, and so on down the scale.

The third difficulty, closely connected again with sparse population, is the isolation from which the clergy suffer. In answer to my question about special difficulties there is a pathetic monotony in the words of the clergy. I note:—"Want of spiritual sympathy"; a deacon complains of the want of "More frequent Celebrations"; "the loneliness in spiritual things," "isolation and loneliness." All reports tell the same tale of a sparse population scattered over huge areas as the flock to which these few shepherds minister. One thinks of the Apostolic plan of sending men out two and two; but at present I recognise that you have not sufficient men for this, and we further have to recognise the prohibitive cost of travelling in these outlying districts.

In the face of these difficulties we are prepared to find that the statistics (so far as they tell anything) are not very satisfactory. The communicant rolls are not large, though in one town of 900 people there are 100. It seems difficult in many places to secure Church workers, and I should doubt from the numbers given whether half the children of school age ever attend Sunday school.

But statistics clearly do not represent all the facts. The influence of the Church, beyond question, is a living force, even though in the prevailing depression its work is especially hard. Of the energy and self-devotion of the clergy I desire to speak in the highest terms. Isolated, unsupported—almost, it might seem, forgotten, these few lonely priests are bearing up the pillars of the Church at the cost of a terrible strain upon their own lives.

It is difficult indeed to make suggestions which would be helpful, but in two directions it seems worth while to offer remarks:—

(I) In recruiting clergy the field of choice is very much restricted by the smallness of the incomes offered. Only young unmarried men could be expected to take such work in these circumstances, and yet on the other hand some weight and experience of life is highly desirable in the clergy to be employed in this diocese. I am thankful to hear that you have established a Sustentation Fund from which you hope to increase the stipends of the clergy by diocesan grants. This is without doubt the right policy, and I would urgently commend it to the generosity of Churchmen.

(II) It seems highly desirable that the clergy should have periodical opportunities of meeting, if only two or three together, and the expenditure in time and money required to procure this ought not, I am sure, to be grudged by the Church.

(III) The missions in the diocese are the Mitchell River and Roper River Missions to aboriginals, and St. Paul's Mission on Moa Island to South-sea Islanders. We may well be thankful for the great progress indicated in the fact that three so important missions have come into being in the past six years. The Mitchell River Mission was founded in 1905, and has made steady progress since then. Without showing especially brilliant results, it seems to be progressing in the right way; and the entire satisfaction of the Government authorities is a sign that the industrial work has been properly attended to. Nevertheless it might be desirable as soon as possible to put a larger area under cultivation. The presence of a priest must be sorely needed there. The Roper River Mission is of more recent origin, but has already settled down to its work. Like the Mitchell River Mission, it has the advantage of being right away from white civilisation; and the fact that there are no half-castes at either of these missions is a distinct gain. At Moa Island it has become urgently necessary that some good worker be found to support Miss Buchanan.

Speaking generally of these missions, I am impressed by the extreme difficulties found everywhere in securing the services of industrial experts. It seems to be a matter to which our Church has not given sufficient attention in the past, and consequently we are not producing this type of missionary as we should. Meanwhile, every day the work of the expert seems to grow in importance. Everywhere industrial training is part of our missionary work, and it is time we directed our attention more earnestly to the recruiting of mechanics, farmers, and pastoralists to the work of our missions.

DIOCESE IN GENERAL.—I consider that the Church endowment is still woefully inadequate for the work required. For ten years it has stood at £10,000. In the past year it has been increased by a grant of £2,500 from the Pan-Anglican Thank Offering, but at present the original endowment brings in only 3 per cent; and the Bishop's income (before the Pan-Anglican grant) was £303 14s 8d. Travelling expenses amount to £80 a year, and subscriptions and other necessary outgoings have sometimes amounted to £82 10s. in the year.

I notice with great interest the systematic care with which lighthouses, lightships, and other isolated stations are visited. There are seven lighthouses and two lightships under your jurisdiction; all these except two, Claremont lightship and Piper Island lighthouse, have been visited, some of them regularly. There are, moreover, twenty-two islands upon which 619 whites and 4,419 coloured people are living.

The Church ministers to 590 of these whites and about 1,600 coloured people, though only 180 of these can be classed as definitely under Christian influences. The London Missionary Society works in some of these islands. I notice also, with satisfaction, that a Japanese class is held at Thursday Island, and that the Rev. W. E. Godson is working amongst the Chinese. There are about 800 Japanese in your diocese (chiefly in Thursday Island) and 1,000 Chinese; so that, clearly, this work must be necessary.

It will be seen from these quotations from the returns how very varied is the work of the Church in this diocese. The population in the islands is cosmopolitan. The industries throughout are consequently very varied, and accordingly various qualities are required in those who minister there. Most of all it seems necessary that the Bishop working in this diocese should be possessed of a versatility in organisation and ministration which is given to few. I am thankful to conclude from all I have read from the returns before me, and from all I have seen in my visits to the diocese, that the Bishop and clergy are doing a most noble work in the face of quite exceptional difficulties—a work which ought to stir the energies and command the sympathy of the whole Church.—I am, my dear Bishop, yours very sincerely,
ST. CLAIR, BRISBANE.

Coronation Day.

Coronation Day was observed by services in the different parishes. At Thursday Island, after service in the Cathedral, and Church parade, a gathering of citizens was held on the Parade-ground, which was addressed by the Chairman of the Shire Council, the Bishop, Father Bach and Major Taylor. The Bishop spoke as follows:—"Fellow Citizens of the Empire—We are met to-day to celebrate the crowning of our King. There are those who tell us that the days of kings are over, and that their very existence is inconsistent with the pure doctrine of democracy. Yet we have to face the remarkable fact that, while the last sixty years have shown a marvellous growth and development of the spirit of democracy, the prestige and influence of the kingly office is far greater than it was a hundred years ago. The word king was originally "kinning," and means "Son of the kin or race." The King was the centre and representative of the people in time of peace and their leader in time of war. Usually also he was "son of the race" in the sense that his office was hereditary, thus securing continuity of national history and tradition, and securing also that the king should be a man who had been trained from birth for the office which he was to hold. No doubt both heredity and regal power became in course of time subject to gross abuses, the former sometimes putting a fool or a knave, and the latter an arbitrary tyrant on the throne to the overthrow of both righteousness and liberty. In our own case we have returned to more primitive custom. Although the office is hereditary, Parliament has the power and has several times exercised the right of putting aside an unworthy ruler and substituting a better man in his place, while every exercise of arbitrary authority is now prevented by our Constitution. Of late years our kings have worked with untiring devotion for the common good, and we believe that we have in King

George one who is honest and honourable, a faithful husband and devoted father, steeped in national feeling and tradition, a tireless worker, fit to rank with Victoria or Edward as a ruler of our vast Empire. And what a wonderful Empire it is! Where in all history can such a marvellous growth be shown? For though we have made many blunders (and our kings from the days of Ethelred the Unready have reflected our national faults as well as our national virtues), we have entered to-day upon a heritage which puts all the great empires of the past or the present in the shade. Let me give an example from my own experience. I was born fifty years ago in South Africa, which we had taken from the Dutch fifty years before. During the whole of my lifetime South Africa has been the scene of bitter rivalry between Dutch and British, culminating in a great war ten years ago; and yet I have lived to see Dutch and British united with one another, and united as an integral part of our Empire. Or turn to Australia. I remember not so many years ago hearing remarks commonly made, that it was time for Australia "to cut the painter" and to be no longer dependent on the old country. Contrast this with the words used a few days ago by Mr. Fisher of his experiences of the Imperial Conference in London. Mr. Fisher interviewed by the "Morning Post," said that "the admission of the Dominions to the Council of the Nation was a revolution in their relations with the mother country. All barriers of reserve were broken down and mutual confidence established for all time. A community of interest of the highest immediate importance and of vast possibilities had been created. The delegates would go back equipped with knowledge that qualified them for Imperial federation. They would represent in their Dominions ways for co-operation with the mother country of a more effective kind than were ever possible before. The revolution was complete. He was almost tempted to wonder why they were admitted into the very innermost confidence of the Imperial Government. Hitherto Imperial Conferences had been consultative and advisory gatherings. The British remained the sole controlling authority, but to-day the Dominions took part in the Empire in all things, and no developments, however sudden, should now be beyond their understanding." But this is not all. Not only have the people of our own blood and kindred blood (for the Dutch are nearer to us in speech and character than any other people) been united throughout the world, but there has been gathered into the Empire a vast multitude of all nationalities, protected by the Pax Britannica and having a common tie with us in their equal loyalty to our king. And why do they obey, and why are they loyal? Surely it is because the king, as "Son of the race," has shown in his dealings with them that spirit of justice and respect for liberty which have brought our race to its present height of glory. Will that glory last? Is it destined to grow yet greater, and shine yet more brightly? It is a momentous question, but to-day at least we will give no desponding reply. Whatever the future holds in store, we stand to-day with no loss or defeat to tarnish the record we have inherited. Whatever dangers threaten, we need not fail if we will be true to ourselves, and to the principles that have made us great in the past. All will be well if we can achieve unity—unity in the Mother Country whereby Ireland may feel no resentment against England, or England against Wales, but all be united in justice and liberty which is not license. Union between the Mother Country and the great oversea Dominions, in which the former learns to look beyond its own concerns, and the latter remember that they can only preserve their own liberty by standing shoulder to shoulder with each other and with the Mother Land. Union between our own race and the 330,000,000 of other blood and colour who are not less loyal sons of the Empire than we who founded it; union on terms of justice and liberty wherein none are wronged and none are oppressed. This union and confederation is the problem of our day. If we achieve it we are safe, if we fail our empire will fall into ruins; and one of the greatest factors in union is the regard felt for the king as the "Son of the race," as the representative of all that is best and highest in our national spirit. Such an one is crowned to-day; and whatever our politics or predilections, we can pray to-day for an honest gentleman on whom is laid a great burden as the representative of our race, and say with heart and soul the time-honoured words, "GOD SAVE THE KING!"

Mr. Wells.

The departure of Mr. A. S. Wells is a severe loss alike to the parish of Thursday Island and to the diocese. Mr. Wells wherever he has been has laboured earnestly for the Church, and his high character and practical knowledge have been the greatest service. As a member of the Diocesan Council, Mr. Wells has worked hard for the Church, and we most deeply regret his loss to the north. We wish him and Mrs. Wells every happiness at Maryborough.

The Roper.

Mr. Thomas writes from the Roper that the work is progressing, but "we have been seriously hampered owing to fever. First, Miss Tinney, then I, and finally my wife. Miss Tinny and I are both well again, but my poor wife has constant relapses; I am afraid that I shall have to send her south again."

Rev. R. Birch and Mrs. Birch of Victoria are leaving Melbourne for the Roper on September 26th.

The following subscriptions to the "Carpentarian" are acknowledged with thanks:—Canon Pattinson 2s.; Rev. T. Walker 2s.; Mr. Beryholtz 2s.; Mesdames Allom, Zahel, and Mitchell 2s. each; Mrs. Bird 5s.; Mrs. W. I. Docker 4s.; Miss Fraser's Bible Class 2s.

Mitchell River Mission,

Finding that the Government steamer John Douglas was going down the coast on survey business I asked for and was kindly given a passage and was landed on the beach at 5 p.m. on Sunday Aug. 6. I left my luggage behind and set out immediately for the station which is about eight miles away. The beacon on the coast was destroyed by a kind of tidal wave during the wet season, and a new one has now been erected at the mouth of Trubanamman Creek where it forms with a second smaller beacon a lead for entrance. It grew dark about 6.30 but fortunately there was a moon and I knew the track well so that I reached the station about half past seven. My unexpected arrival was greeted with yells of delight by all the boys on the station who crowded round me all wanting to shake hands at the same moment. A minute later I was greeted by the staff all of whom I found well and happy, in spite of a disastrous fire which a week or two before had destroyed 15 houses at one fell swoop.

Next morning as my belongings had not arrived from the coast I spent the day chiefly in going round and watching the various labours of the community. The progress made since my last visit quite amazed me.

Three points stand out prominently as the result of the first days impressions. First the advantage to the mission of having already sent out its first settlement to clear and till the land a couple of miles up the creek. This new departure is shortly to be followed by a second settlement on the coast not far from the original landing place, when the soil is good and where there are great facilities for fishing. Secondly, the way in which regular work has become the habit and instinct of the place. I could hardly realise that the men who had been working all day for the last month at the monotonous job of turning a clay puddle for brickmaking were the same who five years ago could with difficulty be induced to work two or three hours at much more interesting work. Thirdly the way in which the younger men and boys are becoming intelligent craftsmen taking a pride and interest in their work. I may add a fourth point and that is that for the first time the mission has made a great step towards agricultural self support, for instance during the last three months no less than three tons of sweet potatoes have been grown and consumed on the mission to say nothing of other produce.

I visited first of all the saw pit or rather sawing scaffold where I found a number of men under the direction of Jack Giebo hoisting up a big milkwood log about 2 feet in diameter to be sawn up into boards. A large number of boards had already been sawn and well and regularly cut. These boards were to make a very necessary veranda floor for the Superintendent's house. Nearby two men were splitting large blood wood logs into sleepers to be finished with the adze as decking for a bridge across the gully to the west of the station house. In the workshop adjoining a well finished table was being prepared. A number of boys and women were engaged in watering the gardens. Here I found beans, cabbages, tomatoes, radishes etc., all looking splendid; I have already spoken of the sweet potatoes, and the cassava looks equally well while there is a fine little grove of bananas and a considerable number of fruit trees coming on well.

Next I went on to the brickfield. This is a discovery of Mr. Warren, a relative of Mr. Matthews who has been staying at the Mission for the last six weeks and who being a skilled and ingenious artificer has rendered considerable service to the mission. Noting that the clay in the pit where charcoal had been prepared was burned into something like brick he made experiments and succeeded in building a brick oven which has enormously diminished the labour of breadmaking, he taught John Savo how to make bricks and for the last month John and his three assistants have been turning out bricks which even before burning are strong, hard, and of excellent quality. Starting with about 150 he is now turning out between 300 and 400 a day, and there are already several thousand in stock.

When people demand that a mission like Trubanamman should be self-supporting they should remember that with the exception of roofing iron nearly all the building materials have been produced on the spot and that even the dray has been built at the mission. Imagine a farmer starting without any capital wherewith to build his house, make his fences, drays, outhouses, barns, stores and workmens dwellings and with very few tools and you will understand how the mission has been situated. There is the additional disadvantage that bush timber and thatch and palm leaf roofs are perishable and inflammable and that much time has to be spent in re-erecting inadequate or antiquated buildings. The wonder is that agriculture has made so much progress as it has while so much time is occupied in building and improvement, not for the comfort of the staff who are still most inadequately housed, but for the general work of the station. For instance owing to the growth of the mission it was found that the cattle yards were too close and they had to be taken down and moved nearly half a mile. They are sufficient for milking and good bails have been erected for six cows, but new yards altogether must be built before any drafting or branding can be done. On my way back I looked in at the school which is held by Mrs. Matthews. Real progress has been made and some of the copy books were excellently written. In the evening I attended a Catechism class held by Mr. Matthews. About 20 boys were present ranging from 10 to 18 years of age. I was greatly surprised at their knowledge of the Church Catechism. They could repeat together the Catechism as far as the end of the Duty to our Neighbour without a mistake, and most of them could answer individually any question taken at random. In addition they could answer a number of questions as to the meaning of the words in the Catechism. It was very seldom that a boy could not answer any question and then it was usually from nervousness. I should have been glad to get as good answers from an ordinary class of white boy confirmation candidates, whereas these were and dates only for baptism and only the best of them could hope to be accepted.

On the following afternoon I walked out to see the new settlement of Angeram, about a mile and a-half up the creek. Land has been allotted here to four married men of the Mission, and although they were only sent out a month ago they had worked hard clearing the land. Each man has been given a section 240 by 120 feet, and as soon as the first rains come they will be planted with sweet potatoes, and as the soil is excellent for the purpose, the new settlers should do well. This is the first attempt at the principle of private effort and private tenure of land which has worked so well at Mapoon. So far it seems to have greatly stimulated the energies of the men who have done a large amount of clearing without supervision or assistance. Permanent houses will be erected as soon as possible on the allotments. In the evening I heard the girls Catechism. They have made progress but are not nearly so forward with their work as the boys. Next morning I took photographs and made sketches of some of the local industries and spent the afternoon over Mission accounts and estimates. About tea time Mr. A. Bowman at my request came over to see me about a fence between his run and the Mission. This is most urgently needed in the interests both of the Mission and the run. Our cattle are increasing and some fencing is absolutely necessary. At 8 p.m. we began a quiet day for the staff with compline and a meditation on the opening words of the Lords Prayer. This was continued by a celebration at 6.30 a.m. next morning in the little temporary chapel, and by prayer and meditation throughout the day. The staff have so few opportunities of external aid in their devotional life that these opportunities are very much appreciated. The following day I was busy with Mr. Matthews surveying and chaining the ground for a 200 acre paddock, the fencing of which is perhaps the matter of most absolutely pressing importance at present as we have no where to keep our cattle even for a single night. Each evening I gave an address to the people with a view to the approaching baptism. The staff have a very helpful custom of reading the Bible together in addition to the ordinary sermons at 6.45 a.m. and 9 p.m.

Next day, Saturday, Mr. Matthews and I devoted to a hard day's work surveying a route for the boundary fence when erected. We left the station at 9.45 a.m. and rode two miles S.E. to the head of the salt water on Cabbage Tree Creek. At a about a mile and a-half west of this point we found that the creek was large enough to form an effectual barrier, and from this point we ran a line about a mile and three quarters across a dry plain on to the boundary line. We then followed the boundary for about four miles to Dog Lagoon, the nearest point to the Mission, and for some way beyond it to the Rutland Plains track, marking trees at various points. We then returned to Dog Lagoon where there is a good level dry ridge, and which is the point at which Mr. Matthews hopes to make drafting and branding yards for the cattle, and from there returned home finding the distance from the nearest point of the boundary to be two miles. In the evening as the result of our measurements and compass bearings I was able to make for the first time a fairly accurate map of that part of the reserve to the south and south-west of the mission up to the boundary.

Next morning Sunday we met again at 7 a.m. for a celebration of the Holy Communion and at 10.30 came the event of the day, the Baptism of twelve persons, eight male and four female, ranging in age from twelve to twenty. These twelve persons are the spiritual first fruits of the Mission, no adults having been baptised at the Mission since it was started. It is worthy of note by those who are

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,

Volume XI.—No. 4. Thursday Island, October 1, 1911

The man who tries to live a predominantly Christian life, who knows the power and value of prayer, who knows something of the inexpressible joy of communion with God in meditation and Eucharist, to whom Providence is an ever-living and working force, to whom his religion is a more real and precious thing than wealth, happiness or life, such a man must at times be assailed by some such thought as this.

"If all that I believe is true how is it that, especially in the present day, there are so many good people who seem to have little or no religious sense at all. Some come to Church occasionally, others never, none are communicants, none of them seem to find any happiness in communion with God or to experience any need of it except perhaps in times of great trouble? Although few perhaps show the highest types of character, yet they lead good moral lives and constantly put me to shame by their kindliness, patience and unselfishness. If people can live lives in which there is so much good practically without the Christian faith, is it of such vital necessity? And if not, how can God be content to allow people to live so near to the Christian ideal while practically ignoring His revelation of Himself in Jesus Christ, if not ignoring Him altogether?"

Two answers may be given to these thoughts. In the first place it is clear that these people do not live as they do apart from the Christian faith, however unconscious or unsympathetic they may be to its influence. Not only are they guided by the natural religious instincts and good impulses from above which we find in all men of all races and creeds, but modern thought, literature and civilisation is so soaked with the spirit of Christianity that they have been all their lives under the unconscious influence of Christian teaching, even if they had no formal Christian training themselves. There is no great modern watchword—brotherhood, equal opportunity, social justice, charity, peace, which does not spring from the teaching of Jesus Christ, but the principles have been so widely accepted that people have largely forgotten their origin. The people of whom we speak do not deserve all the credit for the spirit they have inherited while they do incur a serious responsibility for the carelessness or self-engrossment which blinds them to the working of the spirit of life, which is not only "about their path and about their bed and noting all their ways," but which would fain show them how to rise out of a secularity, which is as formal as the narrowest orthodoxy can ever be, into a newness of spiritual life which might bring life and power to themselves and all around them.

The second thought is this: God is of course not content that men should ignore and insult Him by taking His material and spiritual gifts and not troubling themselves to thank or honor the Giver; but what we perhaps fail to realise is the infinite unselfishness of God. No man could go on benefitting another year after year and receiving nothing but neglect or insult in return, without some touch of cold contempt or feeling of personal resentment, which would prevent an absolutely impartial judgment, but we cannot impute such a weakness to God. He is able to judge with an infinite and perfect discernment, as untouched by resentment as it is by weakness. He recognises that some things may be forgiven because of predisposing causes and environment, while other things can by no means whatever be forgiven without penitence, because they spring from sin. "Like as a father pitieth his own children" so does God pity without self-love and without infringing the eternal laws of justice and truth. That men ignore Him moves Him not to anger but to pity, for "He knoweth whereof we are made. He remembereth that we are but as dust." We need not be more jealous for God than He is for Himself, and we may await with patience His revelation of Himself to those from whose sight He is veiled by the ignorance of worldly pre-occupation.

Visit to St. Paul's, Moa.

(By MRS. PATTINSON.)

Ever since Deaconess Buchanan stayed with us in Brisbane, and told us of her work in Moa, we have wished to see for ourselves; and now that wish has been realized. We started at daybreak, with Mr. Nash, in the "Banzai" and went in one tack over the beautiful blue waters of the Torres Straits, with a fresh wind and glorious sun, making the trip in 5½ hours. We knew that on Moa they had been praying that we might have fine weather—in fact, Deaconess wrote,—"Know that you will be prayed for all the way up from Brisbane," and we also knew what a warm welcome was awaiting us. How rejoiced we were to see "Teassher" and her family awaiting us on the beach, and how we cheered and they cheered, as we neared the shore in the dinghy. We were pulled ashore by councillors and policemen, and our hearts were very full as we met once more, remembering the dreadful sickness and sorrow they had had on the island. We were led up in triumphal procession to the school-house where the dear "Teassher" had thought of everything that could minister to our pleasure and comfort—for there are not naturally many comforts on Moa! Our first afternoon was spent in talk, with a little sing-song in the school-house. The children sing so prettily, and we were struck with their musical voices and good time. Hymns and carols were sung for about half-an-hour, and then my husband told them a story, to which they listened with great interest and attention. After that Mrs. Nash and I were escorted by the girls on to the reef, with its beautiful gardens of coral polyps of all colours, beche-de-mer, shells and seaweeds, a real paradise of beauty. The girls were in a constant ripple of laughter, singing, and every now and then coming up with a shy offering of shell or coral. One small boy brought a gaily-coloured cray-fish, which we had for our next morning's breakfast. We stayed out until supper-time, and after that the bell rang for prayers. To us, that was the most beautiful of all the stay—to see those South-sea people coming in, with such shy reverence, all of them, men, women and children, kneeling for a few minutes in silent prayer, and then listening with such earnest attention, and joining so fervently in the prayers. If anyone has any doubts as to the wisdom of missionary work, I urge them to go to Moa. Not only are they learning to be earnest Christians, but Deaconess Buchanan has impressed upon them something of her own spirit, and their manners and polite, modest ways will compare more than favourably with many a white community. The children are wonderfully quick at answering the questions put by "Teassher" on the chapter they have had read to them, and these questions and answers not only help the children, but also their parents, many of whom cannot read, some of the little ones grew very sleepy before prayers were finished, and you would see some of them like Eutychus, fallen in a deep sleep, with little black heads almost touching the floor. The next morning, as we stood looking down the main "street" of Moa, the bell was rung for morning prayer. It is a most picturesque settlement, with the sun shining on the bright blue sea on one side, and on the other, Moa Peak. The belfry stands in the centre of the street, which is bordered with crotons and young cocoanut palms, and the grass houses on either side. This time prayers were said in "Teassher's grass house. They will sit on the grass mats to sing and read, and after prayers opportunity is taken to give out orders and notices for the day, and to consult on any knotty point which may arise. While we were there, a cutter from Maubiag arrived with natives on board, and it was considered unwise to allow them to land, as they were not properly disinfected from dysentery. All this had to be discussed, and it was some time before they could see the reasonableness of the order. After prayers, Mrs. Nash and I went round the settlement, visiting every house. So clean they were, evidently expecting visitors, and we were charmed with the beautifully woven grass mats. Many of them had pictures, cards and photographs hung from the beams and supports of the house, and knives and forks, plates, and other articles of use and ornament stuck in the palm leaf thatch. Everyone sits on the floor, but we who were visitors had boxes provided for us, and in Sonny's and Mary's house, a beautiful throne, covered with a scarlet rug. After lunch, which was a series of new and fascinating things to eat—fish with blue bones, dugong, yams, sweet potatoes and pumpkin, came the second annual exhibition. The bell rang at 2.30, and everyone hurried into their best clothes, and at 3 o'clock they all assembled in the school-house to open the exhibition with hymn and prayer. Nothing is done on Moa without prayer—it is an essential part of their life. Many curious and interesting things were exhibited—excellent mats and baskets made by the women and girls, fishing nets, war clubs, fish-traps, canoes, and dance ornaments made by the men, and necklaces of shells and giddi-giddi seeds made by the children. Considering how much sickness they had on the island, and how short a time for preparation, it was wonderful how good a collection they had got together. It was quite a festal day, and everyone so bright and happy. When the exhibition was over, I gave a short talk to the women, four of whom, after careful probation, were to be admitted to the Mothers' Union at the next morning's celebration. These women had of their own accord given up smoking, and had been trying very hard to control their words, so that they should set a good example to their children. Some people have been rather averse to admitting these women to the Mothers' Union, thinking they would not sufficiently realize their responsibility, but I think if the objectors could have seen the earnest, good, happy look on their faces they would feel differently about it. Prayer is to them such a real thing, and they promised to pray about it, and to pray for the other branches, and they realize that it is a high honour to become a member. Our festival day ended with a dance and moonlight swim, and boys, headed by Turut and Razona, decorated with leaves and sea-weed, danced native dances with great vigor and grace, even the tiny ones taking their part, stamping little brown feet, twisting and turning in time with the older ones. When they were all hot and exhausted. Mrs. Nash and I were carried off bodily for a moonlight swim. Sixteen girls and women came with us, and there were yells of laughter as we all splashed in the warm water, diving and ducking like so many brown shoney porpoises. Then we were lifted off our feet, each borne by eight girls, and floated on the water. They were much amused by our white arms and feet, which they kept patting.

On Saturday morning we had a celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30. Joe Ban had brought some flowers to decorate the table which was used as an altar, and everything was arranged with care and loving reverence. There were fifteen communicants, and seven of the older boys and girls who are preparing for confirmation were allowed to be present. The four new members of the Mothers' Union received their cards. Each of them was asked by name if she wished to become a member of the union, and they seemed so happy and earnest about it. Our delightful visit was very nearly over. Joe asked for our luggage in good time, but we didn't get away until noon. Our last act, before the final farewell was to take part in a little service of prayer and blessing upon the offerings brought by the people—bananas, pumpkins, and a hen, all of which were to be sold in Thursday Island, and the proceeds to be banked for the Moa Church Fund. They are very anxious to have a Church built soon, and they want to do what they can to help themselves; it is a real labour of love. They all, men, women and children, came to the beach to see us off, and with many sighs and regrets we left the happy colony, and the brave little "Teassher" who carries on the work so nobly and wholeheartedly. Not a detail escapes her; she is absolutely at the service of her people in sickness, sorrow, and health; and they are devoted to her. Our homeward voyage lasted 9½ hours, the last three-quarters of an hour, in darkness, pulled round the coast in the dinghy by Sonny; and we were not sorry to see the lights of the Government wharf, as the tide was low and rocks many.

New Francis Pritt.

The specifications have been signed for the building of the new Francis Pritt. Although a smaller vessel than the old Francis Pritt she will cost more owing to the rise in the price of timber, and the fact that the old vessel was second-hand. She is to be 44ft. long with a beam of 12ft. 6in. and a draft of 4ft. 6in. unloaded, to enable her to enter Trubananaman creek when loaded. She is to have double frames and be very strongly built, with a large cabin amidships and a small cabin for the captain aft, in addition to accommodation for a crew of four. It was hoped that she would have been ready this month, but a serious delay has arisen owing to the fact that the necessary timber could not be got in Sydney and had to be ordered from New Zealand. It is hoped that she will be ready in November. The cost will be £374, of which the diocese is giving £300, and A.B.M. £50, having a balance of £25 to be provided. In addition we need a binnacle compass, patent log lamps, flags and cabin fittings. Gifts of any of these will be gratefully acknowledged.

The "Banzai."

The "Banzai" had a narrow escape of total loss in the early morning of Coronation Day. She had been put on the slip for some slight repairs a few days before, and the tide declined to rise enough to get her off. Deaconess Buchanan was anxiously expecting stores and other things wherewith to celebrate the day, and at last by taking all the cargo and ballast out she was got off about 1 a.m. on Coronation Day. It was blowing hard and very dark, but the captain, Joe Bann, knowing how anxiously he was expected, set off at once. After passing Wednesday Island the sea was very rough, and in the darkness the vessel was carried within a few feet of the reef on which a furious sea was breaking. The Banzai went about just in time, but as she lay broadside on the sea she was swept by a big wave which carried away the dinghy and nearly swamped her. Being a staunch little ship, she just escaped; but had to battle all day with the weather, not reaching Moa until 7 p.m. Perhaps some reader would like to provide the cost of a new dinghy, £7. Had she gone on the reef it is not probable that any of the crew would have escaped.

Parochial News.

A contract has been let for the erection of a church at Pine Creek at a cost of £200. The building which is situated on a fine allotment close to the centre of the town is to be forty feet by twenty-five with twelve-foot walls and roof. Services have been held for many years in a hired room and it will be a great thing to have a church of our own. About £100 are already in hand.

The Mossman Cyclone Church Restoration Appeal has met with a generous response. About £400 has been received up to date and further donations are expected. The church and rectory at Port Douglas have been rebuilt and it is hoped to make a start with the Mossman Church as soon as the funds allow. At present the services are being held in the small hall erected by the Rector. It is hoped that the new church will be of such a character as to defy all future hurricanes.

Owing to the fact that Rev. W. M. Wilkinson was much delayed in his journeys this year owing to the cyclones and floods in the early part of the year, the Bishop was obliged to defer his promised visit to Coen. He hopes to pay it in the earlier part of next year. Mr. Wilkinson reports roads blocked by fallen timber and other difficulties of travel. He visited the Mitchell River Mission at the end of June and his visit was much appreciated both by the natives and the staff.

Rev. A. M. Hassell returned to Georgetown in June after spending some months as locum tenens at Cooktown. The Bishop hopes to spend a fortnight in the Georgetown district in November.

Rev. J. H. Brown was inducted and instituted by the Bishop as Rector of Cooktown on Sunday, July 30. We wish Mr. and Mrs. Brown every happiness in their new sphere of work.

Religious Instruction in State Schools is now being given by the clergy on either two or three days a week in all the parishes of the diocese. In almost every instance the school committees and head teachers have been most ready and willing to afford all facilities.

St. Paul's, Moa.

St. Paul's, Moa, without Deaconess Buchanan seems like Hamlet without the Prince of Denmark, but we shall have to grow accustomed to the thought, for the Deaconess is leaving Moa and resigning her office of Superintendent at the end of this month. All the remarkable progress made by the mission which has so much impressed visitors, and still more impressed those who knew the work more intimately, has been due to the energy, devotion, and lofty spiritual ideals of the first Superintendent who undertook the work as a temporary expedient in an hour of great need three years ago.

It is needless to say that the Deaconess would never of her own choice have abandoned a work so dear to her heart, and for which she had shown herself possessed of such exceptional qualification; but the Bishop has been for some time convinced that the task was altogether beyond her physical strength and only carried on at the cost of an exhaustion which was endangering a valuable life; and the Deaconess loyally if reluctantly consented to be guided by his opinion that it was her duty to give up the work, and to return to her former work in the diocese.

It has been suggested that a suitable memorial of the Deaconess's splendid work at Moa would be the erection there of a small hospital to be called "The Buchanan Hospital." The cost will be about £150 and the Bishop or Rev. E. J. Nash will be glad to receive any contributions for this purpose.

The Deaconess will succeed as Superintendent by Mr. B. S. Cole, who has had many years experience of aboriginal work, and was lately in charge as the Mitchell River in the absence of Mr. Matthews. Mr. Cole will be married on or about December 6th at Thursday Island to Nurse Monaghan, formerly of Yarrabah, and we have every confidence in the future of the mission under his care. We may remind our readers that with the exception of a Government grant of £120, the whole cost of the mission including maintenance of the mission cutter Banzai is borne by the Diocese, which in order to assist the A.B.M. has never applied to it for any help towards this work. Special contributions towards the maintenance of the Moa mission are always welcome. A new grass house with hardwood floor has just been erected for the use of the Superintendent. About £70 mostly contributed by the natives themselves is in hand towards a permanent church, but a much larger sum is required before the work can be begun.

always speaking of the fickleness of the blacks, that of the four boys who were the first to join the Mission six years ago and were then about eleven years old, two, Luke Manandabilli and Mark Gadwalon were baptised to-day, and the other two Don and Boiogabadin we only absent because on duty on the boat. They will be baptised on my arrival at Thursday Island. None of the four has ever left the Mission (except Don for a time on the Melbidir where he worked very well) and they are among the best men on it.

The temporary font was surrounded by masses of beautiful blue waterlilies, and the behaviour of the candidates was most reverent. The service was followed with intense interest by the rest of the congregation. The future of the Mission rests with these young men and women. May they be faithful, as I do not doubt they all sincerely intend to be, to the vows and promises that they have made.

I hope that the next ceremony at the Mission will be the consecration of the fine new church which still stands in the centre of the compound with bare protesting frame waiting for roof and sides. The latter are nearly ready but the roof must be provided from without. In the afternoon I baptised an infant and at evensong spoke of the need of perseverance in well doing. Next morning we had a farewell celebration of Holy Communion at 6.15 a.m. and after breakfast Mr. Woodd started off to Dunbar to bring in the 44 head of new cattle which have been purchased for the Mission, and which with those we have already will bring up our herd to 120 head, which may be called a real beginning. Mr. Matthews and I set off also for the coast, much waving of farewell to all bringing a very happy and I hope useful visit to a close. Alas, however, our hopes of an early start as the boat which ought to have been awaiting me off the coast had got ashore on a sandbank just inside the mouth of the river, and at low water I could walk aboard. There was no help for it but to wait for high-water which will not be before daylight, but as there was very little wind I was not so melancholy as if we had been losing a good breeze, and after dinner I went ashore and made a sketch or two. It was a beautiful evensong on deck, the boys singing "Son of my Soul" excellently from memory. We were only just on the edge of the bank, but even if we could have got off we could not get over the bar. The Merrilees does not lie over quite so far as the Francis Pitt used to do, but it is too far to be pleasing. Venus is extraordinarily bright just now: in fact the girls at the Mission pointed it out on Sunday between noon and 1 p.m. in brilliant sunshine. The tide continued to fall from 9 a.m. on Monday to 1.30 a.m. on Tuesday, and we were high and dry the most of the night. Between the stuffiness of the little cabin below and the heaviness of the dew on deck I could not manage to sleep and spent most of the time enjoying the perfect stillness and beauty of the night. Our crew had gone ashore to sleep and their fire twinkled through the she-oaks, and the faint murmur of the tide mingled with the light breeze in the tree tops and the soft murmur of their voices as they doubtless explained to the new member of the crew the many wonders they would have to show him in Thursday Island. The moon was shining with great brilliance, and as the tide slowly rose and covered the gravel and shells on the bottom, one could see all the creatures of the water as busy as if it had been mid-day. First, little crabs came sidling along on the look out for whatever the incoming tide might bring, then came a scurry of striped black and white fish turning and twisting in every direction, then the great white and grey jelly-fish as the water grew deeper, until at last the first streaks of dawn began to appear as we fetched the boys on board and got off the bank at 6 a.m. and crept out with the sweeps over the shallow bar until at last we caught a light air from the land and turned our prow to the north again. For the first two days we had fine weather and light but fairly steady breezes, and we reached Mapoon, where I was very glad to be able to spend half-a-day with Mr. Hey. On the morning of the third day we left Mapoon at 5.45 a.m. on Saturday with a light easterly wind, and I congratulated myself that this time I had got off with a quiet and uneventful voyage. I was however, a little premature. The wind gradually freshened and though being sheltered by the land there was no sea, the angle of sailing became unpleasant; then without warning came a fierce gust and we were almost on our beam ends and only just managed to come up to the wind in time. As it was the water came in at the cabin scuttle above the deck and we lost our compass swept overboard and a large coil of rope on the main hatch which we afterwards recovered. We immediately reefed down the boat as much as we could, but the violence of the gusts increased so much that about mid-day we had to bear up for the shore where we anchored in 2½ fathoms and listened in peace while the wind howled overhead. During the squall our newest sailor recruit stripped off his shirt and prepared to swim. He had come to the conclusion that a cutter that swam on her side was no place for a self-respecting aboriginal. We did not get on our way again until 3 a.m. next morning with a light breeze from the south, which after daylight changed into an easterly gale which gave us a bad time in the Endeavour Straits though we were quite safe with everything reefed closely down. We got into Thursday Island just in time for Evensong and were glad to offer our Thanksgivings for escape from a very real and pressing danger. On my arrival I was greeted by the news that I was supposed to be lost and that the Governor of Papua in the steamer Merrie England had gone down to the Mitchell to look for me. The mistake arose through the fact that the South Sea Island captain of a trading cutter had visited the Mission Station on Sunday afternoon and then gone off to his boat. He reported that when he left on Tuesday morning neither I nor the John Douglas had arrived. Much alarm was the result, and the Governor most generously responded to a request to go and look for me. It is curious that while I was perfectly safe when I was supposed to be lost we really had a very narrow escape from death while the Merrie England was still away on her mission.

Bishoprick Endowment Fund.

The sum of £2500 has been placed in the hands of the Diocesan Trustees of the Diocese of Brisbane under a deed of trust for the benefit of the Bishoprick Endowment Fund of the Diocese of Carpentaria, being the sum given for that purpose by the Pan-Anglican Congress Committee. The interest of the money will be devoted to the reduction of the sum of £120 now paid by the diocese for Bishop's House maintenance.

The Holy Communion.

Amid all the disputes which have raged around the Blessed Sacrament of Christ's Love it is refreshing to come back to the words of old Richard Hooker in his Ecclesiastical Polity, written over 300 years ago. "What these elements are in themselves it skilleth not, it is enough to me which take them that they are the body and blood of Christ; his promise in witness hereof sufficeth, his word he knoweth which way to accomplish, why should any cogitation possess the mind of a faithful communicant, but this: O my God Thou art true: O my soul thou art happy."

Christ is not the Teacher, as is often said, Christ is not the Founder, He is the Content of Christianity.—CHELLING.

A Threat.

The parson was walking up the main street of the little bush township to which he had been lately appointed when he saw a bushy bearded individual tacking across the street in a way that suggested recent refreshment. He was hailed with "Hi! re you the new parson?" The fact was admitted. "Well" he continued "if I don't like you I'll—I'll—" he paused for a while as if think of some tremendous denunciation—"I'll come and hear you preach." As he never made his appearance in Church the parson concludes that in this instance at any rate he 'gave satisfaction.'

A Prayer.

Authrised by the Bishop to be used at seaport towns in the diocese at the discretion of the minister:—

O Eternal God who alone spreadest out the heavens and rulest the raging of the sea: who hast compassed the waters with bounds until day and night come to an end: be pleased to receive into thy almighty and most gracious protection the person of thy servant engaged in fishing, travelling or doing their business in great waters: preserve them from the dangers of the sea, that they may remain in safety to enjoy the blessings of the land and the fruit of their labours, and with a thankful remembrance of Thy mercies to praise and glorify Thy Holy name through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Aborigines.

St. Luka's Day, October 18th, was for the first time observed this year as a day of Intercession on behalf of the Missions to the aborigines of Australia. The day sacred to the memory of the beloved physician has been well chosen as the day on which to pray for our brother Lazarus who lies at our door naked, ill-fed and covered with sores.

The aborigines have not had much chance in the past. Most people judge of them by the miserable wretches who hang about the outskirts of northern towns, which is about as fair as it were to judge of the population of England by the inmates of a tramps' lodging house. If bad environment can reduce a white man to a condition in which he is clothed in rags, swarming with vermin, foul in language and filthy in act, it is little wonder if the still weaker aboriginal succumbs as easily to adverse circumstances.

Under natural conditions the aborigines are healthy with chocolate coloured skin, kept clean by much swimming and diving, with limbs supple and active from much hunting with eyes alert and graceful carriage.

They are not fond of unnecessary work, a feeling which they share with some white men, but they prepare and cook their food with considerable care. They have strong family affections and are unreasonable enough to resent it when a white man carries off their wife or daughter and threatens to shoot them if they look sour. They are capable of being taught to read and write, to sew, to tend cattle and horses, to cultivate the ground, and they will work regularly and well once they understand that there is any good reason why they should. They will be loyal when their affections are engaged and are capable of appreciating spiritual as well as material influences. In other words they are men and women even as we are; little advanced it is true, but capable of responding to kindness and commonsense.

The missions already established have proved these things to the satisfaction of all fairminded persons who have taken the trouble to ascertain the facts. Surely it is time that we realised our duties in the matter more clearly and more practically. We cannot undo the past with its record of neglect and injustice punctuated by black deeds that we are ashamed to remember. We can at least try to do justice to those few that are left of the thousands of natives that once populated the north, and if no national life is possible for them we may at least give them a knowledge of that higher life which can elevate and transform the simplest character by the knowledge of Him who humbled Himself to a life which was for Him an infinite descent. We can never forget that He said "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me."

Bishop's visit to Stations.

I left Thursday Island accompanied by Miss White on Tuesday, September 12th, and arrived at Burketown on Sunday morning, September 17th. We had hoped to have arrived quite early, but when within about two miles of Burketown we stuck fast and had to wait for some hours before Burketown became aware of our fate and came down in buggies to release us. I held a short service for the Sunday School which has been carried on for many years by Miss Walden, and saw some confirmation candidates and other people, and we had a hearty service at night in the Shire Hall. Next morning Mr. McIntyre came out and drove us to Escott Station about 12 miles distant.

Next morning I made a start with a buggy and pair of horses kindly lent me by Mr. McIntyre, who also provided three extra horses and a diminutive black boy named Eric to drive them. I was thus able to get a change of horses from time to time which was very necessary as all the horses in the district were in poor condition owing to the dry weather and poor grass. I got away at half-past seven and had to drive nearly back to Burketown to get on to the right road. I visited one or two houses on the way and got out to Mr. S's selection about 40 miles from Escott at half-past five. After tea I had a service and religious instruction for the large party of children and was glad to get to bed early. Mr. S. has a number of sheep who seem to be doing well. I got away about 8 a.m. the following morning and camped early for dinner as there was little grass along the road and I wanted to make sure of it. The road was very heavy and dusty and though I pushed along as fast as I could I was overtaken by complete darkness about 2½ miles from Gregory Downs; the spare horses got ahead of the buggy and the dust made it impossible to see anything, so after about a mile I hobbled them out and got Eric to ride ahead and show the track. I got in at 8 p.m. with both horses and self tired after a hot and dirty journey of 45 miles. I stopped the night at the hotel and in the morning picked up my horses and crossed the river to the station where I was welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Nicolson, whom I had visited here two years before. I had intended to go on to Lawn Hills, but hearing that Mr. and Mrs. S. were coming in on their way to Normanton in a day or two I drove over the following day to Fiery Downs instead. I do not know why the station is called Fiery Downs unless because it is so hot. It was certainly fiery enough as I drove over the long stretches of open downs. I found Mrs. D. and her five little ones, all under six, at home. Some women would consider it hopeless to look after five little children and the homestead without any assistance but one or two black gins, and to remain bright and cheerful and keep all the children clean and well amid the dust and heat of the tropical bush with the nearest neighbour 20 miles away, but Mrs. D. manages to do it, and I soon became great friends with all the little ones except the baby who I confess seemed to regard me with some suspicion. I promised to send religious instruction books for the children, and gained a worthy recruit for the Mothers' Union, and next day Saturday returned to Gregory Downs. In the evening we had a service of preparation for Holy Communion and a celebration at 7.30 a.m. on Sunday morning. In the afternoon I held service at the hotel, and baptised two children. Next morning I got an early start and was back at Brookdale, 45 miles, at 6 p.m. Next morning there was a dense fog, almost the only one I have seen in the north, and it was not much use trying to find the horses, but my small boy went to look. After breakfast as the fog had lifted and he had not returned, I went to look for him and found him about half-a-mile away, fast asleep, lying full length on the back of his horse which was standing quietly with the reins on the ground. As I got a very late start and the horses were tired I only went sixteen miles to the Brook where I held service at night. Next day I made good progress and reached the Nicolson River about a mile from Escott by 1 p.m., my tired horses however stuck me up in the heavy sand of the crossing and I had to send to the station for fresh horses before I could get across. We had service at the station on Thursday evening and on Friday returned to Burketown.

Sunday School.

We have received from Canon Grabham an excellent series of questions on Trevelyan's "Faith of the Church," for use in Sunday schools. The questions can be obtained from Canon Grabham, Ravenswood, at a very cheap rate; and we think they will be found to be extremely useful.

About Suffering.

September 2, 1911.

Dear Mr. _____

You say you are troubled by doubts which arise from the fact that the world is so full of unavoidable pain and suffering. Will you allow me to state the matter as it appears to me personally? It seems to me that a man may find the world full of moral and intellectual difficulties, and yet be a convinced Christian. A fairly long life and very varied experiences have assured me that Christianity, imperfectly as I doubtless understand it, is the nearest approach to absolute truth that I shall ever know in this world, and if it leaves me with many bewilderments they do not touch the belief in Christ as the only adequate Revelation of God. No doubt there are many very puzzling things in the world. Some people would have us believe that God is but half master in His own world, that pain, suffering and trouble are such terrible things that God cannot be suspected of having any hand in them.

I heard a very able preacher a few years ago addressing a highly educated congregation on the Messina earthquake. He said that to his mind the only possible explanation was that the earth was a conscious, or semi-conscious being, that it had a will of its own and that sometimes it got out of hand and did things that God did not want it to do. It was strange to see an intelligent man so mentally confused. A God who cannot even manage our little terrestrial globe is not what we understand by God.

I am, personally, convinced that nothing whatever escapes God's care. All that happens, happens by His permission and probably by His deliberate design. So far as my own experience goes (and I can argue from nothing else) I cannot class pain, suffering and trouble among those things which my life would have been better had it lacked. I cannot recall any suffering of which I can say definitely that I am sure that it had no good use, while of the majority of the things I have suffered I am quite sure that they did deepen and enrich my life, that they did teach me much needed lessons, that they did draw me to God in a way that, so far as I am concerned, probably nothing else could have done. A near and dear relative of my own once lay a-dying for six months, after the doctor had given her less than that number of days to live. They were months of extreme physical pain. For a considerable portion of the time she could speak only with difficulty and could not endure the pain even of drinking water unless an anaesthetic had been previously applied to the throat. Yet shortly before her death she asserted with obvious sincerity that these months of torture had been the happiest months of a life full of interest and happiness because the grace of God had given spiritual blessings which far outweighed the pain. Knowing well in this case the extremity of the pain it is to me a crucial proof of the fact no suffering need destroy that joy and peace of the soul which is greater than all other forms of happiness. The whole story of the persecution and martyrdom of the early Christians is one long commenting on the same truth. For myself I am convinced that I cannot suffer anything which God does not permit, and in which He does not see a use and a purpose, nor do I believe that I could suffer anything which would take all the joy out of life were I able to so endure it as to bear it as His will and as fulfilling His purpose.

Some people are much disturbed by the promiscuity of God's judgements, by the fact that an earthquake or a shipwreck overwhelms good, bad and indifferent together, so that it would seem as if death came upon them by chance and apart from God's due time and purpose.

This is surely to attribute our own weakness to God. There would be to us a hopeless difficulty in so ordering the threads of 100,000 lives that they should end fitly and designedly at one moment and one place; but the difficulty does not exist for the infinite knowledge of God, and as a matter of fact far more than 100,000 lives end simultaneously every day of the year. The fact that these persons happen to occupy the same place at the same moment in no way adds to the difficulty. Death probably comes too soon to no man. To the good it is the gate of the better, and to the bad it at least prevents them from plunging deeper in the mire and increasing the account that is against them.

I see however that I have filled my paper without saying all I should like to say, and I must leave it to another day.—Yours, very sincerely,
G. HALLEBAN.

Meat and Drink.

It is of course undeniable that the beautiful services of Daily Matins and Evensong, find their most perfect accompaniment and most appropriate setting in some old-world cathedral or ancient parish church where every stone is redolent of centuries which have echoed to the same words, where painted glass and marble monument recall the faith and devotion of our forefathers, and where the very English of the day when the Prayer Book was composed speaks still in register and inscription.

It is, however, at least open to question as to whether the full depth and beauty of these wonderful services is not even more fully brought out by the sharp touch of contrast in some dreary little township in the dusty bush with its handful of inhabitants and its heart-breaking indifference to anything in heaven or on earth, saving only a dance or a race meeting.

Consider the setting. The little wooden barn which stands for a Church. It is not even a picturesque barn as it stands on the spidery black piles that protect it from the ever devouring white ant. The dusty weather-stained boards which cover the oblong frame have shrunk and left long cracks through which the dazzling glare outside is visible; the square windows have been covered with white paint which is much scratched. There is no chancel, but the Holy Table is raised on three steps at the east end and the altar cloth, which in its decoration betrays painfully the inefficiency of local art, is faded by the sun which streams in, in spite of the white paint. Happily now the windows are open and there is a patch of brilliantly blue sky, but they admit the querulous, scolding voice of the slipshod woman next door, varied occasionally by a curse, and noises of horses, goats and fowls. The priest is alone. The congregation would suspect any member who ventured to come to daily prayers either of incipient insanity or a design to captivate the parson. At first they were indignant when the bell was rung, but now they comment adversely if the priest happens to be absent and the bell silent. Several of the hotels time their getting-up bell by it, and are reasonably aggrieved. The interior of the Church is cared for as far as labour goes, because the priest cares for it himself, but his own small stipend is in arrears and structural improvements are impossible. It is not the fault of the people. A few do care very much, but the place has been going downhill for years. Many of the men are working elsewhere and with difficulty keering two homes. There is not one wealthy man in the town, and nearly all are poor. Most of them are also indifferent. They have been worsted in life's battle. They know and care nothing for anything beyond their own narrow limits. The nearest town is 100 miles away and transit slow and costly. They are not more indifferent to religion than they are to everything else except racing and dancing. They like and respect their parish priest and readily promise to do whatever he asks of them—and promise again with equal cheerfulness when he reminds them of their promise unfulfilled. They mean well and are genuinely ashamed of their neighbour's vices. They are not bad enough to cause the parish priest to give up hope, and not good enough to save him the recurrence of a heavy cloud of despondency.

So he goes alone, or by a happy chance with some rare visitor, to his Matins or Evensong, having done his duty to the community with the bell.

Happy is he if God has given him some share of the precious gift of imagination by which his soul may fly from his sordid surroundings into that great world of spiritual and intellectual things by which he knows himself to be indeed encircled. Where can he find a better guide than the grand old words of the Prayer Book?

"To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses." "I will arise and go to my Father." How the burden of his people's sins and his own failures seems to roll away with the first words of the service. The confession carries him into another world. Township, dust, goats, the dreary bush, the solid earth are all left behind. He is standing alone, yet not alone, before the great white throne of God. He has with him the confessions of the many who cannot come, and he longs to present also the confessions of those who do not want to come. He and his people are no longer dwellers in one dull spot. They are souls swept up by the power of prayer far above the earth into the presence of God. The present drops away as if already long past. He strives to realise only the relation between God and the soul He has made and cares for like as a Father pitieth his own children. He tries to grasp the meaning of the absolution, the message of hope and love, the one sheet anchor between him and despair.

Then the Psalms. How wonderful they are. Had they been the product of the most refined Christian devotion they would have been wonderful enough, but when we remember that the very latest are hundreds of years before Christ; what a revelation they become of the inherent capacity for religion in the human heart. How it widens our horizon and deepens our faith to find these men who had no knowledge of the Christian hope rising to such sublime heights of devotion, plumbing such depths of penitence, holding instinctively such great ideals of life, of man's destiny and God's nature. Then the lessons, how extraordinarily vivid and varied are the Old Testament, how often we wish they would carry on the story a little further, well as we know it, how convincing and real they are. Some of even the New Testament chapters seem to pale in interest before them. Then the deathless canticles, the Te Deum with its clarion blast of Catholic truth, the Magnificat summing up the very heart-stirrings of Christian devotion, the Nunc Dimittis with its "be the day weary or be the day long, at last it ringeth to Evensong." Lastly, the Prayers. We never weary of them, no extempore words seem to fill their place. We stand again before God's throne. We bring with us intercessions not only for ourselves and our people but for the State, the Empire, all Christian people, the whole world of human souls, with their sins and their sorrows.

And so at last, with the name of the blessed Trinity on our lips we come to the close and the priest goes forth again to the loneliness and the littleness, the indifference, and the disappointment, cheered and uplifted, with meal and drink that the world despises in its folly. How else could he continue to the end?

Hotels.

We are glad to see the Queensland Parliament engaged in an effort, however inadequate, to check some of the evils of the liquor traffic. The forces arrayed against honest reform are enormously strong, and we must be thankful for an advance here and there. What, however, is most needed is an advance of public opinion, a wider realisation of the dangers of the traffic, and a keener care for the public good. Without this, legislation will be a dead letter. It is impossible to travel much in the north, and to have to stay much at hotels, without having some of the evils of the trade brought home to us.

One cannot resist the conclusion that in the great majority of cases what the lessee of an hotel really cares about is not the entertainment of travellers, the arrangements for whose comfort are often painfully inadequate, but the sale of liquor at the bar. In other words, a great majority of hotels are primarily drinking shops, and only secondarily places of entertainment. Most of our hotels have no proper sitting, reading, or writing rooms, distinct from the bar, clean, tidy, and habitable. The traveller, in many cases is expected to find his entertainment at the bar, and no other attractive place is provided for him.

Surely, also, is the work of a publican full of serious danger to the man or woman who holds the office. It needs unusual honesty of purpose and strength of character, and a high sense of honour and responsibility, to fill the position worthily; to refuse to connive at breaches of the law; to refuse to profit by the folly of weak men without self-control; to rebuke evil; to endure loss rather than do wrong. The good publican must be a person of uncommonly strong and high character, and we cannot but doubt whether many of those who take up hotel-keeping have reflected what a dangerous strain their occupation will put upon their principles, and whether they are strong enough to stand it.

Another very serious point is the employment of women and girls in the bar. We deeply regret that Parliament has not only not forbidden the employment of barmaids, but has refused even to curtail the hours of their employment. In the north, however, the chief evil is not the employment of barmaids, who may at least be supposed to know what they are doing when they take up their occupation, but the constant employment in the bar, under plea of emergency, of nearly every woman and girl in the house. We have seen in a large hotel in a well-known town a girl of 18 frequently employed in the bar supplying drink to the roughest characters. It is surely not too much to say that bar-tending is not a suitable occupation for a girl of tender years, and that at least no amateurs should be allowed to engage in it. We are not of those who think that much good will be done by indiscriminate abuse of hotels, or even by the prohibition of all selling of liquor, though we should contemplate the latter with considerable equanimity; but we do think that all Christian people should unite to cut down the abuses connected with the trade to the lowest possible limit, and to aid in promoting all legislation which cuts at the root of the evil, which is, allowing the seller of the liquor to profit personally, whether directly or indirectly, by pushing its sale.

Were this done the problem presented to the hotel-keeper would be a very much simpler one, and the whole community would gain enormously by the elimination of their strongest temptation to intemperance.

Sayings of Napoleon.

No one can deny that Napoleon had a gigantic intellect, however one may question his moral worth. Some of his sayings are therefore of interest as showing the attitude of a very great mind towards religious truth.

"In all places brute force yields to moral qualities. The bayonet bows down before the priest who speaks in the name of heaven."

"Not every man is an atheist who would like to be."

"There is between Christianity and all other religions whatsoever the distance of infinity."

"Paganism was never accepted as the truth by the wise men of Greece, neither by Socrates, Pythagoras, Plato, Anaxagoras, nor Pericles; but on the other side, the loftiest intellects, since the advent of Christianity, have had faith, a living faith, a practical faith in the mysteries and doctrines of the Gospel."

"The Christian religion is the religion of a civilised people; it is entirely spiritual. The reward which Jesus Christ promises to the elect is that they shall see God face to face; its whole tendency is to subdue the passions—it offers nothing to excite them."

"My son ought to be a man of new ideas, and of the cause which I have made triumphant everywhere. He ought to establish institutions which may efface all traces of the feudal law, secure the dignity of man, and develop those germs of prosperity which have been budding for centuries. He should propagate in all those countries now uncivilised and barbarous the benefits of Christianity and civilisation."

A Weekly Magazine for Children at Two Shillings.

We have received the first number of a weekly magazine for Sunday School children called "Our Empire." It consists of 12 pages with copious illustrations and costs a half-penny a week or 2s. a year carriage paid. It has a preface by the Archbishop of Canterbury and is issued by the well-known Society for the Promotion of Christian knowledge. The paper seems to be an excellent one and we heartily commend it to our readers. The Archbishop says "I am very glad that the scholars in our Sunday Schools are now to have every week a paper of their own. From all that I have heard about it, I am certain that it will bring to us every week something bright and interesting and new, besides helping us with deeper thoughts about a hundred things that we ought to understand better than we do." "Our Empire" may be obtained direct from S.P.C.K. Northumberland Avenue, London, W.C., in monthly parcels for 2s per annum, or it may be ordered through the Secretary of the Diocesan Book Depot, Bishop's House, Thursday Island. Payment must be sent with the order as the Book Depot makes no profit or commission on orders, and cannot incur any responsibility without prepayment. Fifty copies or more for schools can be supplied at a slightly reduced cost for postage.

This Creed.

An amusing instance of the tendency to identify principles with persons is reported from a certain parish in this diocese. At a gathering of children someone asked a sturdy little boy whether he was a Methodist "No, I am not," was the reply, "I am Gilbert of Carpentaria's."

This reminds us of another story. On the day of the Bishop's consecration in Sydney he was in a tram when a working man entered in a somewhat advanced stage of inebriation. He announced to the company "I'm not the Czar of Rooshia, and I'm not the Dook of York," and then catching sight of the Bishop he added "No, nor the Gulf of Carpentaria neither." For the sake of peace the Bishop repressed the obvious reply, "No, the Gulf of Carpentaria contains only water."

Volume XII.—No. 1. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1912

New Year's Message.

MY DEAR PEOPLE,—

I wish to send you a few words of greeting for the New Year. The year that is past has been largely one of trouble. The terrible cyclone and floods, followed by an almost equally disastrous drought in the sugar-growing districts, the severe visitation of dysentery at Thursday Island and Moa, the continued depression of the mining districts, the loss by death and removal of many Church workers, have all combined to make it a year of difficulty and depression. I trust that 1912 has better things in store; but in any case we must meet bravely whatever it may please God to send us. Miss White has this year accompanied me in my visitation of every parish, and I perhaps thereby have been afforded more opportunity than previously of becoming acquainted with your home and family life. I am deeply impressed with the patient and uncomplaining way in which many of you are bearing and have for many years been bearing very hard conditions of life amid very uncongenial surroundings; while I cannot disguise from myself the fact that hardness of conditions has sometimes led to hardness of character, and pressure of material difficulties to materialism of thought and spirit.

I am glad to note that the Mothers' Union and the Girls' Friendly Society have taken root in several parishes. I should like to see the former especially established in every parish in the diocese, for I am more and more impressed with the need of such work as that of the Church of England Men's Society and the Mothers' Union, work which is organised and carried on not merely by the parish priest, but by the initiative of the people themselves.

Owing to the generous help given by Mr. Christison, the diocese has been able to give considerable aid to poor parishes during the past year; and we go on in the hope that the continued diminution in population and depression in business will not continue for ever. There are hopes of a revival of mining at Croydon, which we trust will not be disappointed. In spite of bad times we look forward to the building of three churches during the coming year, and trust that they will be accompanied by a quickening of spiritual life.

We have largely increased our missionary responsibilities for the coming year. Our financial responsibility for Moa has increased by about £150 a year, and we have taken over the entire administration and management of Mitchell River Mission from A.B.M. for two years, at an estimate of expenses which will entail much care and caution to keep within the assigned limits. It is so obvious that the work can be done better from Thursday Island than from Sydney that I did not feel justified in refusing the request that we should take over the management, but it will involve much extra labour and probably some additional expense to the diocese.

In consequence of an emphatic warning that

I have been working at too high pressure, I propose to leave at the end of January for a holiday in the south. As it is the first time in twenty-five years that I have had to go south merely for rest, I cannot fairly blame the climate of the north. I hope to spend a week in Melbourne preaching and speaking for the diocese, but otherwise to resist all invitations to work. I hope to return as soon as possible after Easter. During my absence Rev. E. J. Nash, Subdean of the Cathedral, will act as Administrator, and letters on diocesan business should as far as possible be addressed to him.

Wishing you every blessing of God during the coming year, I am your affectionate Father in God,

GILBERT, Bishop of Carpentaria.

The Cup in Holy Communion.

We quote the following portion of a leading article from the London "Times" of 2nd September last, and we need scarcely say that we entirely agree with the sane and common-sense views here expressed. A large number of people in the present day are becoming hysterical hypochondriacs, spying evil and risk to their precious self everywhere. It is impossible so to reconstitute the world as to eliminate every risk that can be seen by morbidly microscopic eyes. We run a thousand risks every time we travel by train or steamer, and yet we do not stay at home on that account; and it is sheer perversity to abstain from Holy Communion because we conceivably run a slight risk once in a million times. The man who dines at an hotel or drinks at a bar certainly runs a far greater risk every day, for the perfunctory washing and wiping of cups and glasses is quite useless for the purposes of scientific sterilisation. Myophobia, or exaggerated fear of infection, is a well-known form of hysteria, and it threatens to become a public nuisance. The article in question is as follows:—

"The resolution of the Guild of St. Luke, a body consisting of members of the medical profession and clergymen, although it recommended the permissive practice of intinction, and admitted that, in certain exceptional circumstances, there was a possible risk of the communication of disease by the cup, nevertheless went on to describe this risk as "so remote" that no alteration in the present use was required; and we believe that this view will commend itself to the great majority of people, and not least to those who are best able to understand and appreciate the facts. A person with tuberculous disease of the lungs, in such a stage as freely to supply infective bacilli to his sputa, is far more likely to distribute such bacilli among the congregation by acts of coughing or sneezing, during the preliminary portions of the service, than to leave them upon the margin of a cup which he does little more than touch with his lips; and, even on the worst supposition, the condition of this cup will be incomparably better than that of thousands of drinking vessels which, under various conditions of use, are daily passing through many unwashed hands to a succession of neglected mouths. If the Communion Table has its victims by tens, surely those of the mugs and firkins of corn or hay harvest, or of the roadside publichouse, or the cups of common drinking-fountains, must be countable by hundreds; but, so far, we have not heard of any serious indictment of them. The truth is, we apprehend, that, given the existing amount of tuberculosis, the possible channels of infection by the bacilli are too numerous and too subtle to be entirely closed by any practicable measures of precaution; and hence it happens, as is now well understood, that only a small minority of the human race reach maturity without being more or less infected, although the majority are able to oppose an effective resistance to the progress of the invaders. Life would cease to be worth living if people in general went in daily fear of the tubercle bacillus; and a single fly settling upon the sacramental bread might easily be regarded as a source of greater possibilities of danger than any ordinary contact with the rim of the chalice. As for the precautions indicated by the majority of our correspondents, they are of two classes—those which, such as wiping the cup and the like, are absolutely, even ludicrously, futile from the point of view of strict sterilization, and those which, such as the possession and use of special drinking cups, capsules, suction tubes, and the like, would have a direct tendency to divert the mind of the communicant from the solemn rite in which he was professing to participate, and to fix his attention, not upon "the dignity of that holy mystery," but upon the immediate safety of his own perishable body. The state of mind which is properly required from communicants could hardly be maintained under such conditions."

Bible Lessons for Queensland State Schools.

We congratulate the Department of Public Instruction most sincerely on the Bible lessons lately issued for junior and senior courses in the State schools. The preface states that the Authorised, Revised, and Douay versions have each been carefully consulted, and the Authorised Version mainly followed. We could have wished that in one or two cases, such as "The Root of All Evil" as a title, the Revised Version had been followed rather than the Authorised, but probably the idea was to take the form of words most familiar in literary quotation. The preface continues: "In a limited selection of readings many well-known passages and incidents are necessarily omitted in order to bring the book within the compass of school requirements, but it is hoped that the readings chosen will be sufficiently representative and inspiring." We think that this claim is fairly borne out by the lessons. While the selection is not altogether what, as Churchmen, we should have chosen, and while in the senior course the tendency is perhaps to lay stress rather on the literary beauty than the doctrinal value of the Bible, at the same time it cannot be said that any of the main facts or teachings of the Bible are intentionally ignored.

Thus in the Junior Course we find the Creation and the stories of Abraham, Isaac, Esau, and Jacob, Joseph (five lessons), Moses (four lessons), Gideon, Samson, Ruth, Samuel, Saul, David (five lessons), Solomon, Elijah, Elisha and Daniel; and in the New Testament the Nativity and Boyhood, the Miracles of the Centurion's Servant, the Daughter of Jairus, and the Raising of the Widow's Son; the Entry into Jerusalem, Betrayal, Trial, Crucifixion, Resurrection, Day of Pentecost, the Conversion and shipwreck of St. Paul, our Lord's Teaching on Humility and Mercy, Forgiveness and Prayer, the Parables of the Sower, Prodigal Son, Good Samaritan, and the Last Judgment.

The Senior Course opens with 35 Psalms, and 15 lessons from Proverbs, all excellently chosen; Ecclesiastes, ch. 11 and 12: the 35th, 40th, 53rd, 55th, and 59th chapters of Isaiah; David's Lament over Saul, David and Nathan, the Death of Absalom, Naboth's Vineyard, the Dedication Prayer of Solomon, and three chapters of Job, complete the Old Testament. In the New Testament the historical part is confined to nine lessons—The Last Supper, Gethsemane, Christ before Caiaphas and Herod, the Crucifixion, Resurrection, Stephen, St. Paul at Athens and before Agrippa. There are five lessons on the Sermon on the Mount, nine parables, and fifteen lessons on the sayings of Our Lord; and the series concludes with eighteen lessons from the Epistles, including—A Christian's Duties, Charity, Immortality, the Fruits of the Spirit, the Armour of God, Be ye Doers of the Word, Faith Without Works, the Power of the Tongue, Suffering for Righteousness, Brotherly Love, the Sons of God, God is Love, and the Holy City.

The selection seems to us as fair a selection as could have been made, considering the various views it had to be designed to meet; and the abbreviations and condensations keep strictly to the words of the original. We believe that these lessons will be of great benefit to future generations of Queensland children, and will form a fair base on which to build more definite religious instruction. It is not enough by itself, but it is probably as much as the State has a right to give; and we thank God heartily for the wisdom and fairmindedness which has guided the compilers of these books.

Death of Mr. H. Milman.

On Saturday, September 23rd, Mr. Hugh Milman, Government Resident at Thursday Island, died at Southport, during a visit he was paying to Brisbane on government business. Mr. Milman had been in bad health for the last two years, but the end came at last somewhat suddenly. A nephew of Dean Milman, he was a man of strong individuality of character and keen intellectual interests. A somewhat brusque manner covered a kind heart and a remarkable thoughtfulness for the weak and unprotected. As Churchwarden for many years and as member of the Diocesan Council his services were always at the command of the Church which he sincerely loved, and whose troubles and difficulties he felt as keenly as though they were his own. He was sometimes even violent in his denunciations of what he disapproved, just because he had a high ideal of what the Church ought to be, and he backed his convictions by liberal giving for the support of her ministrations. Straight and honourable in public life and generous in his private hospitality, he will be much missed in Thursday Island both civilly and ecclesiastically, while the loss of Mrs. Milman with her gracious kindness and wide sympathy will be equally widely felt, especially by the Mothers' Union of which she was the president. Much sympathy is felt for Mrs. and Miss Milman in their bereavement.

A Chaplain at Last for the Mitchell.

Early in this year (January 17th) the Bishop, through the "A.B.M. Review," appealed to the Church in Australia for a priest to go to the Mitchell River Mission as chaplain. He pointed out that for six years the mission had been dependent on chance visits for the ministrations of the Word and Sacraments, and asked how we could expect it to prosper under such conditions.

Nine months passed away without any response to this appeal, and then Rev. F. T. Lane, rector of Normanton, who had from the first been moved to respond, but had modestly waited expecting that some priest of greater age and experience would volunteer, came forward and offered himself, and has been gladly accepted by the Executive Council of the A.B.M.

While we are proud of the fact that the first to volunteer is a priest who received his first training for the work of the ministry at Bishop's College, Thursday Island, and is still working in the diocese, we cannot but feel that Mr. Lane's departure from Normanton, where he has done such good work, is a serious loss to our parochial work. If the Diocese of Carpentaria can spare one of its ten clergy for mission work, is it too much to ask the Australian Church at least to spare one of its thousand clergy to fill Mr. Lane's post at Normanton? We trust that this appeal will not also be in vain, as Mr. Lane cannot well leave for his new work until his successor is found.

Church Restoration at Port Douglas and Mossman.

The response to the appeal on behalf of the churches destroyed by the cyclone at Port Douglas and Mossman has been most generous.

In all a sum of nearly £690 has been received, and we subjoin an interim list of the donors.

At Port Douglas the church and rectory have been rebuilt, and the Bishop held the first services in the new church on Sunday, November 19th. The church, much smaller than the old building which had become too large for the diminished population, has been erected next the rectory on an allotment on the hill near the jetty and tram station, the old site at the other end of the town being out of the way and subject to flood. The church was filled to overflowing on the occasion of the Bishop's visit, and we hope that it will have a future of real usefulness before it.

At Mossman nothing has yet been done, as it was thought best to wait until we knew to some extent what funds we should have. After paying about £200 for the removal of the wreckage and rebuilding the church and rectory at Port Douglas, over £400 remains in hand towards the church at Mossman. As good and cheap stone and sand are available locally it has been proposed to build in brick and concreted stone, and a very admirable design has been prepared. If the cost should prove anywhere within reach an effort will thus be made to secure a permanent building which will resist any future cyclone. The designs have been submitted to a southern architect for approval, and the Parish Council hope shortly to obtain estimates. Meanwhile the little iron hall has been enlarged, and now comfortably holds the congregation, though nothing can make it look like a church, and it will be imperfectly watertight during the wet season.

The Bishop and Miss White spent a week at Mossman, and visited several of the surrounding cane farms. On Sunday the services were hearty and well attended. In the afternoon the Bishop confirmed seven female and two male candidates. At Port Douglas a branch of the Mothers' Union has been formed, and at Mossman a branch of the Girls' Friendly Society.

Normanton.

After visiting Burketown and district the Bishop and Miss White arrived here on 8th October. In view of the fact that it was about 1.30 p.m. when the boat arrived at the wharf, we were most agreeably surprised during Sunday School to receive a visit from our Bishop and his sister. Miss White spoke to the children about the Band of Hope, and the Heralds of the King, and invited them to a meeting on Saturday. At Evensong the Bishop preached on the text "He steadfastly set His face to go up to Jerusalem," and strikingly illustrated the transfiguration of the human face by the spirit and sent us away with the feeling that not only will our character express itself through the features, but, that those features should reveal the fact that, even if the night be one of doubt and sorrow, we have steadfastly to set ourselves "journeying home to God." Monday was devoted to correspondence and visiting. Tuesday began with a celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m. and a busy morning and afternoon were followed by a social in the evening which gave the Bishop an opportunity of meeting parishioners, and Miss White a chance of chatting about the Mothers' Union and Girls' Friendly Society. The Bishop when acknowledging the welcome extended to him on behalf of the Parishioners by Mr. Eaton, said that he felt something like a commercial traveller must feel, only that their special lines were the Mothers' Union and G. F. Society, with Band of Hope and Heralds of the King as side lines, and he hoped too that someday the C.E.T.S. and the C.E.M.S. would have a branch at Normanton. After inviting the Mothers present to a meeting on Wednesday, he sought to cheer us along the way of steady perseverance in matters spiritual and church work, regaling us with the story of the ultimate salvation of the optimistic frog and the wonderful character of Sir Francis Drake and his determination to carry things through in spite of all difficulties, and so pleading for that determination in religious matters which we so often display in connection with less important affairs. On Wednesday a branch of the Mothers' Union was formed. Before enrolment the Bishop and Miss White explained the principles and object of the Mothers' Union and emphasized the great and grave need for such a Union in view of the fact that the training of children rests so much with the Mothers and at the very time (i.e. earliest years of life) when intelligent and religious training is most effectual for after life. The Bishop drew attention to the serious moral falling off in Australia, the manifest lack of discipline and carelessness in regard to the bringing up of children, and pointed out that good success will depend on the understanding of the need for effort by a few who are prepared to work for principles, such principles as tend to preserve the sanctity of marriage and family life which if corrupt spells ruin to a nation. It is useless to maintain the attitude of the silly ostrich who pokes his head in a bush and feels quite safe. In this case ignorance though it may be temporarily blissful is not wise. After illustrating the way impressions are formed on the brain of a young child and habits formed, the Bishop pointed out the enormous injury which is done to young children in the "spoiling" process too frequently followed by parents. Parents are guardians of souls as well as bodies. The Mothers' Union is for gaining the best and latest knowledge on the training of children physically, morally, spiritually. Prayer and example both indispensable: by prayer we can accomplish the impossible; for it is accomplished by God through prayer. The M.U. is Empire Wide.

A Branch was afterwards formed and at their first meeting Mrs Sherrin was elected Secretary. At Evensong the Bishop laid stress upon the need of steadily working, though reward in the shape of tangible results be not perceived. A breakwater may take years in building and as the stones disappear beneath the ocean waves seem labour lost, it is not so. "God works in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform." Even if the Church's progress is slow yet it has and tends to hold back the press of Evil.

On Thursday a meeting conducted by Miss White ultimately resulted in the formation of a senior and junior branch of the Girls' Friendly Society under the guidance of working associates Mrs Laver and Mrs Sherrin respectively.

In the evening the Bishop delivered a public lecture on the question "What is truth?" The lecture was very attentively listened to by those present and thoroughly appreciated.

At the monthly Parochial Council meeting on Friday night the Wardens and Councillors were much encouraged by the Bishops sympathetic interest and the offer of a diocesan grant towards the lining and painting of the interior of the Church, and repairs to windows and doors.

On Saturday afternoon Miss White after an address by the Bishop which held the children's attention throughout, enrolled twelve children as members of the Band of Hope, and also conducted the first meeting of the Girls' Friendly Society (seniors) in the evening.

Sunday was a happy day and comprised Holy Communion at 7.30 and 11 a.m.; Matins at 10; Children's service, 3 p.m.; Baptism and Churching at 4 p.m.; admission of G.F.S. associates at 4.30; Evensong at 8 p.m. The Bishop preaching at all services and officiating at the special services.

On Wednesday, St. Luke's Day the Bishop was the celebrant at 7.30 a.m. and addressed the children at 8.45 a.m. and preached at Evensong on the parable of Dives and Lazarus comparing the treatment of Lazarus by Dives with the treatment of Australia and the Church as a whole, in time past towards the aborigines.

The Francis Pritt.

The new ship is approaching completion although we do not take delivery until April 1st. She is a beautiful model and one of the strongest boats built in the Straits. The delay has turned out advantageously in that it enabled the best timber to be specially obtained from New Zealand, and as the fitting and caulking was done in extremely dry weather it will be unusually tight. Her great beam will make her a safe boat while drawing at most only five feet when loaded. Several little alterations and additions have, as is always the case, had to be made while building, which will bring her cost to close upon £400. Only £350 of this is in hand and we earnestly trust that the balance will be given so that she may be launched free of debt.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Tuesday, September 4th at 5 p.m. Present—the Bishop the Subdean and Messrs Allen and Sullivan. It was resolved to accept the proposed Church of England Bill which has for its object the making of the Provincial Synod a body legally capable of holding property on behalf of the Church of England in Queensland independently of any legal nexus which may or may not exist, binding us to all the alterations of the law of the Church in England. The Bishop stated that the absent member of the council, Mr. Milman had informed him that he agreed with the course adopted by the Council. A resolution was passed appreciative of the services rendered by Mr. Wells as a member of the Council and the regret felt at his departure.

It was resolved to accept the tender of Mr. Tachibana for the building of the new Francis Pritt at a cost of £373 12s 6d on the condition that the boat was ready by November 7th, if not, that delivery would not be taken until April 1st, 1912.

Mr. P. Eggers was elected a member of the Council in the place of Mr. A. S. Wells.

It was resolved that as soon as funds permitted a small hospital should be erected at Moa.

Notes.

Deaconess Buchanan will spend the wet season in Thursday Island and will then go to Darwin for probably twelve months for Church work among women and children there. She hopes later on to visit other parishes in the diocese.

The Subdean Rev. E. J. Nash and Mrs. Nash left on November 20th, for a well earned holiday. After visiting Kuranda they went on to Brisbane where they were the guests of Canon and Mrs. Pattinson. They hope to return on January 16th.

Rev. L. Ayscough, Th.L., arrived at Thursday Island on November 14th, and filled Mr. Nash's place until December 26th; when he left to take charge of the parish of Croydon.

We gladly welcome to the diocese Rev. R. Birch and Mrs. Bird who have gone to work at the Roper River Mission. Mr. Birch was formerly working in the diocese of Gippsland.

We much regret that a large case of Christmas presents sent by the Association for Missionary Service of Victoria arrived too late for the last boat to the Mitchell. They will have to be Easter presents instead. A box of books shared the same fate.

Two pamphlets, one entitled "St. Paul's, Moa Island" and the other "In the lonely North with the Bishop of Carpentaria and his clergy," have been printed and may be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot, Thursday Island, at 1d each or 9d a dozen. Postage additional.

Bishop's Visit to Croydon and Etheridge.

The Bishop and Miss White arrived in Croydon from Normanton on Friday, October 20th, and on Sunday the Bishop preached. On Monday he gave religious instruction at the Croydon Boys' School in the morning, and at the King about six miles distant in the afternoon, on Tuesday at the Croydon Girls' School in the morning, and at the True Blue in the afternoon, and on Wednesday at the Golden Gate. Everywhere the greatest facilities were afforded and the Bishop was much impressed by the greatness of the opportunity now afforded to the Clergy. On Saturday, St. Simon St. Jude's day, the Bishop conducted a Quiet Day for the Clergy commencing at 5 p.m. the previous day. There were present Rev. J. Pranker, Croydon; Rev F. T. Lane, Normanton; and Rev. A. McD. Hassell, Georgetown. On Sunday the Bishop preached at Golden Gate in the morning, and in the evening confirmed four male and twelve female candidates at Croydon.

On Wednesday, November 1st, the Bishop and Miss White accompanied by Rev. A. McD. Hassell left Croydon at 4 a.m. by coach and arrived at the Gilbert River at 2 p.m. A very hearty service was held at night under the bough shed near the State School, some of the settlers coming in four or five miles. Early next morning a celebration of Holy Communion was held at a private house on the banks of the river. After breakfast Mr. Hassell drove the Bishop and Miss White in a buggy kindly lent by Mr. Wilson to Forest Home Station where in the evening the Bishop confirmed two candidates from the neighbourhood. Next morning a celebration of Holy Communion was held with eight communicants. After breakfast the party were again on the road and drove to the house of Mr. Henry about 12 miles further up the river for lunch. About two inches of rain had fallen and there was a nice shoot in the grass. After lunch Crooked Creek was reached and here service was held at night in Mrs. Nielson's dining room. A start was made before 6 a.m. the following morning, and after breakfast at Cumberland, Georgetown was reached by midday. In the evening the Bishop gave an address to communicants in the Church. On the following day Sunday there were celebrations of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m. and 11 a.m., with about 25 communicants. The Bishop preached in the morning and evening and addressed the children in the afternoon besides baptising four children. On Monday morning he gave religious instruction at the State School, and in the afternoon drove out to Durham where service was held in the evening in the open air as there was a full moon. About 90 people were present and the singing was most hearty. On Tuesday the Bishop visited the Hospital and other places, and the party left again by buggy at 5.50 a.m. for Big Reef. Stopping for breakfast at Mr. Schaffert's, Donnyville, Big Reef, about 80 miles distant was reached at 1.30 p.m. after a hot and trying drive, the weather as all along the route being extremely hot. At Big Reef Mr. and Mrs. MacGeorge kindly entertained the Bishop and Miss White, and at night service was held in the school. Big Reef is 1,700 feet above the sea and the night was pleasantly cool. A celebration of Holy Communion was held in the school at 6.30 a.m., and after breakfast the party drove on to the Havelock where Messrs MacGeorge and Pratt showed them over the large concentrating works being erected for the Etheridge Gold Mining Company at a cost of some £25,000. It is hoped that they will be completed in about three months time. At present water is extremely scarce everywhere, the whole country east of Forest Home is entirely dried up, but the dam at Big Reef has been enlarged to hold 55,000,000 gallons when the rain does come. The works will consume about a million gallons a week, in spite of elaborate arrangements for cooling the water and using it over again. After lunch at Mr. Pratt's the party went on to Forsayth the new town at the head of the railway, and about a mile and a half from the old town of Charleston. Buildings are springing up in every direction and with the new works at Havelock two miles away the place bids fair to be permanent for a time at any rate. An excellent allotment of half an acre situated on rising ground near the Railway Station has been presented to the church by a local resident, and has been already fenced in. It is hoped that it may be possible to erect a church at no distant date. On the following day the Bishop drove out to Charleston and gave an hour's religious instruction at the State school which was excellently well attended and listened to by the large number of children who have as yet no opportunity of attending Sunday school. On Saturday the Bishop went out again to the Havelock, and on Sunday preached morning, afternoon and evening at the services held in the hall situated between the two hotels which is at present the only possible place where service can be held. The Bishop and Miss White left by the early train on Monday morning for Mount Molloy and Port Douglas.

The Bishop was much impressed by the excellent work which is being done in the district in the face of exceptional difficulties by Rev. A. McD. Hassell, and by the care which had been taken in ordering beforehand every detail of a most successful visitation of the district.

BURKETOWN.

Early in September, Rev. F. Lane visited Burketown, riding over the 150 miles from Normanton on his bicycle. He held services on the Sunday and prepared candidates for confirmation.

On Sunday, September 17th, the Bishop and Miss White arrived. The Bishop visited the Sunday School, which Miss Walden has continued for many years amid many difficulties and discouragements. In the evening service was held at the Divisional Hall.

Burketown has sadly diminished in size. There are now only 35 houses as against 47 on the Bishop's last visit two years ago. When one learns what the expense of living is owing to the enormous cost of sea carriage from the south, one wonders that anyone lives in Burketown at all. The following morning the Bishop left on a visit to the stations returning on Friday, September 29th. Sunday, October 1st, was a busy day ecclesiastically for Burketown. At 8 a.m. there was a celebration of Holy Communion in the Divisional Hall, and at 10.30 a.m. there was a confirmation followed by Holy Communion. In the afternoon a most successful meeting was held as the result of previous work by Miss White, and a branch of the Mothers' Union was formed which was large and representative considering the size of the place. Mrs. Finlay was appointed Hon. Secretary and several ladies on outside stations have signified their intention of joining the union, for which regular monthly meetings were arranged. A branch of the Girls' Friendly Society has been also started under the charge of Miss Walden. On Sunday evening a well attended service was held in the Divisional Hall. On Tuesday the Bishop gave Religious Instruction in the State School, leaving for Normanton on Wednesday.

ST. MICHAEL AND ALL ANGELS' CHURCH, GEORGETOWN.

A very handsome Brass Altar Cross has been presented to the above church by Mrs. Nimmo, in memory of her husband. The cross bears the inscription:—

"TO THE GLORY OF GOD

AND IN MEMORY OF J. R. NIMMO OF OAK PARK, DIED FEBRUARY, 1905.

Also we have received word through the Carpentarian Association in England, that an Oak Sanctuary Chair has been presented to the church, and despatched, so we may expect it at any time now.

The chair will be a specially interesting addition to the church, as it is an oak facsimile of the Glastonbury chair.

The same donor is also sending four sets of Book markers.

A Missionary Wedding.

Mr. B. Cole, the new Superintendent of St. Paul's Mission, Moa, was married to Nurse Monaghan, of Townsville, in the Cathedral at Thursday Island, by the Bishop of Carpentaria at ten a.m. on Thursday, December 7th. The bride was given away by Mr. McKee, and the Rev. L. Vyscough acted as best man. Miss Gwen Walker and Master Jack Walker were in attendance on the bride, who looked charming in a pretty dress of soft white silk with a lace fichu and large grey hat. "The voice that breathed o'er Eden" was sung by the choir as the bride entered the Cathedral, and the Wedding March was played as the happy pair left the building. The Bishop gave a short but impressive address on the duties and responsibilities of the married state, pointing out the opportunity that lay before them to set before those in their care at the Mission Station a high ideal of marriage.

A number of friends were present, who afterwards adjourned to Bishop's House for light refreshments. Mrs. Cole was the recipient of some very pretty and useful presents from her new friends on Thursday Island. Mr. and Mrs. Cole left in the "Goodwill" for Badu, where they spent a short honeymoon, Mr. and Mrs. Walker kindly taking them on to their new home on the Saturday. The bride's going-away dress was a very pretty silver-grey muslin.

Needless to say they received a very warm welcome from all the people at Moa.

Subscriptions for 1912 are now due and should be paid without delay.

The Intelligence of Savages.

Dr. Walter E. Roth has been writing in the London "Times" on the above subject, and as the Doctor has drawn his illustrations from a tribe of Queensland Blacks, some extracts from his article may prove interesting. He says:—"It has always seemed to me that the degree of intelligence of very primitive races must be gauged by their conception of abstract ideas, coupled with the adaptability of their mental powers when confronted with civilizing influences. It was somewhat on these lines that a comprehensive study was made of the structure of the language of an undoubtedly primitive people, that of the aborigines living around the mouth of the Endeavour River, North Queensland. In this inquiry the results of which were published by the State Government (1901), I had the hearty co-operation and assistance of the Lutheran missionaries stationed at Hope Valley, Cape Bedford, both of them scholars, who had spent some 20 years among these children of nature, in a state of comparative isolation, communicating with them, not in German or English, but in the native dialect. This is known as the Kokoyimidir—i.e., speech similar—and contains some 900 distinct words. Peculiar interest was attached to the investigation in that the subject-matter was the first Australian language of which Europe ever received a record, the list of some 50 words given by Captain Cook being all more or less recognizable at the present day. Confirmation was also obtained of the intrepid old navigator's correctness of the word "kangaroo," the name still applied ("ganguru") to the largest species of local marsupial, as distinguished from three smaller varieties—the wodol, gadar, and bebal. In this early vocabulary there are evidences, however, that the sailor and the savage did not thoroughly understand one another. For example, while Cook records the thumb as eboorbalga, the dialect in question is deficient in any term for this particular digit. What was very probably intended was "Yerba balka"—i.e., "Thus make," "Do like this," &c.—the action of the questioner, in pointing the thumb to arrive at its name, being thus misunderstood by the person questioned.

Among these Endeavour River blacks the ear is believed to be the seat of sense or intelligence. "He that hath ears to hear," &c., used as a prefix to any important statement in the Scriptures, conveys a similar meaning. Thus it comes to pass that the man without ears is stupid, while one in the enjoyment of their full possession is intelligent, obedient. To close one's ears is to be obstinate; to see, with them, indicates remembrance, while a refusal to put them to use means forgetfulness. Just as we English folk speak of drumming something into one's ears, so do these blacks express persuasion by a digging into one's auditory organs.

There are several other abstract ideas to which these same aborigines give expression, but of which so far we have not been able to trace a rational origin. Thus they certainly possess their own special terms indicative of cowardice, fear or fright, rest and quiet, willingness, hunger, jealousy, seriousness or sadness (both expressed by the one word), happiness, laughter, dreaming, health and sickness (terms equally applied to flesh and spirit water respectively), friendship, news, and cleverness. Literally the local name for a dingo is "that which has fright for its mother," while cleverness—to make—translates our verb "to teach."

The various names applied to articles introduced with civilization constitute a very interesting series still further illustrative of the degree of intelligence met with among this interesting people. Wire-nails are known as fish spines, beads as button orchids (Dischidia nummularia), tobacco as smoke, sugar as honey, tea as dried-grass, scissors as a pair of teeth, a knife as a ground-down piece of shell and a ship (owing to its manufacture out of planks) as a flat bit of wood. Any basin, saucer, or cup (and also a jar, and "billy-can") is called a dunggalu, the more or less circular depression made by the sting-ray when resting on the surface of a mud-flat. In view of a pig always digging its snout into the slush and slime when searching for food, this creature is named the food-washer. A horse is spoken of as shoulder-child, the idea of pickaback, a mother carrying an infant on her shoulders.

On the other hand the intelligence of the savage has its limits, and the Christianizing portion of the work so ably carried out by the Lutherans above mentioned was originally hampered to a very great extent by the difficulty of finding a common mental plane to which the aims and aspirations of the aboriginal could be profitably raised and the ideals of the missionary correspondingly lowered. For when all is said and done, the nobler conceptions of human life, introduced with higher civilizing influences, are necessarily totally incomprehensible to primitive man. But once such conceptions are based upon ideas with which he is already conversant and familiar, a step is gained in the march of mental progress; it is only through the gradual yet sure succession of thousands of such steps that he will finally arrive at a true appreciation of the higher life. Thousands do I say? Are not these same steps, these little stepping-stones, dotted here, there, and everywhere in the mental landscape of the savage? The only difficulty is to find them, and this requires at least time, patience, sympathy, and special knowledge. A couple of examples may make my meaning clearer. Wau-wu, in the language under consideration, signifies the inside of anything, from a bag to a thatched hut, the inside of the body, and so the breath. A person breath-with is hopeful, while breath-without indicates the one who has lost "heart," and so comes to signify despair. It was this idea of the breath, as the inside of the body, coupled with its connexion to hope, "heart," and despair, which served as the mental plane whereby these Endeavour River blacks originally came to appreciate the meaning of the soul. To explain what is meant by temptation also proved a stumbling-block for many a long day, until by a happy inspiration there was struck the suitable mental plane which had for its basis the idea conveyed in the word badal, a verb signifying to taste, try, or sample.

All of which, in connection with other experiences gleaned from mission work in many lands among non-Christian people, has taught me at least three things. Put shortly these are—that the success of a mission does not depend upon the number of baptisms within a given period, that the quality of the work done is not to be gauged by the repetition of the Lord's or any other prayer in a language not one word of which is understood, and that no permanent good can possibly result until the missionary himself realises that the savage he is so anxious to divert to his own ways of thought and belief is an intelligent, rational human being—an intelligent, rational human being—not a fool.

Our Missions.

MITCHELL RIVER.—The Bishop has had a letter from Mr. Matthews, giving a cheerful report of all at the Mission Station and saying that they hoped to hold service in the new church for the first time on the Sunday after Christmas Day.

ROPER RIVER.—A letter has also reached Thursday Island from Mrs. Birch at the Roper River Mission. It came via the Katherine and reported all well.

MOA MISSION.—We beg to acknowledge with thanks the contribution of seventeen shillings from the children of the Georgetown Sunday School, towards the Moa Church Building Fund.

Also £2 from Miss Ursula McConnel for the Buchanan Hospital at Moa.

Tropical Weather.

Rain at last! We are more than half way through the wet season, yet this rain is very welcome. Tropical weather is not after all so certain in its working as the dwellers in the temperate zone imagine it to be. Here for instance we are told to expect heavy rains from Christmas to Easter, with the wind in the north-west. This year the rains were very late in beginning, but when once started gave us 26 inches in about 29 days. Then to our astonishment and confusion the wind shifted to the south-east and remained there for over three weeks, bringing bright and dry weather. The whole of February only produced 5 inches as compared with an average of 30 or thereabouts. At that rate the wells would never fill, and in a few months we should have to face a water famine. The natives declared that the wet season was over and there would be no more rain to speak of.

To-day all is changed, rain began at an early hour and thundered for hours on the iron roofs. The world I look out on seems to be dissolving into water. The view is blotted out by sheets of rain—the ground, though it has a good slope, is evenly covered with two inches of water, the creek, which has been dry and voiceless for a month past, is now a roaring current of brown, hurling its waters to the discoloured sea. A touch of the ludicrous is supplied by the little stone circle where the fire is lighted on washing days to boil the copper; it is full of clear water and looks as if intended for the reception of tame gold-fish.

But though all else seems to be in a state of dissolution, two things look fixed and permanent, they are the sida retusa and the "goat-weed" two abominable vegetables which neither dry or wet can discourage or abate. The former was introduced into Queensland years ago as a valuable fibre plant, now—alas, for ill-considered enthusiasm!—it is counted as a pest second only to the prickly pear. The goat weed is presumably so-called because its smell is so abominable that even a goat will not touch it until he is reduced to the verge of starvation. These two plants between them monopolise most of the cleared spaces in our island; at the present moment their young shoots cover our grounds with an almost unbroken sheet of smiling verdure. They can afford to smile; after weeks of hard labour at eradication, they have the best of the argument.

Meanwhile let us hope our ornamental plants are also enjoying the downpour, that the cocoa-nut palms and the frangipanni, the poinsettiana, and the hibiscus will rejoice our hearts with their various beauties in the dry months that are before us.

Parochial News.

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The Vicar and Mrs. Nash were away on a holiday from November 20th to January 16th. The time was divided between visits to Kuranda, Brisbane and Toowoomba. At Brisbane they were the guests of the Subdean of the Cathedral and Mrs. Pattinson. Mr. Nash preached in the Cathedral at the evening service on December 10th, and took one of the celebrations of Holy Communion on Christmas Day.

During the Vicar's absence the Rev. L. Ayscough took charge of the Parish till December 26th, when he proceeded in the "Warrego" to take up his new work as Rector of Croydon. The Bishop of the Diocese returned to the Island on December 5th, and remained in residence until January 22nd.

We have to record with great sorrow the death of little Yvonne, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McKee. The sense of loss is general and the deepest sympathy is felt for the bereaved family, who are so well-known and so highly esteemed by all.

The wet season was very late in beginning and when the first rains fell on January 9th, the Island was on the verge of a serious water famine. The remainder of January produced 27 inches of rain, but on the 31st the south-east came on again and brought fine and dry weather, the first three weeks of February only producing 176 points of rain.

The Chinese of Thursday Island appear to be in complete sympathy with the revolutionists in their own country. Some months ago the Republican flag was hoisted on the staff in front of the joss house and when the news arrived of the Emperor's abdication great were the rejoicings. An enormous number of crackers was fired off, all Chinese shops were shut for two days, and a great pic-nic was held on Horn Island.

Sir Robert Hart and the New Guinea Mission.

The "Adelaide Church Guardian" publishes the following letter addressed to the Rev. A. K. Chignell, B.A., of the New Guinea Mission, whose book, "An Outpost in Papua," has achieved a great success. The writer, Sir Robert Hart, who gained a world-wide reputation as Inspector General of Chinese Customs for many years, died shortly after his retirement from office and return to England. He writes:—

"I wonder will this ever reach you? I have just read, 'An Outpost in Papua,' and feel that I must write you a line to say how it cheers me to meet with a book that combines simplicity and originality, romance and common-place, healthy sentiment and sober fact—as well as a dozen other difficult to put together elements. I am sure you do not hunger for applause and at the same time I am equally sure it will be the reverse of disagreeable to you to know that you have given a week's pleasure of the most enjoyable kind to one whose eyes fell by chance on your charming suscept. I was near writing 'effort' but that would not do, for you have arrived! Every page contains something new and every line is worth reading, and I am certain all who peruse what you have written about the place and the people and your own work will take and retain a warm interest in life at an 'Outpost.' Having spent long years in China I am prepared to sympathise with all you say about the desirability of letting natives live native life and avoid insisting on their becoming Europeans when they become Christians. The various characters you have sketched make the men and women live before one's eyes and their every action awakens sympathy and interest. The Sobo incident is very amusing, and Nonis shouting 'Taparoro' and Peter's Sexagesima sermon—and hosts of other things arrest the attention. Your way of keeping in health, too, is most excellent: may you continue so, and may you long live to see more soldiers recruited for the army of Our King!

Please excuse me for jumping in on you thus, and accept my thanks and best wishes for yourself, your work, and your dear people!

—Yours sincerely,

ROBERT HART.

Thursday Island Industries.

The "Torres Straits Pilot" publishes the following statistics of our local industries. The first amount given in each case is the figure for 1911; the second is that for 1910, for the sake of comparison:—

Number of diving boats engaged, 188: 192.
Value of boats and equipment, £59,000; £50,000.

Quantity of pearlshell obtained, inclusive of blacklip, &c., 457 tons; 587 tons. Value, £84,545; £83,000.

Value of pearls obtained, £12,151; £1,100.

Quantity of bêche-de-mer obtained, 290½ tons; 221 tons. Value, £16,370; £12,785.

Quantity of tortoiseshell obtained, 916lb.; 1848lb. Value, £437; £838.

Revenue from licenses, £1155; £1122.

Revenue from leases, £50; from fines, £6.

Re pearls! The above represents the value declared to H.M. Customs. The greater number of the pearls obtained in the industry are the property of the Japanese divers, and the figures are given for what they may be worth, since declarations as to worth are not made in every case. Usually the percentage of value of pearls to pearlshell is approximated at about 10 per cent.

The Northern Territory.

The A.B.M. Review has the following notes about the measures taken by the Federal Government with regard to the Territory:—

The appointment of Professor Gilruth, of Melbourne University, as Administrator of the Northern Territory, at a salary of £1750 p.a., shows that the Federal Government is determined to establish an adequate Civil Service and to develop the country.

All friends of the Aborigines will rejoice that the new Administrator is strongly sympathetic with the native inhabitants. A few sentences which occurred in his narrative of his travels with the scientific expedition which explored the Territory last year, showed his sympathies plainly enough.

With Professor Gilruth at the head of the Administration, and Professor Spencer as Chief Protector of the Aborigines, with extraordinary powers, the prospect for the native race in that vast region is better than it has ever been in any part of Australia, since the beginning of colonization.

The Federal Government is setting an example of humanity and liberality to the States—and this is only what should be expected. Its duty is to look at matters from the national point of view—national responsibility, national honour. Before very long all the 75,000 Aborigines who survive in Australia should be brought under the care of a single national authority and administration. In the meantime, if we cannot have national control, at all events let us aim at a national standard of treatment, which will save us from shame in the eyes of the civilised world.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on December 19th. Present—the Bishop in the chair, Messrs Sullivan, Eggers and Allen.

Proposed by the Bishop, seconded by Mr. Sullivan and carried unanimously,—“That the Diocesan Council desire to express their sense of the great loss the Council and Diocese have sustained in the death of Mr. H. Milman who was a most regular attendant at its meetings and spared no time or trouble to aid in its consultations for the welfare of the Church. The loss of his advice and experience will be severely felt. The members of the Council desire to express their sincere and respectful sympathy with Mrs. and Miss Milman in their bereavement.”

Mr. Lee Bryce was elected a member of the Council.

It was resolved that a sum of £100 be lent to the Darwin Church Wardens at 3 per cent interest for the purpose of completing the purchase of a site for the Rectory adjoining the Church, the land which is valued at £6.0 to be held by the diocese until the money is repaid.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Friday, January 19th, at 5 p.m. Present—the Bishop in the chair, Rev. the Sub-dean, Messrs Lee Bryce, Sullivan and Eggers.

The Bishop reported that the Government Resident had visited Moa and after consultation with himself and the Superintendent drawn up a code of rules which he believed would be of great service in defining the position of the mission and the authority of the Superintendent.

Mr. Phillips was appointed auditor of the Diocesan accounts which were presented to the Council.

It was resolved to pay a further instalment on the Francis Pritt, although not legally due till April 1st, as the contractor had done the work well and thoroughly, and studied the convenience of the diocese.

The Bishop announced that Rev. E. J. Nash, the Subdean, would act as Administrator during his absence, and Mr. Lee Bryce was appointed to countersign cheques.

St. Paul's, Moa.

Christmastide, festivities, holidays: the three are linked together and mean relaxation. Christmas Day was hot, but judging by the merry laughter seemed to be thoroughly enjoyed by our people. The carol singing early on Christmas morning somewhat interfered with the artiness of the morning service. Most of the boys remained awake all night to make sure of going carol singing, hence when the service was in progress many slumbered and slept. But they made up for it in the evening for they would not be content until they sung and exhausted their whole stock of hymns. The public dinner was the usual success. The dancing was performed with grace and great vim.

We were glad to welcome our Bishop and Mr. Lee Bryce on Boxing Day. Their sudden and unexpected arrival gave us no opportunity to arrange a fitting reception.

All the communicants thankfully availed themselves of the celebration of Holy Communion and were glad to listen to the Bishop's words of cheer. The baptism of Naomi, the infant daughter of Myna and Levi was an affecting little service.

As a grand finale to Christmas festivities our people visited their friends at Mobaig for a week. They returned to their homes in high spirits. Their friends had presented them with fourteen hundred coconuts for planting and two thousand for domestic purposes. The coconuts for planting are a very acceptable gift to replace the many that have died out owing to the long spell of dry weather. The welcome rains have relieved our anxiety, water was scarce and had to be carried a long distance. Things have wonderfully changed for the better during the last fortnight.

School was resumed on the eighth. Our members are slightly less than last year. Several of our senior boys have gone out to work. We hope that the training they have received in things spiritual and secular will be a strength to them in their walk of life.

May I acquaint our friends that we have need of an organ? We have opened a fund and hope very shortly to gather in the necessary ten to fifteen pounds for its purchase. It is one of the almost indispensable adjuncts to our life and education. Then there is our other aspiration—the building of a church. Our folk are gradually contributing from their earnings, but we cannot think of building with less than £150 in hand. Already there is upward of £86 to our credit in the bank.

Birth of a son January 15th, Nary wife of Sam.

On January 17th, the Bishop confirmed in the Quetta Memorial Cathedral four young men who had formerly been scholars in the St. Paul's Moa Mission School, and who were going out to work on the boats. They came in to Thursday Island in the Banzai for the purpose. The service was an impressive one and the four young men, Kosia, Johnnie Bana and Moran, listened most attentively to the Bishop as he dwelt on the importance of the step they were taking. Next morning they were present with half-a-dozen others at a special celebration of Holy Communion before they returned to their work.

In view of the immediate needs of the Mission the Bishop has obtained two hospital tents from Sydney, with stretchers and mosquito nets, and it is hoped that by isolation any epidemic may be checked. There has been one mild case of dysentery but so far it has not spread. Much trouble has lately been caused on Thursday Island by the wholesale way drink has been supplied to Islanders. The police are “endeavouring to discover” the offenders, but so far their efforts have not been successful. There is certainly much need for improvement either in the law or in the facilities for its enforcement.

Diocesan Council of Mother's Union.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council of the Mothers' Union was held at Bishop's House on Thursday, January 18th, at 4.30 p.m. The Secretary's report showed that since the last meeting branches had been established at Burketown and Normanton. Regret was expressed at the resignation of Mrs. Milman and Mrs. Nash was appointed Diocesan President in her place, Mrs. Eggers was elected a member of the council. A letter was read from Lady Arbuthnot saying that she hoped to visit Thursday Island about the middle of April, and that she would be pleased to stay for a few days and address the Mothers' Union. A long discussion took place on the best methods of conducting the meetings of the Union.

The Failure of Missions.

People often talk of the failure of missions. They do not know what they are talking about. As a matter of fact the spread of Christianity has been very rapid, especially during the last century. It has been computed that at the beginning of the century there were but 200,000,000 Christians in the world. Before its close there were 500,000,000 or one third of the population of the earth. If Christianity continues to spread at its present rate all the world may be Christians by the end of the present century. We must remember that not only is one third of the world Christian, but, it is the dominant third in culture, civilization and material power. Yet people talk of the failure of missions.

Volume XII. - No. 2. Thursday Island, April 1, 1912

Easter.

The philosophers of Athens found the proof of their objections to St. Paul's teaching in this—"he preached Jesus and the Resurrection."

The resurrection of Christ was to the early Christians, the central point of their faith, the inspiration of all their hope.

It was the Resurrection of Christ that had proved the truth of all He taught, that had lifted the infant Church from the depths of despair and sent it on its way exultant and triumphant.

To-day there seems to be a danger lest the great fact of the Resurrection should lose its central position and be held merely as we hold one of the lesser points of Christian doctrine.

There are several reasons for this. In the first place our ordinary life is so much more comfortable, orderly, peaceful, interesting and secure, so little threatened by war, pestilence, oppression and death, that the thought of the awakening to a new life which has cast aside for ever the trouble and sorrows of this life, even death itself, has receded largely into the background.

Secondly, the idea of law, order and uniformity do not penetrate, or at least not under conditions which we can register and tabulate, that there are still freedoms of the spirit and transcendental laws which override the lower uniformities. Men are beginning to recognise this in the field of psychology, and miracles are no longer a stumbling block to science which is producing so many of her own, but old prejudices die hard and there is still in many minds an idea that the Resurrection is something which requires special apology and elaborate defence.

Thirdly, the world has so largely learnt the lesson of Christian hope which was originally based on the Resurrection of Christ that it has in some ways gone beyond it and evolved a complacent doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul as distinct from the body, and united it with the theory of a good-natured Deity who is not going to be too hard on the soul when separated from its somewhat unworthy companion the body which has so often led it astray.

The Christian doctrine of the Resurrection is another thing than these popular fancies. The dependence of body and soul, and the fact that the body is a temple, not a guest-house. It recognises the fact that our earthly body is a body of humiliation, and that connected with the soul in every act of life it awaits with it the reconstruction of glory.

Te denique, corpus, vale,
Te, te citabit totum
Te conscium, te socium
Dolorum et gadorum!
Aequalis nos expectat sors
Bonorum vel malorum.

Above all, the Christian belief recognises that we place no hope in vague speculations as to the persistence of personality or in the hberings of spirits, none of whom can tell us what we did not know, nor in pleasing anticipations of the good nature of the Power behind the universe, but we base all our hopes for the future—and what is life without a future?—on our knowledge of the character and teaching of Christ, on our belief that He did rise from the dead as He said He would, and that by this rising He has opened the gates of everlasting life to those who are content to find in Him their life, their hope and their complete reward. This is why Easter Day is to us as it was to those of old—the greatest day of the Christian year, and this is why, when we say Christ is risen we stake upon the words all our hope for this life and the life that is to come.

About Suffering.

No. II.

January 10, 1912,

Dear ———,

Perhaps some further light may be thrown on suffering by considering St. Paul's words in the eighth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans—"I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." St. Paul seems to teach that suffering is a necessary and purposeful element in life, not hard to bear if you consider what it is leading up to—the "glory" that shall be revealed when we understand the whole process and look back on it by the light of the purpose which it has achieved. Some of the uses of suffering may be briefly noted.

1. It guards from much that is death-bringing, both to body and soul. Pain warns us that blows, cold, heat, hunger, thirst, are threatening to destroy the body; penalties, social disgrace, loss of health, warn us against following passion to the ruin of the soul.

2. Suffering has often a wonderful power of purifying and refining. Like as the gold is tried in the fire, so is the human heart often cleansed by pain. Nearly all the great saints have passed through the fire of affliction. "Before I was troubled I went wrong, but now have I kept Thy word."

3. Out of suffering has been distilled the purest wine of human utterance. The world's greatest poets have been men who have suffered. Facit indignatio versus. Where did Homer and Milton learn their majestic music but in the long dark hours of blindness? Where did Dante learn his song divine but in pitiful exile; and was not Shakespeare the product of a time when the late miseries of civil war and persecution had sunk deep into men's minds?

4. But the greatest use of suffering is that it throws men on God. When all goes well we are smug and self-satisfied. We think, "with our own right hand and the strength of our arm have we gotten ourselves the victory." It needs the keen edge of suffering to pierce like an arrow the armour of our self-conceit, to remind us that we are creatures of God's hand, to bring us to our knees and make us humble ourselves before Him; and to be brought nearer to God by whatever means is the greatest blessing that can befall man. St. Paul looks on beyond these things, however, to the "glory which shall be revealed in us." Some of us may have known in sickness what it is to pass through a night of horror and nightmare, and then how, when the day comes, all the suffering seems to pass like a dream with the first rays of the sun.

Seht Ihr in Osten funkeln?

Hoert Ihr die Englein singen

Durch's junge Morgenroth?

Then we shall see that all through God has been working for great and glorious ends, and though it was necessary for Him to teach us by suffering, that was only because suffering was the best of all ways in which we could be taught, and because to God's eye it was a small thing compared to what He meant to give us in compensation for it. "The glory that shall be revealed in us" does not merely mean that we shall be glorified, a thing which we probably feel we very little deserve, but that God shall be glorified in us. His dealings will be justified; His ways made plain. We shall readily admit and others will admit that whatever we have suffered it was well worth the price. If we could have our time over again we should not only welcome it, but even pray that we might be worthy by greater trials to achieve greater results. The glory of God, the wisdom, depth, tenderness, patience, and love of His dealings with us will all be so clear that we shall be amazed that we did not see that we were being perfected when we seemed to be only suffering.

Now, as ever, the cross is the price of the crown; but only he who fails to realise the value of the imperishable crown will count the cross too high a cost, especially when as so often we are not called upon for the initiative of self-negation, but only for the easier graces of acquiescence and patient endurance.—Yours very sincerely,

G. HALLIBAN.

Ordination.

On Sunday, January 21st, Rev. A. M'D. Hassell was ordained priest in the Quetta Memorial Cathedral at 10 a.m. The preacher was the Subdean, Rev. E. J. Nash, who chose as his text Acts xiii. 2. And as they ministered to the Lord and fasted the Ho'y Ghost said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. Then when they had fasted and prayed and laid their hands on them, they sent them away." The preacher in an able and instructive sermon pointed out how closely the modern service adhered to the ancient model with its recognition of the call of the Ho'y Spirit, its insistence on prayer, laying on of hands and ordination to a definite work. There was a large and attentive congregation. The Bishop wore his cope and the Subdean assisted in the laying on of hands. Mr. Hassell who had been spending some weeks at Bishop's House preparing for the Ordination left for Georgetown on the following day by the Warrago, by which steamer the Bishop and Miss White also left for the south.

Deaconess Buchanan has received an urgent request from Miss Gage Brown of the C. of E. Zerana Mission in Singapore to give help there again owing to their great need of assistance until other members of the staff can arrive. In view of the urgency of the need the Bishop of Carpentaria has given his permission for Deaconess Buchanan to proceed to Singapore and give the assistance so much needed.

Letter from Miss White.

The Bishop and I left Thursday Island by the Warrego on January 22nd, we called at the Rectory on arrival at Cooktown, and found Mr. Brown was sending his little son Bernard down to Brisbane in the Warrego, as he had been out of health for some time. He was put in charge of the Stewards, but spent most of his time with us, and was such a good, obedient child. From Townsville onward we had a heavy swell and nearly everyone was seasick. For my part, I quite agreed with Bernard when he said "I should like to go in a steamer again, but not a steamer that rocks."

We spent a week at Bishopsbourne on reaching Brisbane, and just came in time for the General Strike, which caused great inconvenience to everyone, and must have entailed real hardships on those who were living, as one woman expressed it to me, "from hand to mouth" even when everything was going well. As it was so difficult to get about, all the trams and cabs being stopped, we were not able to do much visiting. We managed, however, to spend a night at Dr. Gibson's at his pretty house just out of the town. We lunched one day with Canon and Mrs. Pattinson, who both have very pleasant memories of their visit to Thursday Island and Moa last year. Mrs. Burrell came over to see us, also Mrs. Webb of Charters Towers, and the Misses Plant. I paid a visit to Mrs. Boyd, the Hon. Secretary of the G.F.S. in Brisbane, who was much interested to hear of the development of G.F.S. in the diocese of Carpentaria. I much enjoyed going over the Cathedral. It is most beautiful, and the choir and sanctuary being so spacious gives an air of repose to the whole building. We specially admired the high altar, the front of which is a slab of marble adorned with glass mosaic which has the effect at a little distance of a rich gold frame. The whole building comes up to one's idea of what a Cathedral ought to be. How Bishop Webber would have rejoiced to see it. At Bishopsbourne the old wooden chapel has been pulled down, and a very handsome stone building is being erected.

On February 4th, we took the train from Brisbane to Sydney. I had a very pleasant journey down. At Warwick we had a few minutes talk with Mr. Glover, and hope to spend a few days there on our return journey. When we got to Sydney a newspaper man seized on the Bishop at the Railway Station, wanting to know all about the strike. We went for one night to the Metropole and then I came up to Darlinghurst, where I am staying at St. Bernards in William street. It is called a "Home for Working Gentlemen" and is really a most comfortable place to stay at, besides being within easy reach of the centre of the town. The Bishop and I have been looking up old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Munday, whom we knew first at Herberton many years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gray of Hughenden Station, Miss Robson, Miss Paige, and many others. A day or two ago we called at the C.M.A. office, and had a chat with Mr. Ebbs, who now spends half his time in Melbourne and half in New South Wales engaged in C.M.A. organising work. The Bishop is staying with Canon Beck, at St. John's Rectory, Darlinghurst. He would be glad if all letters and telegrams were sent to this address, as he will be travelling, and they will be forwarded to him. He intends leaving Sydney to-morrow afternoon (February 16th), for a visit to Mr. F. White at Exeter. After that he thinks of staying for a while near Cooma, and then if it is not too cold, going up to Mount Kosciusko for a week or two. In any case, he is due to preach and speak of the Diocese in Melbourne from March 9th to 18th. After that he has promised to spend a few days with Mr. Snodgrass at Geelong. Later on he will very probably visit Tasmania before returning to Sydney on our way home again. He is better for the change, but still feeling far from well. We had a very pleasant evening at St. Paul's College a few days ago with Dr. and Mrs. Radford, and have been trying to persuade them to visit us at Thursday Island. Dr. Radford will very probably do so later in the year.

It has been a great pleasure meeting Miss Rob on again. She is very busy, but is looking remarkably well and is full of interest in all our doings in the north. Yesterday afternoon Miss Robson kindly invited a few friends to afternoon tea at the Women's Club to meet me and we had a very pleasant little gathering. Mrs. James Mackenzie and her mother were there, also Miss Badham, the Principal of the Church of England Girls' Grammar School, who has twice visited Thursday Island, the last time only a few months ago. I met Mrs. Humphry of Townsville a few days ago, and am going up to see Miss Jean Mitchell of the Residency, Darwin, in a day or two. She is at school not far from here. Rain is very badly wanted in Sydney and in the country, but we think the flowers very bright and pretty, though they are not nearly so plentiful as they should be at this time of year.

The friends with whom I was going to stay have sickness in the house, but I hope to see them later. In the meantime I am staying on here. It is very pleasant seeing so many friends. We have made some very nice excursions—one afternoon we took Mr. Wilkinson up the Parramatta River; he is looking very much better for his holiday and hopes shortly to return to work.

Sister Esther arrived here from Melbourne today on a week's visit. We were very glad to see her again, and to hear all about her work in Melbourne. She still retains a keen interest in Thursday Island and Moa.

LUCY A. WHITE.

Motherhood.

We commend to the earnest consideration of our readers the following words from a powerful article in the "Hibbert Journal" on "Decadence amid Civilisation," by W.C.D. and C. D. Whetham.

"Let us now consider another movement which is greatly in evidence among us from a point of view that is not usually broached in discussing the matter. We refer to the endeavour to use women industrially, socially politically, on the same footing as men, all such uses being obviously, primarily, environmental, although some of their indirect effects are of sinister import from the point of view of the race. There can be no doubt that woman's essential function on this globe is motherhood. Statistics show that allowing for those who will not grow up, those who will not marry and those who though married will have no children, four children to every fertile marriage is the very least that will maintain the numbers of the race unaltered, while if the race is to improve considerably more must be borne and reared in the abler families. It is therefore essential to the race that the ablest, healthiest, and finest women should be encouraged, tempted, compelled if necessary by circumstances, to devote themselves to family life by becoming wives and mothers, and it is doubtful how far it is expedient to draw them off even for a time to other occupations.

We are inclined to classify men and women as the capital and income of the State. Now no sound economic enterprise can afford to allow its capital either to lie idle or to be spent at will. Tacitly the national system of economy by the scale of payment by their services has always insisted on a vital difference between men and women. A man's wages are calculated to represent not only his own keep but also a sum sufficient to maintain a wife and family. A woman's wages represent her keep only, or sometimes merely pocket money if she lives under her parents' roof. This means that it is recognised that a man has and can perform adequately two duties to the State. He can do his day's work and be the father of a family. A woman can perform only one, either earn her living or give birth to and bring up an adequate number of children in which case her payment is included in the father's wage.

As soon as the married woman becomes a wage earner the birth rate drops disastrously, or the infant mortality runs up. If we raise the wages the unmarried or childless woman will always have the advantage of additional comfort or living, which will probably have the ill effect of disinclining her towards the more arduous, more responsible, more exacting duties of marriage and child-bearing. Apparently for a time we can shift a great part of the burdens of the country on to the women, who can undersell their husbands and brothers; we probably effect thereby a distinct temporary improvement of environment in our own generation, for a woman of better education and character can always be secured at a lower rate of pay, but we are devouring our one essential form of life-capital, female humanity, and the process must end in disaster.

It should be remembered also that whenever by the employment of a woman we displace a man—never mind that he be a less competent one—he is thereby less able to maintain a wife and family, and thus some other woman is thrown out of her normal employment.

There is evidence that every improvement in environment—be it in education, hygiene, local government or where you please—effected by the employment of women is, if it is to be maintained, not only a charge in perpetuity on the income of the human race, but is almost certainly a direct inroad on its capital."

The writers proceed to show by historical examples that the use of women in public employment and political life has been followed by a temporary improvement in efficiency, but, at the cost of the national existence. The whole which is well worth study, and the problem that it deals with is most serious and pressing. The real question is whether the competition of women who only need to earn enough for their own support is to be allowed to run down the wages of men until a man can no longer earn enough to support a wife and family. If it does it means eventually national extinction.

An echo of the Coronation.

The following essay on the Coronation was written by Kitu, a girl of between eleven and twelve in the Moa Mission School. It was based on her memory of a letter on the Coronation written at the time by the Bishop, but without any special preparation or recalling of the circumstances, and was written in the course of the ordinary terminal examination. The essays of the rest of the class were but a little behind that of Kitu:—

"The Coronation is a religious service which takes place in Westminster Abbey, the oldest Church in London where all the Kings of England have been crowned. The service is conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury who is the chief Bishop of the English Church, and all the great men of India, Canada, South Africa and Australia came to see the service. First of all the Bishop takes the King and presents him to the people north, east and south and west to recognise him, and all the people cry God Save the King. 2. The King takes a solemn oath that he would rule his kingdom in the right ways. 3. Then the Archbishop anoints the King on the head, breast, and hands, as the Kings of old were anointed. 4. Then the King is dressed in the ancient dress of a Bishop to shew that his work is a sacred one trusted him by God. 5. Then he receives the Orb and Sceptre as the signs of his Kingship, and a sword is taken from the altar and given him, and to protect the right and to do justice. Then he is given a ring to shew that he is married to his work and life. Then the crown is put upon his head and all the people cry Amen. Then the Queen is crown by the Archbishop of York. Then the King and Queen first take of their crown and put it on the Holy Table and they receive the Holy Communion. And last of the service they all sang the Te-Deum.

Prof. Bergson.

The French philosopher Prof. Bergson has been lately attracting much attention by his lectures in London.

Prof. Bergson started as a materialist, and it was only by finding the inadequacy of any materialistic theory to explain the human mind and its workings that he arrived at his present spiritual position and became convinced that the human soul is incapable of inclusion in the realm of material mechanics. His first book "Time and Freewill" was devoted to the overthrow of the metaphysical argument for determinism, his second "Matter and Memory" to the overthrow of the psychological argument, his last book "Creative Evolution" deals with the biological aspects of the problem of personality. Prof. Bergson's work may be described as a reinforcement of the spiritual and religious aspects of the mind from the side of science. His influence is very great not only in France but throughout Europe, and marks a gradual but none the less sure reaction against the scientific materialism so characteristic of much of the thought of the latter half of the nineteenth century.

Christian Science.

In view of the influence which "Christian Science" (falsely so called for it is certainly not Christian and certainly not science) exercises on the minds of many who think that a thing must be good because it is novel, we reprint two paragraphs from the Report of the Committee of the last Lambeth Conference of Bishops. The first paragraph recognises that the Church has sometimes laid too little stress on those facts which are the elements of truth in a system which, as a whole, has departed sadly from the truth.

"The committee believe that Christ still fulfils in Christian experience His power to give life, and to give it more abundantly, and that the faith which realises His presence is capable of creating a heightened utility of spirit, which strengthens and sustains the health of the body. The committee believes that sickness and disease are in one aspect a breach of the harmony of the Divine purpose, not only analogous to but in some instances at least caused by want of harmony with the Divine Will, and that this restoration of harmony in mind and will often brings with it the restoration of the harmony of the body. It believes that sickness has too often exclusively been regarded as a cross to be borne with passive resignation, whereas it should have been regarded rather as a weakness to be overcome by the power of the Spirit."

The second extract gives the Bishops' view of so-called Christian Science "with reference to definite and indeed aggressive systems such as that which describes itself as Christian Science," the committee consider that the claim to heal all manner of diseases and organic troubles has not been substantiated, while suffering has been caused with many deaths, by the refusal to allow the sick, children as well as adults, to profit by medical attendance and care. Moreover, while desiring to express sympathy with those whose needs may not have been adequately met within the Church, the committee believes that a grave and emphatic warning ought to be uttered against the peril of being thoughtlessly drawn in alliance, in the desire for health, with any who, under whatever attractive name, are in antagonism with the Christian Faith on such subjects as the Incarnation, the Resurrection, the reality of sin, and the use of the Holy Sacraments

On Missions.

The three following utterances, from well known men who approach the subject from different points of view, serve to show how rapidly and completely Christian Missions are being justified in the eyes of the men who really know:—

Yuan Shih-kai, the new Prime Minister of China, when he was Governor of Shantung (the Times reminds us), issued a proclamation in which addressing the missionaries, he said:—

"You have been preaching in China many years, and, without exception, exhort men concerning righteousness. In establishing your customs you have been careful to see that Chinese law was observed. In regard to your presence in this province I willingly testify that it makes for good, and that the teaching you impart is calculated to benefit all who may embrace and follow its precepts. Moreover, its effects upon our people are beneficial, and do not in the least interfere with their duties as subjects of the Empire and law-abiding citizens."

Sir Donald Ross speaking at Manchester, said:—

"As to medical missions, they at the Liverpool School of Tropical Medicine were closely associated with them. Many of their students had been medical missionaries, and he hoped that many of their students would be medical missionaries. At that school they were in correspondence with medical missionaries in different parts of the world. They wrote to him for information on various points, and sent him specimens and information in return. He had himself eighteen years' experience of India, where he saw much of medical missions, and he could say that they were greatly appreciated. Since then he had been connected with work where the medical missionaries were doing splendid service. In his opinion the ideal missionary may be both a priest and a medical man."

And Mr James Bryce, in the International Review of Missions, gives eloquent expression to what most serious-minded people must be thinking at the present time:—

"There is needed a revival of the true spirit of the Gospel among Christian nations in order that they should fulfil their Christian obligations to those who are passing under their control and influence. The moment is critical and the duty is clear. We are becoming, in some countries we have already become, responsible before God for our treatment of these backward and non-Christian peoples. We are bound to provide them with a new foundation of life instead of that which is crumbling beneath them. Let the Gospel of Christ come to them, not as a crushing force in the hands of their destroyers, not as being the mere nominal profession of those who are grasping their land and trying to profit by their labour. Let it come as a beneficent power which can fill their hearts with new thoughts and new hopes; which may become a link between them and ourselves, helping them forward and averting those conflicts and sufferings which will otherwise follow, a bond between all races of mankind of whatever blood, or speech, or colour: a sacred bond to make them feel and believe that we and they are all the children of one Father in heaven.

Native Servants and their Critics.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has recently published a booklet on this subject by Bishop Knight formerly of Rangoon. The price is one penny. It proves the falsity of the statement so often heard that Christian Indian servants are less trustworthy than non-Christians. As a fact servants in India are drawn from certain castes which have produced very few of the four million Christians. Indians who have attended a Mission School and have left or been expelled often describe themselves as Christians, and that is quite another thing.

Rev. Evelyn Snodgrass having left Melbourne for St. Paul's, Geelong, has resigned his office as commissary to the Bishop of Carpentry. The Bishop has accepted the resignation with much regret. The appointment of his successor in the office of Commissary for Victoria at Melbourne will be made known later.

Letter from the Bishop.

May 7, 1912.

My dear People—

I returned to-day from my holiday in the South, having been absent during February, March, and April; and having, with the exception of a week's work in Melbourne, devoted myself to rest and physical and mental recuperation. I am thankful to say that I have returned in excellent health and quite ready for work again. I am thankful to say that medical opinion reports me quite sound and healthy in every respect; but I am warned that after more than a quarter of a century of work in the far North I must be prepared in the future to take more regular holidays than in the past. That I have been able to go on so long without them is no small tribute to the healthiness of the North Queensland climate.

I met everywhere with the greatest kindness as representing our diocese, which has so many generous friends and supporters in the South. I stayed about ten days in Brisbane, and came in for the strike. I am not, as you know, a party man either in religion or politics, and I have every sympathy with the efforts which have been made in the past and are still being made by the hand-workers of Australia to improve their conditions and gain a larger share of leisure and means; but I must say that the strike seemed to me to be singularly ill-timed and unjustified, and to have been carried out without thought for the thousands of women and children on whom suffering was the first to fall. At the same time I feel bound to express my conviction that the leaders were genuinely anxious to avoid all violence of the lower and obvious kind, not realising probably that forbidding men to buy and sell or pursue their ordinary avocations was an act of violence of the most serious kind, and one which could not logically be persisted in without leading to actual violence. To strike is one thing, and to forbid other men to work is another thing altogether. There is no cause in a democratic country like Australia with triennial elections for any body of men setting themselves above the law. If they cannot persuade the electors, they have no right to coerce them.

From Brisbane I went on to Sydney, where I stayed with my most faithful friend and commissary, Canon Beck; and then to the hills near Moss Vale to stay with a northern layman who has shown himself a most true friend to our diocese. I visited among other places the quaint old town of Berrima, with its once famous jail and beautiful old rectory, now, alas! empty and deserted. I devoted a week to speaking and preaching for the diocese in Melbourne, and then crossed over to Tasmania and spent a week at the Springs on the upper slopes of Mount Wellington with a magnificent view over the many arms of the sea and countless hills, which make the neighbourhood of Hobart so enchantingly beautiful. From here I went to Port Arthur, the old convict settlement on the Tasman Peninsula, and was so much interested in it that I remained a week sketching and exploring the neighbourhood. The Tasman Peninsula may be likened to a great hand, some fourteen miles square, planted down on the waters, with Port Arthur nestling in the bay between the thumb and forefinger, which ends in the great cliff of Brown Mountain. Next to it comes the second finger, Cape Raoul, pointing south, with its organpipe-like rocks of columnar basalt; while the little finger sprawls away to the west. This great hand, covered with knotted lumps of hill and hairy with rough forests, is connected with Tasmania by Eagle Hawk Neck, an isthmus not two hundred yards wide, and here savage dogs were chained every few yards, while the sharks were fed and encouraged to frequent the adjoining waters. Escape was almost impossible and Port Arthur became a hell upon earth. No man can be trusted safely with unlimited power over his fellow-man. In this instance real supervision was hardly possible, and there was much difficulty in obtaining decent warders. Consequently time-expired convicts were frequently appointed, and the unhappy prisoners—many of them transported for the most trivial offences—preferred death to the chain-gang and the lash. The buildings are now in ruins, having been destroyed by a bush fire some eleven years ago. About a mile away is a little island called the "Isle of the Dead." Here 1600 persons were buried, the free at the top of the island, the convicts below. By mistake a free man was buried in the convict portion, and when the mistake was discovered he was hurriedly dug up and buried in the other ground and a tombstone erected apologising for the error! Round a little bay was a separate prison for boys called Puer Point. Children of 10 years of age were actually brought out from England and kept here until they were 18, when they joined the adult convicts. No wonder the miserable little wretches used to jump over the cliff, still called Suicide

Cliff. Apart from the memories of its evil past Port Arthur is a beautiful spot. The houses are of solid stone with beautiful gardens, and there are two magnificent avenues of English oaks and one or enormous gums. The ruined church was designed and built by convict labour, and once seated 2000 persons. It is now ivy-grown, and for the first time beautiful. Port Arthur is, to put it mildly, not now in the van of knowledge and civilisation. Things are just a little quiet and antiquated. I had visited the post office and achieved the purchase of some stamps with some labour, when a girl came running after me and said, "Please, sir, are you the Archbishop of Canterbury? because there's a letter for you." The letter was simply addressed to the Bishop of Carpentaria, but both names began with "Ca-" and that was near enough for Port Arthur.

I returned to Hobart for Holy Week and Easter, and then went to a beautiful spot called Avoca on a branch line between Hobart and Launceston. It is about twelve miles from the foot of Ben Lomond, the highest mountain in Tasmania, and the scenery is very beautiful. On my way back to Launceston I had to join the famous Tasmanian express, which does the hundred miles or so between Hobart and Launceston in not much over five hours. Unfortunately on this day they were rashly burning Tasmanian coal, and the fire went out, and it was said that no less a person than the Commissioner had to descend and chop up sleepers to get the fire alight again. Anyhow, the train was late and missed the boat with fifty passengers, so that when we did cross two days later we were packed like herrings. On my return to Sydney I stayed for a while with the late Governor of Queensland, Lord Chelmsford, who retains the most pleasant memories of his visits to the North, and especially of his stay at Thursday Island.

In Sydney I met the Bishop of New Guinea who had to undergo two serious operations within a fortnight, but is now happily on the high road to recovery. His work is terribly arduous, and we trust that he will not be allowed to return before he is thoroughly fit. He was much cheered by the practical sympathy shown to the diocese while he was ill, subscriptions coming in sufficiently to pay off the overdraft that was causing him grave anxiety.

Miss White was unfortunately unable to return with me, as owing to a severe chill she had to spend nearly three weeks in a nursing home. She hopes to return shortly.

I leave on May 28, and shall spend June visiting the Gulf districts. August will be devoted to a journey to Coen with Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, and on my return I hope to go to Port Douglas on September 5, and from there to go to Townsville for the Provincial Synod on September 16.

I must express my thanks to the Administrator, Rev. E. J. Nash, for the careful way in which he has managed diocesan business during my absence.

Your faithful friend,
GILBERT, Bishop of Carpentaria.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Wednesday, May 22nd, at 5 p.m. Present—the Bishop in the chair, the Subdean, Messrs Lee Bryce, Sullivan, Eggers and Allen.

The Bishop reported that the loan to Darwin Rectory Fund had been repaid and that the interest on the additional capital of the Bishopric Endowment Fund amounted to £93 5s.

It was resolved to invite the Government Resident to inspect the South Sea Island Home at least quarterly and to advise as to its conduct and management.

It was decided to call for tenders for painting the outside of the Bishop's house, and to ascertain the cost of proceeding with the completion of the side wall of the Cathedral.

The Subdean and Rev. E. Taffs were appointed clerical representatives to the Provincial Synod at Townsville on September 16th.

Douglas Memorial Chapel.

At a meeting of the Diocesan and Parochial Councils held at Bishop's House on Monday, May 27th, it was resolved to proceed with the concrete wall to complete the proposed Douglas Memorial Chapel of the Cathedral. It is estimated that the work will cost about £50 more than is in hand, and those who have not yet contributed to the Memorial are requested to do so as soon as possible. We publish elsewhere a list of some of the fittings that will be required, in case anyone should wish to offer a particular gift. Messrs. Lee Bryce (chairman), McKee and Hannington were appointed a Building Committee. A local tender was accepted subject to certain modifications.

Bishop's Visit to Moa.

On Friday, May 24th, I took advantage of the fact that the Government Resident was going out to visit Naghir to get a lift to Moa, and thus save the journey of the Banzai into town. I was fortunately able to send out a message in time to prevent her coming in for me. We left Thursday Island at 2 p.m. on Friday, and found a strong wind and heavy sea outside. In spite of the fact that the wind was fair and we could use our sails the steamer was so slow that when dark came we found ourselves still some miles from the entrance to the reef, and as it was impossible to enter in the dark we kept on our way for another hour or two and anchored some miles beyond behind Moa Peak. Here we spent a somewhat uneasy night rolling at our anchor. Next morning we started early and ran back to Moa, and I was landed at 9 a.m., while the steamer continued on her way. I found Mr. and Mrs. Cole well and all going on satisfactorily at the mission. After a rest I made a sketch of the mission and then went round and saw the people and some of the improvements accomplished or contemplated. I had a busy evening; first came evensong and the baptism of three children, then a meeting of the men to talk over matters connected with the community, and lastly I interviewed the confirmation candidates, glad to retire to my stretcher on the verandah of the school, a pleasanter resting place than last night's rolling deck of the steamer, but the wind howled nearly as violently all night. To all appearance the mission is making real and steady progress and the new constitution seems to be working well.

Next morning at 9.30 a.m. all gathered for the confirmation. The John Douglas arrived just previously and the Government Resident and a friend arrived just in time to be present, and share in our worship. Thirteen boys and girls were presented and showed by their rapt attention, and earnest manner, their appreciation of the seriousness of the occasion. Just before the service two communicants, a man and his wife, came to me and said that they had a quarrel the previous day, and the man had been provoked into swearing by the woman's continual nagging, and after their "growling" they did not like to come to the Holy Communion without acknowledgement of their fault. Another man had been provoked in the same way and offended in like manner and would not receive, as I afterwards learned, as he felt his fault so keenly. Is there not a lesson for us all in this sensitiveness of conscience?

After the confirmation there was a celebration of Holy Communion with 31 communicants. Mr. Cole had made a full-sized altar out of all kinds of wood that he could find. Mrs. Cole had made a white altar cloth embroidered with red cotton, and the school looked quite church-like. The service made a deep impression and will not easily be forgotten. The people are still very keen about a proper church, and I promised to make inquiries as to the probable cost. They have already contributed about £90 towards the building fund. Altogether I had a very happy time and was sorry when I had to say good-bye and go on board the John Douglas just before noon. We had a slow but uneventful run in, and I was able to be present at evensong in the Cathedral.

We have now at Moa:—

Senior men	26
Married women	23
Young men	7
Boys and girls	54
Total	110

It will be seen that almost half our population consists of children, a good augury for the future of the mission and an especial opportunity for missionary work in training them up as good men and women.

Will someone give us a set of communion vessels for Moa? The cost would be about £5. At present the Thursday Island vessels have to be taken over whenever there is a celebration.

A priest of the diocese, in memory of his ordination, has presented the Cathedral with two Prayer-books, an Altar-book, and Litany-book. These books are beautifully bound and stamped with the name of the Cathedral. It is a very welcome gift.

Mitchell River Mission.

Mr. Matthews writes on February 17th:— "I intend sending boys to Delta next week, and I take this opportunity to report on various matters.

We have all enjoyed very good health up to date, and there has been no sickness amongst the people. Usually we have an epidemic of influenza with the first rains, but we escaped it this year.

We have had very little rain so far, barely sufficient to keep life in the young plants now just out, and not nearly enough to ensure any yield next year.

If we do not have a copious downpour soon there will be a famine this year. This week we put out 6,000 cassava plants, and there are several thousands more in the top paddock and at Angeram and Koongalara.

The patch of cassava at the mission has surprised us all. I expected half-a-ton, but we have already eaten a ton and only a third of the area dug up. It has given us a great lift with the rations. Without it there would have been very little flour left by April; now there will be a surplus.

We have also a larger area under potatoes this year, but unless we have much more rain we will have no more returns.

Mr. Woodd ploughed up the old garden with his team of bullocks, and we have one team of horses ploughing and another team harrowing, and with 20 boys planting the field has quite a busy appearance.

We have been holding services in the church since New Year. The cabbage tree walls are rough but serviceable.

We need at least four more draught horses, as the work is quite too much for our present team.

If I can possibly manage I am going to the coast next month to build a bridge across the Salt-arm. A bridge would shorten the distance quite two miles and make a straight road. Oh, for an engine and a sawmill! Nelson said when he was chasing the French navy before the battle of the Nile, that if he died and his heart were examined, "frigates" would be seen written all over his heart. I am quite sure engines, sawmills, and irrigation facilities would be written all over my heart.

April 16th.—The new Francis Pitt reached here on the 11th, and Iaves to-morrow. She seems a fine boat, certainly a roomy, comfortable one, though she still needs many fittings before she is complete.

Mr. Woodd feels the need of a change and is going to T.I. this trip.

We have enjoyed fairly good health throughout the wet season. The rain, though light, came when it was most needed, and prospects of a good harvest are favorable.

I have had some disappointments through boys and girls running away, but there has been very little sickness, and on the whole, there is little to complain. We will welcome my sister and Lane, and I am hoping to get much important work under way this year.

Don and Susie were married yesterday morning and we had quite an impressive little ceremony. I enclose a copy of the form used, which I trust will meet with your approval.

The settlements at Angeram and Koongalara are doing fairly well, but would do much better with a white man in charge.

The boy is waiting to take this to the coast, so must close. With all good wishes from the staff at Trubananman.

Bishoprick Endowment Fund.

The capital sum of £2500 given by the Pan-Anglican Congress Committee to the Bishoprick Endowment Fund of this diocese has been invested by the Brisbane Trustees in Government stock at $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent, giving an income of £92 17s. 6d. The total income of the Bishoprick Endowment Fund from all sources now amounts to £396, which is a great improvement on the £300 at which it has stood for ten years past.

The Strike.

The deepest and soundest criticism of the late strike in Brisbane comes from the official organ of the Labour party in Sydney. The Sydney "Worker" says:

"The Brisbane strike lasted five weeks too long; it should never have occurred. To succeed, the general strike must overcome the Government; it must set up government by the minority. Government by minority must be government by force; so that the general strike must hold any advantage it gains as any tyrant holds power, by force of arms. . . . If we are the majority we can take the government at the ballot-box; if we are not, we have no right to take it at all."

This is sound common sense, and we wish every worker in Australia would take it to heart.

We have an absolute democracy in Australia. Every man and woman, rich or poor, ignorant or well educated, has an equal vote. There is absolutely no excuse for civil violence. Those who resort to it are traitors to their own cause. They are really trying to show that democracy is unworkable. Possibly all have by this time realised that the strike was a tactical mistake; but what we want all men to realise is that it was morally unjustifiable to appeal to violence in a democracy where all have equal power to vote. As the "Worker" truly says, "If we are the majority, we can take the government at the ballot-box; if we are not, we have no right to take it at all." When the strikers forced the shops to close and forbade men and women to obtain bread or meat, they were contravening a fundamental maxim of democracy, and setting an example which might recoil terribly on their own heads.

We fear that in spite of the Sydney "Worker" the Queensland Labour party has not yet quite learned this lesson. For example, the repeal of the Religious Education in State Schools Act was put forward as a plank in their policy. In other words, they proposed to set aside within two years, and without any opportunity for expression of opinion, the most clearly and deliberately expressed opinion of the majority of the people of Queensland, expressed in a referendum held for the purpose.

Can the flouting of true democracy go further than this? We believe that they will continue to fail at the elections until they come to realise that our Government is really democratic; that where the ballot-box is open to all violence is absolutely undemocratic; and that democracy means that when the people express an opinion, that opinion must prevail whether it suits the party purposes or not. When the Labour party realises these facts more fully it will be much more fully trusted and supported by thinking men.

Personal.

Miss Matthews returned in April from her furlough in the south and spent a few weeks at St. Paul's Mission, Moa, before returning to the Mitchell River Mission on May 9. She has quite recovered her health, and was looking forward to her return to work.

Mr. Thomas Woodd paid a short visit to Thursday Island, coming up and returning by the Francis Pritt on May 9. He is in splendid health and not at all exhausted by his strenuous labours in superintending the gardening operations and looking after the cattle on the Mitchell. Mr. Woodd has broken in several bullocks to cart and plough work, and his services have been of great value to the mission. He hopes to go for his furlough at the end of the year.

Miss White, who was visiting friends in Sydney, unfortunately caught an internal chill while waiting on the wharf to see some friends off by a steamer, and was laid up in a nursing home for nearly three weeks. She has now happily recovered, and is to return to the Island at the end of June.

Miss Robson continues to take the greatest interest in the work of the diocese, and although continually occupied manages to find time to meet northerners in Sydney and show them many acts of thoughtful kindness. We rejoice to say that she is in excellent health.

Rev. John William Ashton, M.A., Rector of all Saints, St. Kilda, Melbourne, has been appointed Commissary to the Bishop of Carpentaria for Victoria. Mr. Ashton is well known in Brisbane as the former Rector of St. Andrew's, South Brisbane. He has now charge of one of the most important parishes in Melbourne.

Miss G. Broom was accepted for aboriginal mission work by the Bishop, but as a worker was needed for Yarrabah Mission he has arranged for her to go there for the present. Miss Broom has been a churchworker at Maldon in Victoria.

When passing through Brisbane the Bishop visited Nundah Theological College to see the three Carpentarian students. Mr. Charles Hall has passed his second year's examination and goes in for the final Th. L. examination in October. Messrs. Cyril Massey and John Parker go in for their first-part examination at the same time. We trust they will all do well.

Rev. E. A. Smith has been working at the West End, South Brisbane, for some time past. The little parochial district of which he has charge showed a gratifying improvement at the last Easter Meeting. He is entering for the Th. L. in October.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson was at last induced to take a holiday from his arduous work, and left for Melbourne in January. He returned to the Laura in March wonderfully recovered in health and spirits by his short sojourn in the south. Mr. Wilkinson is now visiting the Palmer and Mitchell, and hoped to be at the Mission Station in June.

We were very glad to welcome Lady Arbuthnot again to Thursday Island. The Mataram, by which she was travelling, was announced to arrive at 3 p.m. on Monday, June 13; and a number of members of the Mothers' Union assembled to welcome her. The vessel did not, however, turn up until the following morning and then it was announced that she would leave at noon, the time was subsequently altered to 2 p.m., and finally to 4.30 p.m. Owing to these uncertainties it was not possible to hold any regular meeting, but several friends came down to the Vicarage to see Lady Arbuthnot and her niece. We were glad to learn that she had seen Deaconess Buchanan at Singapore, and that her health had improved greatly after leaving Thursday Island. Lady Arbuthnot will stay for some months with Mrs. Milman at Southport. It is proposed to erect a brass memorial of the late Government Resident, Mr. Hugh Milman, in the Cathedral.

Enthusiasm.

Some people have a strange dread of the word "Enthusiasm." The literal meaning is probably "In-Godness", or "God-possessedness." Practically it means that a man is so ruled and possessed by a great idea that difficulties are made little account of, disappointments surmounted, and hope ever renewed. It means that when a man is so possessed he finds pleasure in all that pertains to the matter in hand; he bends all to it; he is never tired of dwelling on it, laying it before others, and seeking out those who delight in it as he does himself. It is characteristic of a true enthusiasm that other things gradually give way to it. It gradually asserts itself more and more. Look how the enthusiasm of Art possesses some people. They live for it, and for it alone. It becomes the one dominating passion of their lives.

And shall the enthusiasm of Christ be less powerful than that of Art to bend and subdue to it the whole nature? He who is filled with it can be daunted by no obstacles, and crushed by no disappointments. It transfuses and transfigures his ordinary work and occupations. It makes the sweeping of a room (as George Herbert reminds us) an act which may be done with enthusiasm as unto the Lord; it lays upon every common act and word the mysterious greatness which attaches to the sense of carrying out the plans of an infinite master mind. It gives a man the power of drawing others by the magnetic attraction that real earnestness and conviction always exercise. It is a factor that none can afford to despise. It is a power which reaches far beyond a man's own environment, for the enthusiastic man is self-forgetful, and there is in self-forgetfulness a close approach to that highest and most potent of virtues, unselfishness.

The following letter will be read with interest:—

"175 Joffcott street, N. Adelaide.
"10th April, 1912.

"My dear Lord Bishop,

"At the meeting of the Council of our Diocesan Missionary Association held yesterday, in addition to the sum of £44 18s. 8d contributed for the Mitchell River Mission, £25 was voted to your Lordship for the Boxal Fund. In accordance with the rules of our association, all moneys must be forwarded through the head office of Australian Board of Missions. The general secretary of the A.B.M. will doubtless forward the money to you in due course. But I thought it would be as well to write and show our sympathy and interest in your work.—I am, my Lord, yours faithfully,

"W. S. MILNE."

Volume XII.—No. 3. Thursday Island, July 1, 1912

The meeting between Mary Magda'ene, popularly, though without any reasonable grounds, confused with the woman who was a sinner, and our Blessed Lord is one of the most touching incidents in the new Testament.

Mary had been a witness of the great tragedy which culminated upon the cross. The beloved Master, full of love and pity for men, had been taken by men and treated more cruelly than if He had been a savage beast. He in whose eyes there had shone the light of divine knowledge, in whose words there had echoed divine wisdom, in whose acts there had been no uncertain gleams of divine power, had been mocked, scourged, crucified, and buried at last in the earth with the good and great of all the ages. But Mary's love is stronger than death—too strong to be crushed by the failure of earthly hopes. She will do everything—everything that she can. The lifeless body at least remains, a small part indeed of the living Christ, but all that is left to her; she will give it what honour she can; she will preserve it, after the manner of the day, from decay; she will pay the last rites of reverent love.

Then she finds that the body has disappeared. It is the last spite of the cruel persecutors, or perchance the indifferent act of an uninterested official. In any case the last link is broken. The Master whom she knew and loved is gone. All hope was over two days before, but now even the link of loving service is snapped; she can do nothing to show her love; "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him." The cry of Mary Magdalene is one which, at heart, is echoed by not a few devout souls at the present day. It is not that love has grown cold or that the lamp of faith is burning dim. They know too well in Whom they have believed for that; but they are bewildered, and little wonder, by the myriad forms in which criticism and incredulity show themselves in the present day, and the more bewildered that the criticism and the incredulity come often, not from those who scoff at religion, but from those who profess to be its exponents, who devote their lives to the study of the Bible, and often hold the position of professed theologians. They cannot escape from the atmosphere of the day; the old simple faith, and simple acceptance, seems impossible. They know that God is true and Christ is their life, but they know not what to say, or how to answer when some clever preacher says "I suppose no one in this church is antiquated enough to believe" this or that which has seemed to them of the essence of the Christian faith; and if they are to give up this and that, where is the process to stop? what is to be left? No wonder they cry, "They have taken away my Lord and I know not where they have laid Him."

Much might be said, and many arguments used to uphold the truth of the Christian revelation, but we may restrict ourselves to three thoughts which seem of especial value.

The first is this: Christianity is incomparably the highest ideal of life, combined with the loftiest conception of God, that the world has ever seen. It might seem at first sight unsafe thus to argue. It might be held the knowledge of men is limited by their generation and their upbringing, and that men have always thought that their own religion was the highest and best, and that others were as nothing in comparison to it; but reflection will show that this is not so. We are not in the position of men of other faiths; we know infinitely more of the faiths of the world than was ever before possible. We know as much of the great religions of the world as their own professors, and sometimes more. We no longer regard these faiths with ignorant contempt. We recognise that they are efforts after God, and often lofty and inspiring efforts; but we know that all that is noblest and best in them, and knowing all this we know, also that not one of them can be mentioned in the same breath as the Christian faith. Even if we exclude all that is base and ignoble in them as the corruptions of a later age, and select only that which is best and highest, though we may find passages here and there which may be compared justly to the words of the Hebrew prophets, we find nothing that can be fairly called a real gospel of hope for common men, nothing that can be put in the same category as the calm authoritative message of Christ; and nowhere do we find on the part of their founders the claim that Christ made, to be Himself very God as well as very man.

If, then, Christianity is incomparably the highest and noblest expression of religion that the world has ever seen, if there be not to-day, if there never has been in the past, any faith that can stand in the competition with it, can we believe that God cares so little for man as to suffer him to be utterly deceived in that which is best and highest? No religion worth the name is altogether untrue if it teaches men humility before a higher power, teaches him to renounce material for spiritual ends, and to follow righteousness for its own sake; and as Christianity teaches these things beyond all other faiths, we cannot believe that if God be what we understand by God, He would suffer humanity to be utterly deceived at the very point at which it reaches its highest spiritual conceptions and aspirations. Of course, it does not logically follow from this that there is no error or misconception of any kind mixed with our Christian ideals. Granted that Christ was very God and gave to us very truth, it does not follow that we have rightly grasped all that He said or did; there is room for much honest and reverent criticism, much just scepticism as to the validity of too easily accepted traditions and interpretations. It does not follow that we must believe exactly what our fathers believed as to the meaning of the teaching of our Lord and the contents of His Gospel. The way is still open for the Holy Spirit to teach us more, to guide us into deeper and fuller truth as we are able to bear it; but it does follow, if what we have said is correct, that we are not deceived in the main issue. It does follow that Christ is the Way, the Truth, and the Life; that He is the special and unique manifestation of God upon earth; that the Gospel of Christ is a Gospel for all men; that Christianity cannot acquiesce in being set down as one of the faiths of the world, but must regard itself as the faith which is bound to strive to bring all men to the knowledge of her Master and their God. I believe, then, that the Christian faith is true because I cannot believe that God has allowed men to be utterly deceived in that which is best and highest.

If Christianity is not true it ought to be, and I am content to believe that what ought to be really is.

In the second place, we must remember that the criticism of the present day has not yet stood the test of being itself criticised. If we look back upon the past we see how the Christian faith has been over and over again assailed by a criticism which seemed to its age secure and unanswerable, and how over and over again this triumphant criticism has been subverted and overturned by a later criticism, which in its turn has suggested fresh doubts and difficulties, to be itself overturned in due season. There is a reason for this. Critics are not a separate and distinct class to their fellow-men. Their only voice, in an extreme form, doubts and difficulties common to the general thought of the age, and it is for that very reason that their words seem convincing to their own generation. Another generation succeeds and, under the influence of a new set of ideas, wonders how their fathers could have been disturbed by a criticism which seems to them utterly beside the real point, which is, etc. For instance, in the fourth century the whole Christian world was in doubt and distress because the Arians pointed out that in the LXX. there was a passage in Proverbs speaking of wisdom, "The Lord created me in the beginning of His ways." See, said they, wisdom is Christ, and here we have the Bible declaring that Christ was only a created being. The orthodox were sore put to it, and wrote whole tomes to evade the conclusion. It never struck either side to look up the Hebrew, in which case they would have discovered that "created" was altogether a mistranslation of the Hebrew, which means "possessed," nor did it strike anyone that in any case the passage had no bearing whatever on our Lord or on His divinity. So taught wisdom by the past, we wait for the critics to be criticised. The difficulties they raise are to us real difficulties. Nothing but good can come from their reverent discussion. The critics are not always reverent, not always open-minded, but on the whole we owe them a great debt. Both Old and New Testaments have emerged from their hands stripped of the accretions of a false and often superstitious regard that hid their real character, but more real, more living, more thoroughly tested, more indisputable than ever.

There is no need, then, to be unduly disturbed by criticism which has not yet been criticised. The experience of the past teaches us to wait calmly and be thankful for all the light we get, and not to assume that the darkness that remains will never be dispelled.

The third thought is this: After all, the strongest argument for the truth of any fact is our own experience. We do well, no doubt, to believe what others tell us if they seem to be persons who are worthy of credence; but, after all, it is our own experience of a fact that works in us the deepest and fullest conviction.

If a man has done an unselfish and generous act towards me, it is useless for other people to tell me that he is hard and unsympathetic; my own experience outweighs all that they may say. If I meet and talk with a friend, it is useless for my neighbours to assure me that he is at the moment in a foreign country. I have seen and I know. So after all, the strongest proof to the individual of the reality and power of Christ is the knowledge of Christ Himself.

It is useless to tell me that God does not regard prayer, when every day I have had personal proof that He does. It is useless to say that Christ does not exist when I have felt His presence and listened to His words. It is useless to tell me that He gives no grace when I have gone forth from the Holy Eucharist strengthened by His Body and Blood. It is an argument, it is true, which makes no direct appeal to others, but to the individual himself it is overpowering. He knows what He knows. He cannot explain, argue, convince, but He knows. Yet surely even with those who have not experienced, the sum of the experience of those who have should weigh somewhat.

A vast array of the best and noblest of men and women of all ages, generations, and stations, young and old, rich and poor, ignorant and cultured, bear witness that it was not of themselves that they suffered and conquered and won the respect of men for their courage, their unselfishness, their purity, their patience, their love. It was in Christ and through Christ alone that they conquered their own nature, and did these deeds and won this character. As often as they trusted to themselves they failed. To Christ alone is honour due. From Him it all came.

It was surely in this spirit that Mary Magdalene turned herself at the sound of the beloved voice and cried, "My Master."

She knew. All that was best in her she owed to Him. He was the Way, the Truth and the Life; and what He was to her He may be to us. He may be hidden for a moment by the clouds of trouble, but if we are His we know that He is; and if we seek Him as Mary sought Him we shall find Him.

Only do not let us suppose that we can retain our faith without effort and trouble. We are face to face to-day with the need of fighting for our faith as Mary Magdalene fought. It has not always been so. People have accepted their religion without question and without effort, and in consequence our religion has been largely conventional and unreal. Perhaps it is not altogether a bad thing that to-day our faith has to be tested. As Mary believed and loved in spite of appearances, in spite of disappointments, so is our faith tried and tested to-day. Faith is coming to be a spiritual adventure instead of a matter of course. It is not that it is harder to believe, or that the evidence for the Christian faith is less than it was; the truth is probably all the other way; but men and women are more called upon to win faith by spiritual effort, to be more real, to be ready to sacrifice more for their creed.

It is worth the effort. It is worth any anxiety, any suffering, that we may come to know Christ as the great reality of our lives, come to trust Him for life and death.

"He saith unto her, Mary. She turned and saith unto him, My Master."

If Christ means to us what it meant to Mary, we shall be prepared to risk all, to suffer all for Him, even the indifference and incredulity of the world. We shall believe that He rose because we know that He is alive; we believe that He is alive because He is the greatest of all realities.

The great need of the Church to-day, the great need of the world to-day, is men and women who will show forth Christ now in their lives, men and women who because they have known what the love of Christ is and means will refuse to be swept away by the tide of luxury and love of pleasure, who will remain calm and trustful in hours of difficulty and danger, who will refuse to despair either of others or of themselves, because they believe Christ to be omnipotent. Men and women who can point out to a world still spiritually sick Him from whom alone they have derived their strength, and hope, and in Whom alone the whole world can find the healing of its soul.

Professor Harnack on the Gospels and the Church.

Two or three little books by Prof. Harnack are of deep interest, and we are surprised that they have not aroused more attention in England. Prof. Harnack is one of the most learned men living, and he cannot be accused of a prejudice in favour of the Christian faith, since his own point of view is more nearly Unitarian than strictly Christian. His present opinions, moreover, are the result of a life spent in critical study, and differ considerably from those that he formerly held.

In his recent book, the "Date of the Acts and Synoptic Gospels," Professor Harnack expresses his conviction that the Acts were written by St. Luke, and that they were completed before the death of St. Paul in A.D. 64. Hence it follows that the Gospel of St. Luke was written some years before this date. Correspondingly early dates are assigned to St. Mark and St. Matthew; and so we have the remarkable result that the latest German criticism, after starting with assigning all the Gospels to a late date in the second century, has come back as its apparently final result to fixing the date of the Synoptic Gospels to precisely that period at which tradition has always asserted that they were written. But this is not all. Prof. Harnack has always been noted for the scorn with which he has regarded the Catholic conception of the Church, and the way in which he has minimised its importance; but now the negative criticisms of a brother professor have roused him to defend with considerable energy the positive elements of truth in the Catholic conception of the Christian Church. His book on the "Constitution of the Christian Church" does not, indeed, go as far as an English Churchman would like to see it go; but it is an enormous advance on purely negative criticism, and shows that an impartial outsider must admit that there is a very great deal to be said for the interpretation that the Church has put on the scanty records of early Church history; and that it is impossible to dismiss its claims in the airy way which is unfortunately too common in critics and controversialists.

Rev. John Jones.

We are delighted to find that the new secretary of the Australian Board of Missions is to be one whose deep interest in missionary work, enthusiasm, and power over men, are so well known to us all in the North—Rev. J. Jones, B.A., Vicar of Thursday Island and Subdean of the Cathedral from 1904 to 1910. During the two years which have elapsed since Mr. Jones left us he has been engaged in organising missionary work in England as secretary to S.P.G. for his old diocese of Southwark, and has shown marked ability for the work. We do not think that a better man could have been selected for this most important post. The present secretary, Archdeacon Le-froy, has done splendid work as secretary, and the greatly increased income of the Board is testimony to the zeal and devotion with which he has worked. Ill health has compelled him to resign, and we believe that his successor will carry on the work with equal success. The news of Mr. Jones's appointment and the consequent prospect of his return to Australia was received with delight by his many friends in the North, who hope that his new duties will soon bring him on a visit to the Northern missions. Mr. Jones was recently offered the post of Organising Secretary for Queensland, but he did not feel able to accept the post owing to the claims of his family. He wrote lately to the Bishop saying with what intense grief he had felt obliged to refuse, and how completely his heart was in missionary work in Australia. We are most thankful he has seen his way to accept the more important post which has now been offered to him, as arrangements have been made for the heavy expenses of transport to Australia. We feel sure that he will fully justify the choice of the Australian bishops.

The Francis Pritt.

The new boat was handed over by the builders on April 2, and in every way has come up to our expectations. We owe a debt of gratitude to Captain Cleveland, who took a very great deal of trouble in superintending the work, visiting the yard every day while she was building and giving most valuable advice from his wide experience. She began at once to take in stores for the Mitchell River Mission, and on April 4 Rev. E. J. Nash, Subdean, and a congregation of about twenty persons went on board for the dedication service. Immediately afterwards she left for the Mitchell and had a quick trip down, arriving on April 11, and leaving again on April 16 for Thursday Island. The boat rides high and draws very little water, but is safe owing to her ample beam. She is very easy to handle, and meeting with a very rough sea one day on the way down behaved admirably and shipped no water at all. She will carry any weight that can be got into her with ease, and in spite of being smaller has considerably more accommodation than the old vessel. There is a large, roomy cabin amidships with three berths, a cabin for the captain with two berths aft, and four berths for the crew forward. The water tanks are moulded to the vessel each side, thus giving much more room, and the water pumped up on deck making it unnecessary to get at the tanks below.

Altogether we feel that the work has been most satisfactorily done, and certainly at a minimum cost when we consider that all the timbers are specially picked and seasoned wood, all the frames double, and the work as strong and solid as it can be made.

The Francis Pritt left for her second voyage on May 9, with Jack Giebo in charge and Mr. Woodd and Miss Matthews as passengers to the mission.

Pleasure.

St Paul remarks that "She who gives herself to pleasure is dead while she lives." He is speaking in this particular place of widows; and he was not referring to pleasures that were in themselves necessarily wrong. There appear to have been two bodies of women workers in the primitive Church, first the deaconesses who were specially qualified for their work of teaching and instruction; and, secondly, the larger body of "widows"—i.e., women who were free from family duties and devoted their spare time to visiting, nursing, and other good works. What St Paul apparently means is that a woman who, when she has the opportunity of working for the good of others and the service of God prefers to spend her time in amusing and enjoying herself, misses the real end and object of life, and incidentally its more real and lasting pleasures. While she seems to be alive and busy in a ceaseless round of enjoyment, she is really dying and may soon become dead to all that makes life worth living. She is one of those who, as the Roman poet Juvenal says, "long so much to live that they lose all reason for being alive."

Of course, St Paul's words apply to men as much as to women, and here is special reason why we should take them to heart in the present day. A certain amount of pleasure is both good and desirable, and intended by God for the health and refreshment alike of body and mind, just as food and drink are so intended; but just as the man who puts food in the first place becomes a glutton, and the man who puts drink in the first place becomes a drunkard, so the man who puts pleasure in the first place becomes pleasure-mad. We have no word in our English tongue to express what has only of late become characteristic of a large part of our nation.

People crowd into the towns to live because in the towns are theatres and picture-shows and other "pleasures," which they value more than anything else in life. Women do not desire to have children because children interfere with pleasure. Men desire to work as short hours as possible, not that they may devote their time to self-improvement, but to have more time for pleasure. Children are taught to consider pleasure the great aim of life, and consider they have a just grievance if their parents deprive them of any amusement or pleasure that is within their reach. Young and old find money for amusement when they cannot pay their butcher and grocer, and declare that they have no money for their Church. Duties are neglected; worship is ignored; self-sacrifice is becoming old-fashioned because people are throwing themselves into the pursuit of pleasure, not with care and moderation, but madly, unrestrainedly, justifying it and elevating it into a kind of virtue with the same abandon and disregard of consequences that a drunkard shows in his pursuit of drink.

Surely it is time to ask ourselves whether life has nothing better to offer than pleasure; if work has no higher aim than to afford means to be dissipated in self-enjoyment?

1. Mere pleasure does not satisfy. Just as the drunkard always wants another glass, so the lover of pleasure always wants another dose of pleasure. The appetite grows and is always requiring larger or more stimulating doses to satisfy it.

2. Mere pleasure leads to nothing. Beyond the moderate amount needed for refreshment of body and mind it accomplishes nothing. It leaves behind it no sense of work well done or time well spent. It is purely self-regarding and selfish.

3. Christianity affirms that time and money can be put to a far better use in the service of man and the service of God. It affirms there is too much suffering in the world, too many wrongs to be righted, for it to be right for any man or woman to spend their leisure time in the selfish pursuit of pleasure. It declares that the only right use of pleasure is to fit body and mind for work, and that it becomes bad the very moment that it ceases to be a means and becomes an end in life.

4. Christianity asserts that, after all, the truest happiness is to be found in work and not in pleasure; that happiness has a way of evading those who seek it directly for its own sake; and that it comes unsought to those who leave it on one side to follow the call of duty.

We commend these thoughts to the consideration of our readers. We have no hesitation in asserting that the present generation is in danger of becoming, if it has not already become, pleasure-mad. The call of duty falls on ears too strained to catch the least echo of the pleasant music of life to heed its voice.

We have as a community far more wealth and far more leisure than our fathers, but we are not devoting our wealth to national improvement, or our leisure to personal culture. More leisure has meant simply a more frenzied pursuit of pleasure in all classes of society.

It is depressing for those who have rejoiced in the emancipation of the labouring man from hard conditions and long hours to see him emulating his rich, idle neighbour in spending all his extra time and money on amusement. We want a higher national and personal ideal.

The young must be taught that mere pleasure is not the end and aim of life. We want no Puritan distrust of any innocent pleasure, so long as it is kept in its proper place and recognised as a means, not as an end; but the moment pleasure becomes a thing for which people live and for which they work, there is something wrong, and we ought not to be afraid to stand up and say so boldly.

God has given us lives and opportunities which pass and are lost for ever, and we must use them while we may or else bear the blame for ever.

St. Paul's Mission, Moa.

Mr. Cole writes on March 17th:—"Our public meeting to inaugurate the new constitution was well attended. It required a lot of explaining to get them to grasp its meaning and recognise their responsibility. For two days I had deputations waiting on me to have clauses re-explained. At any rate it was accomplished, and they have very loyally responded to the demands made on them. The dog tax realised 30s and several were destroyed. They were more reluctant to part with their dogs than the cash. One cannot blame them for that, as they are so useful in hunting, notwithstanding their common strain. Gardening has been done with great vim, and there is no reason why they should not have plenty of food during the year. Our health has been good. One case of rheumatic fever was successfully combated, but we are devotedly thankful to be free of dysentery. The people are very good in reporting all cases of illness promptly. The weather is spasmodic, very humid, but occasionally quite cool in the mornings. The rainfall has not been great. Kindly remember us to Miss White; we trust you are both benefiting from your holiday."

April 14th.—"We have had our election of council, and the result of the ballot declared in favor of Avien, Makubi and Tom Gela. It was a very spirited gathering, and the returning councillors speeches were very good. Both Joe and Sonny thought the decision was a good one as it gave fresh blood an opportunity."

The new council held their first meeting the next day, and resolved to call the men together for building purposes. During the year they hope to accomplish the draining of the swamps, and instal a good water supply by bringing the water from the springs at Lady Hill in pipes. An industrial scheme to train the girls in domestic work was also discussed, and we hope to put it into effect at once. The senior girls will receive teaching in domestic work and its branches. We have not much scope for this as our household is small, but by giving each girl a turn they will learn something more of the domestic arts than they know at present.

The health is still maintained. Few men are at home with the exception of the aged. I hope to be able to present a number of candidates for confirmation when you visit us in May.

Georgetown.

Church matters here and in this district are, I am glad to say, really on the move. In Georgetown a good choir has been formed and the Psalms were sung at Evensong for the first time at Easter, and have been sung every Sunday evening since. Mrs. Curtis has kindly undertaken to train the choir and also act as organist. It is to be sincerely hoped that the people will now attend to their duty in attending services better than they have hitherto.

Through the Carpenterian Association in England we have received some very handsome gifts for the Church. A carved oak Glastonbury Chair was received some weeks back, which fits our Sanctuary as if made for it, and now this week we have received a brass ewer for font, a silver mounted baptismal shell, and a pair of Communion cruets. Without doubt we are most fortunate in having such good friends in England. Forsyth, a new township which has sprung up within the last two years, is determined to build a worthy House of God, and as the township is likely to be a permanent one, I am encouraging them all I can. The manager of the Bank of Australia has given us a block of ground in a very suitable part of the town, and although it was my first wish to build this church by free-will offerings, I now find it will be an impossibility; and at a well representative meeting held during my last visit, it was decided to have a sale of work at some future date, for which purpose a committee was elected to work things out. At present we are having services in a hall between two hotels, which is not a desirable place, and the people, recognising this, are going to endeavour to have a church built by the end of the year.

Darwin.

The Bishop has received a letter from Miss Ridley who gave an allotment of land at Darwin, which was recently sold for £250 in order to purchase a corner allotment adjoining the Church as a site for a Rectory, saying that she entirely approved of the arrangement and was glad that her gift had been of use.

The S.P.C.K. gave £25 towards the erection of the new Church at Pine Creek. The diocese has had frequent occasion to thank the generosity of this society.

The Bishop hopes to visit Darwin after the Provincial Synod as the running of the steamers makes it impossible for him to visit it in July between his visits to the Gulf and the Cape York Peninsula.

The Provincial Synod.

The next meeting of Provincial Synod at Townsville on September 16 will be of especial interest on account of the Church of England Act, which if it passes safely through the Brisbane Synod will be considered by the Provincial Synod. The object of the Bill is to secure its own property to the Church in case of any emancipation from the legal fetters which bind the Church in England. On the one hand, we are appealed to by the Church at home in England to take our own line and give them a lead on, say, such questions as the use of the Athanasian Creed; on the other hand, we are told by the lawyers that nothing we do is of any value and that we are bound hand and foot to every legal technicality of the Church in England, and we can only be set free by an appeal to the local legislatures.

Much unnecessary warmth has been introduced into the discussion of the subject, and the Bishop of North Queensland's sermon in St. Paul's has been seriously misrepresented by eager partizans.

The difficulty of action is no doubt serious; but we believe that the danger of inaction is more serious still. We should like to see the bill passed by the Provincial Synod, and further action can then be suspended if needful until after the meeting of General Synod. It is well to walk cautiously, but it is necessary to take some definite steps if we are to get on at all.

A Patagonian Prayer.

Prof. Max Müller says:—"We know naturally very little of the religion of the Patagonian savages, but if prayer is a fair index of the worth of a religion let me read you a Patagonian prayer:

Oh Father, Great Man?
King of this land,
Favour us, dear Friend, every day
With good food,
With good water,
With good sleep!
Poor am I, poor is this meal;
Take of it if Thou wilt.

This is a prayer uttered by people whom Darwin compares to "devils." To me it seems a prayer in which we ourselves could join without much shame. It is addressed to an unseen Father, a dear Friend, the King of their land, to whom they offer the best they have, though it is only as they say a very poor meal.

The new Francis Pritt made a record voyage to the Mitchell when she took down Mr. Woodd and Miss Matthews on her second trip. She left Thursday Island on the morning of May 9th, and arrived on the morning of May 12th. She ran on a sandbank the last evening and remained there all night, so that her actual time was only two and a-half days. The old Francis Pritt once came back from the Mitchell in a little over the same time, but that is a much easier run as the wind is fair. She never got to the Mitchell in less than four days. The distance is over 300 miles.

The Parochial Returns have not arrived in time for publication in this number. They will appear in the October issue.

The Religious Census.

Bulletin No. 8 of the Commonwealth census, taken in April, 1911, has just been published. It deals with the religions professed by the people of Australia. Ten tables in all are given, from which the curious in such matters may learn the religious classification of the male and female population of the Commonwealth, and of the total population of each State, and the distribution of the various denominations among the metropolitan and extra-metropolitan population, respectively, in each of the six States. The most interesting of the tables is that which gives a comparative statement of the population of the Commonwealth at the censuses of 1901 and 1911, classified according to religion.

The total increase of the Commonwealth population for the decade has been 681,204. Of this, the Church of England, with an increase of 212,867 persons, shows the greatest aggregate growth, but the highest ratio of increase in proportion to numbers goes to the Presbyterians. A significant feature is the growth of persons who object to state their religion—from 42,131 in 1901 to 83,003 in 1911. To these must be added those who from carelessness, indifference, or other causes have omitted to make any return as to their religion—14,060 in 1901, they have increased to more than double the number, 36,114 in 1911. There is, surely, a tendency shown by these figures—a growing indifference, if not hostility, to religion of any kind—which is a faithful record of the atmosphere in which we live. Not even the most thoughtless can have failed to observe it in the every-day life of our country; and it is natural to find it reflected in the census figures. On the other hand, the numbers of those who returned themselves as of no denomination, or as "free-thinkers," show a decrease.—"The Church Standard."

A new Church Paper.

We are glad to welcome the appearance of the "Church Standard," the first number of which has just come to hand. The paper has certainly made a very good start, as this issue is full of interest and contains some good articles. Contributions from special correspondents in England, India and Africa are full of important matter and interesting information. The India letter for instance gives some account of the late Dr. Pennell, a C.M.S. missionary on the Afghan frontier, and a truly marvellous personality, of whom it was said by a British officer, "That man alone was worth two regiments on the frontier."

It is to be hoped that the new Church paper will obtain the support of all Churchmen throughout the Commonwealth.

It is said that a scheme is on foot for starting a native mission station in the Kimberleys. The Government have set apart 100,000 acres as a reserve on the Forest River near Wyndham for the purpose of an Anglican Mission and have further made a native reserve of about four million acres north of this. Natives are numerous and are said to be rather wild. But the site and the conditions seem to be fairly ideal for the purposes of an aboriginal mission. The station will be within thirty miles of Wyndham by water.

Resignation of Bishop of North Queensland.

It is with feelings of the most profound regret that we learn of the impending resignation of the Bishop of North Queensland on the score of ill health. The Bishop was taken ill at Marseilles on his way to England to obtain a new head for the Bush Brotherhood; and though he was subsequently able to proceed to England and successfully accomplish his mission, yet the doctors are unanimous that he must no longer remain in the tropics. The Bishop is returning to Townsville in August, and hopes to remain until Easter before finally relinquishing his work. We are thankful to hear that the Bishop's health is such that he may look forward to many years of strenuous work in a cooler climate. Dr. Frodsham will have left a deep mark not only in his own diocese, and in the province of Queensland, but on the whole Australian Church. He has combined strong convictions with a strong personality, absolute devotion to duty and a power of vigorous expression. He foresaw long before he became a bishop the importance of provincial action, and it was owing to his zeal and able presentation of the case, more than to any other cause, that prejudices were overcome and the preliminary work done which enabled the province of Queensland to be formed on sound lines. This accomplished he set himself to advocate the freeing of Queensland, and ultimately Australia, from the heavy hand of English secular law, and since his illness preached a remarkable sermon in St. Paul's to show that freedom from English law courts did not mean any spiritual separation from the old mother Church. This battle for freedom is yet to win, and the forces of prejudice are still strong, and the movement hampered by that complete misunderstanding of its ends and aims which is generally the fate of all efforts for reform. The resignation of Dr. Frodsham will be a very severe blow to the cause of progress, but we are sure that even if no longer as a Queensland bishop he will not cease to support it by his voice and pen. This diocese has special cause to regret the resignation of the Bishop. Before his appointment to North Queensland the future bishop was for some years Commissary for the diocese of Carpentaria, and when he became bishop he never forgot this diocese or failed to render it all the assistance in his power. God's ways are not our ways, and the bishop is the last man we should have ever have thought of a likely to be struck down in the midst of his strenuous work. We can only offer him our most respectful sympathy and which will be welcome to the many who knew and appreciated Mr. Woodd's sterling character:—

"The Rectory, Muswellbrook, N.S.W.

8th July, 1912.

My dear Lord,—It is with sorrow that I inform you that my brother Thomas Woodd of the Mission to the Aborigines, Trubananaman, Mitchell River, succumbed to an attack of malarial fever in the Newcastle Hospital on Saturday last, the 6th instant. He was brought into the hospital unconscious on Wednesday the 3rd. The Rev. P. Musgrave happened to be visiting a sick parishioner in the ward to which my brother was carried, was shown a letter found in his pocket, suspected that he was my brother and telegraphed to me. I went to Newcastle that afternoon, and gathered from the Captain of the "Malina" that he travelled from Thursday Island in the "Suva," which steamer did not proceed further than Brisbane. He was then apparently quite well. On Tuesday morning the steward reported to the Captain that he was ill, he was then able to speak with difficulty, but soon lost the power of speech and became unconscious, in which state he was landed on Wednesday morning and conveyed to the hospital at Newcastle. At first the doctors could not determine what caused the paralysis, but a test of the blood gave a positive reaction which enabled them to declare the disease to be malarial fever. He did not regain consciousness, and died on Saturday morning at 5 minutes to 3, and was buried that afternoon at Sandgate cemetery near Newcastle.

pray that he may be spared to work for many years with his wonted vigour in some more favoured climate than the North.

Death of Mr. Thomas Woodd.

We deeply regret to have to record the death of Mr. Thomas Woodd of the Mitchell River Mission who left Thursday Island on June 24th for Sydney on furlough. Mr. Woodd had not been well and determined to take his furlough then, instead of in October as previously arranged. He did not look well when he left, but there was no reason for apprehension, and he was looking forward confidently to returning to his work after a few months in the south.

The following letter from his brother Archdeacon Woodd to the Bishop gives details

It was God's mercy that he was not obliged to be put into the hospital at Townsville or Brisbane or some port where he was far from friends, and that Mr. Musgrave who knew me happened to be in the hospital when he was brought in. I am, my dear Lord, very truly yours,

H. A. Woodd."

Mr. Woodd is the first worker clerical or lay in this diocese who has been removed by death during the twelve years of its existence, and he will be remembered as a devoted worker, absolutely unselfish and self-forgetting, and as a man of earnest piety and deep spiritual convictions. He came to the Mission in September, 1910, and with characteristic humility regretted that he might be considered rather as a handworker than a missionary, but the example of his self-denying life shed a wide influence.

The cattle and the garden were his especial charge, and he was to be seen working early and late. He was looking forward especially to the advent of a chaplain and the opportunity for more frequent celebrations of the Holy Communion. Strangely enough on the very day that we got news of his death a new worker Mr. Alexander Reside left Melbourne to take up work at the Mitchell not knowing that his fellow worker had been called to his rest. The men fall out but the work goes on, and will go on all the more earnestly for the memory of those who like Thomas Woodd have given their lives for the cause.

A Trip to Percyville.

(By Rev. A. McD. HASSELL.)

I left Georgetown at 7 a.m. on Monday, June 10th, and had breakfast at Donnyville, arriving at "Castleton," or as it is more commonly called "Big Reef," at 4 p.m. As I try to visit this place monthly I did not have a service, but spent the evening talking with some of the parishioners. The next morning I left about 8 a.m., knowing that I had a very rough road before me, and after staying for about half-an-hour at an old battery where there were two old men as caretakers, I arrived at a hut on Oaky Creek about 3.30 p.m. Here I only expected to find one man who is generally there to keep the water troughs full, but was agreeably surprised to find the owner of the land and party of musterers who happened to be camping there that night. Although I begged to be allowed to camp on the ground, I was not allowed to, being given one of the bush bunks in the hut while the rightful owner (of the bunk) camped in a dray.

Percyville was reached the next day, June 12th, about 3 p.m. after having visited and had lunch at the Union mine. This is a typical bush mining township boasting of two private residences, police station which also acts as post office, three stores and hotel. I stayed here all day Thursday, 13th, and Friday, 14th. On Friday morning four people met together in the dining room of the hotel for a celebration of Holy Communion, and in the evening we had a very hearty service in the small hall which adjoins the hotel, several people coming in from the Union mine two miles away. I spoke on Love, thinking of God's love to us and our love to God.

On Saturday morning I mounted my faithful horse once more and headed for Mount Hogan. As there are so many tracks leading away from Percyville, I was kindly lent a black boy as pilot, whose duty it was to see me free of all branch roads, this he did very faithfully, coming about 8 miles with me, talking the whole time, giving me messages to his friends that I might meet. Certainly I got rather confused in the Bills, Jacks, Freds, to say nothing of the Elizas, Marys, Janes, etc., etc. Anyhow I did my best and managed to deliver some of the messages to the right individuals.

Mount Hogan was reached at 2 p.m. This is an old "has-been" township, but alas! now there are only two families in residence. I was most hospitably entertained for the night at one of the houses; there being no spare room or bed, my hostess made me a very comfortable bed on the kitchen table. Oak Park station was reached at 5 p.m. on Sunday afternoon, June 16th. Here I had arranged to stay for a week for a much-needed rest. Needless to say I was given a most hearty welcome, and after tea all hands turned up for Evensong which was held in the sitting room. As I was going to have other services during my stay with the same congregation tried to take a course of addresses on the "Good Shepherd." The week was spent most enjoyably; on the Thursday I was driven to Wellington Station 10 miles away, and stayed there the night, having Evensong, and on Friday came back to Oak Park, but not without a promise that the whole of the Wellington household would come to Oak Park on Saturday and spend Sunday in order to join in united worship on God's own day. This they did not fail to do, and if any town person had happened to come along on that day, Sunday, June 23rd, I am sure they could not help being struck by the heartiness of our services away in the bush. Three services were held—Holy Communion, Children's Service and Evensong, at each service I followed my course of addresses. I must mention that Sunday School is held at both these stations, Oak Park and Wellington, every Sunday, and the children take as much interest in it as they do in their play. Very sorry I was when Monday morning came; and as my host and hostess were driving to the next station that day, which was also to be my stage, and I had a seat in their buggy and my own horse was tied by the side of the leaders (as we were driving four in hand) he seemed to appreciate this, by the way he behaved, instead of having to carry me and my pack. This station, Lyndhurst, was reached about 3 p.m., and we were greeted by the owner and his wife, and spent the evening in music and talking. Tuesday morning, June 25th, found me saying good-bye and mounting my horse for the Lynd Station, an out station of Lyndhurst. Here I baptised an infant child of the caretakers, and arrived at Carpentaria Downs Station on Wednesday, the 26th. After staying here for a day I went to Kidston or, as it is more generally called, the Oaks Rush. This is a comparatively new township, having sprung up within the last few years; three years ago I am told there were over a thousand inhabitants, all miners, but now like all bush mining townships it has "gone down" as quickly as it sprang up. However, I was kept very busy all day Saturday visiting the people, and on Sunday, June 30th, had a Children's Service with Baptism in the afternoon, and a very hearty service in the evening, there being I was told afterwards over 70 adults and 40 odd children, which I was also told was a record. On Thursday following, July 4th, I arrived at Einasleigh in the afternoon, and I spent Friday and Saturday visiting as many people as I could, this is a very scattered township and I was not able to visit all, as I should have wished; anyhow word went all round that I was in town and on Sunday, July 7th, I had services in the Court House. Four people met together at 8 o'clock in the morning for Holy Communion which although one would wish for more communicants was indeed a very real service to us. A few children turned up in the afternoon, but in the evening we had a "full house," several people could not get in and stayed on the veranda. At this service I spoke on "The Praying Christ." On Tuesday, July 9th, I took the train for Forsyth, taking my faithful horse with me, in order to save us both 45 miles of very rough country. I had intended to stay in Forsyth until Sunday, 14th, but on arrival I received word that a old parishioner in Georgetown was dying, and asking for me, so I rode the 25 miles into Georgetown on Wednesday.

And so ended a month's tour, which was most enjoyable to myself, and I hope has been the means of leading some to God. On all sides I received the utmost kindness, which will not be soon forgotten.

Mossman Church.

The following information with regard to the new church at Mossman to replace that destroyed by the cyclone will be read with interest. "Good building stone was found on the Bonnie Doon estate, and at a meeting held on May 21st it was resolved to proceed with the building and complete the nave, the cost of which we worked out at £400, so a contract was let for 850 tons of stone at 3s. per ton. We have made arrangements with the mill to supply us with lime in five-tons lots as required. Cement has been ordered. The foundations have been excavated and points have been put down for a temporary line down the road to the church site. The church will be built entirely of stone, as we found brick too expensive. Tiles were out of the question on account of the high freight and possible breakages. By the time the nave is completed we shall know how much the church is likely to cost, labour being the uncertain item. If we cannot go on at once we shall board up the chancel arch and use the nave as a church. It will seat 120, and will be 44 by 25 feet outside measurement."

St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Georgetown.

A new organ has been ordered from Paling & Co. for our church here, not before it was needed, as the one we have at present in use has done grand service for over twenty years. Before the Church was built it lived wherever it could find shelter, latterly it had lived in the Court House. The whole amount has been collected by "straight giving," the Bishop of the Diocese having helped us with a handsome donation; while the Roman Catholic community in Georgetown gave us a surprise packet of 5 sovereigns towards it. We hope to have the new organ for St. Michael and All Angels' Day, September 29th, when we hope to mark and keep our Festival.

The Bazaar which we were thinking of having in Forsyth on September 19th and 20th, has been postponed, chiefly on account of so many of the working committee leaving the district and no one taking their places. The Bazaar was to have been in aid of the Church Building Fund, and now that it has been postponed we will hope that we may build the "House of God" by "straight giving." At the time of writing we have £29 13s 6d in the Government Savings Bank, the Bishop being the trustee for the fund.

Rev. J. Tweedie has been licensed as assistant curate of Normanton.

Mr. Alexander Reside, of Melbourne, has arrived for Mitchell River work.

Bishop's Visit to Croydon.

I arrived at Croydon on Thursday evening, June 13th, after a long coach journey from Crooked Creek, and found Rev. L. Ayscough looking well in spite of the fact that he seems to spend his time dashing round Croydon and neighbourhood on a motor bicycle. On Friday afternoon I was present at a meeting of ladies who are arranging for a sale of work in September, with a view to the reduction of the debt of £400 which has been hampering the parish for the past fifteen years. To judge by the energy and enthusiasm displayed not only by the ladies but by the Parish Council, whom I met at night, the effort ought to be a success. I discovered the reason of the renewed vitality of the parish on Sunday morning, when I found a larger number of communicants at the early service than I had ever seen there before, and among them several leading men of the town. I wish all parishes would remember there is no possible way in which they can so fully or truly at once welcome and rejoice the heart of the Bishop as by meeting him at the Holy Communion. I had a busy day. Immediately after breakfast I drove out to Golden Gate and spoke to the children of the Sunday School, which has more than doubled its numbers, afterwards preaching at Matins. In the afternoon I addressed the Croydon Sunday School, which has also increased very largely; and afterwards addressed the teachers. At Evensong Rev. L. Ayscough was inducted in the presence of a large congregation. The singing was particularly hearty, and the service concluded with the singing of the Te Deum. On Monday and Tuesday I visited the State schools at Croydon, and on Wednesday at Golden Gate and True Blue. I examined the children in religious knowledge, and was much pleased with the progress made. On Thursday I had a special service for church-workers, and left on Friday morning very much pleased with my visit. On the Sunday after I left Mr. Ayscough announced to the congregation the most welcome and totally unexpected news that a generous and anonymous Southern friend had given £250 towards the reduction of the debt, leaving a sum only of £150 to be raised to clear the parish of debt. It need not be said with what satisfaction the good news was welcomed.

Bishop's Visit to Gulf.

I left Thursday Island on Tuesday, May 28th, in the s.s. Warrego, and arrived at the Norman Bar on Thursday, May 30th, at noon. We had, however, to wait twelve hours for the tide before the tender could leave.

Sunsets in the Gulf are generally of unusual beauty, but this evening the sky was exceptionally gorgeous. Imagine a huge Malay kris fashioned of cloud and lying parallel to the horizon with the point of the blade just dipping into the water. The handle lay just above where the sun had disappeared, and was roughened with a thousand crinkles that seemed the reflex of the sea below roughened by the evening breeze. Each little hollow was dark indigo, and each little prominence glowed with the incandescent light of incredible rubies. The flat carved blade was a dark steel coloured cloud ducked with crimson drops like blood. The whole lay against a background of intensely clear duck-egg green, changing higher up into the lightest sapphire blue, and then again into the azure of the upper sky. As one watched, the whole thing changed. The handle glowed with a yet intenser light, and the dark smooth blade broke into innumerable crimson folds and wrinkles like heaving of a blood-red sea. Then the red grew darker and more purple, while underneath, above the hard blue-black line of the sea, shone a clear rose tint which blushed and glowed and faded as the waters whitened under the light of the rising full moon.

The tender left at midnight, and as the tide would not allow of her going right up the river, we had in the morning to tranship to a yet smaller steamer which in its turn could only land us at the lower wharf below the town, so by the time we had driven up to Normanton twenty-four hours had elapsed from our anchoring at the bar, a distance of 70 miles by river and about 40 miles as the crow flies.

I found plenty of work awaiting me, although the place is continually diminishing in population, and one wonders whether there will soon be anyone left. The interior of the Church has been enormously improved by being lined throughout with Wunderlich, painted in harmonious colours. To have accomplished the work in the midst of their deep financial depression does the people great credit. I was glad also to notice a handsome new altar cloth, the gift of Mrs. Harry Shadforth.

Meetings and addresses in connection with the Parochial Council, Band of Hope, Girls' Friendly Society, Mothers' Union, and Religious Instruction in the State School, in addition to the Sunday services and a Confirmation, kept me busy until Tuesday, when I left by train for Croydon. I arrived at 6 p.m., had a glimpse of Rev. L. Ayscough and his many parochial activities, and left again by coach at 3.30 a.m., and had a long day in the coach, not arriving at Crooked Creek until 7.30 p.m. Coach driving at night through the bush always seems to me a marvellous feat. Even by day it is no easy task to steer five horses along the narrow track where six inches to the side may cause a collision with a tree, a stump or an antbd, but to drive the coach at full trot at night must require an extra sense, for the tracks are many in number and dangerous rats or stones abound in those which are not in use for the time being. The drivers never use lights, and they hardly ever come to grief. Why, again I say, I never could understand, except that they are good drivers and have a cat's eyes. At night we were kept awake by the vile language of a drunken loafer. Relief came in a ball-like roar from the big man occupying the next room. "Ye foul-mouthed little blackguard, if I hear any more of ye I'll come and shake ye till every bone rattles in your mean little carcase." The loafer was sober enough to take a gentle hint, and we heard no more of him, and reflected that strength is a blessed thing when it is used on the right side. At Crooked Creek Mr. Hassell met me with a buggy, and so I was spared getting up again at an unearthly hour. We drove quietly into Georgetown, arriving there shortly after noon. On Sunday I preached in the little Church which has been beautified by several kind gifts from England. I was glad to find that the evening congregations had improved, aided by the choir which has been trained by Mrs. Curtis, but the morning congregations leave much to be desired in spite of the few faithful communicants. I was glad to notice a considerable increase in the Sunday School. On Monday morning Mr. Hassell started before breakfast on a long ride round the Percy and Gilberton mining camps, intending to be away about a month. I took his place at the religious instruction in the State School, and was glad to find that the children really had learnt something about the earlier part of our Lord's life. I am more and more convinced of the value of the privileges we now enjoy of teaching in the schools. On Wednesday I returned to Croydon.

Death of Archdeacon Peacock.

The Australian Church has sustained a severe loss in the death of Archdeacon Peacock on July 21st, at Warnamboul. "The Church of England Messenger" (Melbourne), says:—"The late Archdeacon of the Otway was laid to rest in his native Creswick amid the tears of hundreds and in the presence of a large gathering representing the clergy and laity of the whole Ballarat Diocese. He was one of the most brilliant and strong personalities in Victorian Church-life, and one in whom Melbourne has always felt a special pride, for he was one of our own Australian men trained in our own Melbourne Trinity College. The writer has a vivid recollection of the late Archdeacon at the Provincial Synod in last May. Little did those who saw that alert and intense figure imagine that the Archdeacon of the Otway was bearing his final witness in the Councils of the Province. We could little afford to lose him in Victoria. His works survive him, and he being dead, yet speaketh."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE CARPENTARIAN."

Dear Sir, - I shall be much obliged if you will allow me space in your columns to make known to the clergy of your diocese that the free distribution of our "A.B.M. Review" is now suspended. As the clergy have been receiving free copies for the last two years, they might, if this explanation were not made, wonder why they have ceased to receive it.

We earnestly hope that a large number of the clergy will now become subscribers, and will also endeavour to promote the circulation of the "Review" in their parishes. Its present circulation might and ought to be enormously increased - Yours faithfully,

C. E. C. LEFROY,
Editor "A.B.M.R."

NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Volume XII. - No. 48. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1912

The Aenus.

A recent opinion obtained by order of General Synod from three most distinguished lawyers in England, and confirmed by the best legal opinion in Australia, shows that the Church is in a most unsatisfactory condition with regard to her legal position. She is legally regarded not as in communion with the Church of England, nor as a Church of England, but as an integral part of the Church of England in England, and bound by every legal tie and subject to every legal anomaly to which the Church in England is subject as an Established Church. If we deviate in the slightest particular from the English law we are liable to lose our property, but we have no voice in the making of the law and no appeal against it. If we adapt the Prayer Book to suit Australian needs, we stand to lose our property. If the English Church alters it without our being consulted or agreeing, we must adopt the alterations or lose our property. If we follow the suggestion of the Lambeth Conference and alter the rubric dealing with the Athanasian Creed, we risk the loss of our property. If the English Courts or the English Parliament decide, as apparently they are deciding, that the English Church must admit certain offenders against Church law to Holy Communion, then apparently we must decide to do so or risk the loss of our property. The position is an intolerable one, and there is only one way out of it, and that is to obtain from the State Parliaments permission for the Church in Australia to make its own rules and regulations like every other religious body. The way has been for some time blocked by the fact that the laity of the Brisbane Synod have by a large majority rejected the proposal to invest the Provincial Synod with legislative power, the Brisbane clergy and the laity and clergy of all the other dioceses having voted for the measure. It is certain that the matter cannot rest here. The battle may be a long one, but in the end the principles of freedom and self-government must triumph.

Douglas Memorial Chapel.

At a meeting of the Diocesan Council held at Bishop's House on May 22, it was resolved to take advantage of the presence of Mr. Hannington, Inspector of Works for the Federal Government, to ask him to prepare specifications for the completion of the concrete work of the Douglas Memorial Chapel, and to ask him to superintend the work. These he kindly consented to do free of charge. At a subsequent meeting of the Diocesan and Parochial Councils it was resolved to proceed with the work and the tender of Messrs. Fergusson and Young for £164 was accepted. Messrs. Lee Bryce, McKee, and Hannington were appointed a Building Committee, and the work put in hand at once. The old wooden wall of the south aisle has been removed and a concrete wall with five buttresses and pierced by five Gothic doors erected in its place. The result is a great improvement in the view of the Cathedral from the town. A number of interior fittings for the Chapel have been promised by Masonic and other bodies as memorials of Mr. Douglas, but it will be some time before these can be made, and it is not probable that the chapel will be opened for the daily service before Christmas at the earliest. A sum of £50 is still required that it may be opened without debt.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held on July 12, the Bishop being in the chair. Present - Messrs. Lee Bryce, Sullivan, Eggers, and the Subdean. The Bishop reported that he had sent Rev. J. Tweedie to the Mitchell to act as chaplain until Rev. F. Lane could arrive. Rev. W. Godson had resigned the parish of Darwin, and he had regretfully accepted his resignation as from December 16. It was resolved that the sum of £107 should be advanced to the Douglas Memorial Chapel Building Committee as against that amount held by them on fixed deposit. It was determined to make inquiries as to the cost of an iron-framed cement and fibro-cement church for Moa. A unanimous resolution was passed endorsing the Bishop's protest against the assumption of the title of North Queensland by any new Bishop of that See. The matter of the appointment of lay representatives to the Provincial Synod was left in the hands of the Bishop, as it was not possible to say so long before whether any local representatives could attend.

Renewal of Protest.

The Bishop has renewed to the Archbishop of Brisbane as Metropolitan the protest that he made on July 1, 1902, to the Primate, in the absence of a Metropolitan of Queensland, against the consecration of a new Bishop with the title of Bishop of North Queensland. The text of the protest was as follows:—"To his Grace William Saumarez, by Divine permission Archbishop of Sydney, Metropolitan of New South Wales and Primate of Australia and Tasmania. I, the undersigned, Gilbert, Bishop of Carpentaria, do hereby protest against the consecration of any Bishop under the name and title of Bishop of North Queensland, unless it be on the understanding that the title will be altered as soon as possible after the consecration. I make this protest on the grounds that the name of North Queensland is no longer applicable to that diocese, that it claims a jurisdiction which does not correspond to fact, that it is a cause of confusion and misunderstanding, and that precedent in the case of the Diocese of Australia is in favour of a change of name. Gilbert, Bishop of Carpentaria. Thursday Island, July 1, 1902."

Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., Subdean of the Cathedral, and Rev. E. Taffs, rector of Mossman, will attend the Provincial Synod at Townsville as representatives of this diocese.

The Twelfth Psalm.

The hardest trial that can befall the religious man is to find himself, or to think himself, alone in his care for the things of God. These things are to him matters of life and death, and his friends and neighbours seem to care nothing about them. He throws himself on God with a kind of despair. "Help me, Lord, for there is not one godly man left, for the faithful are diminished from among the children of men." Looking back from after ages on the man who uttered this cry, we can see two things. First, he was not alone, any more than Elijah was when he said, "I only am left," and knew not of the seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. As a matter of fact, he was one of an ever subsisting spiritual remnant in Israel which was destined to remain and grow and form the nucleus out of which was to grow the world-wide Christian Church.

Second. At the very time he was uttering this cry of spiritual isolation he was by the very act bringing himself, all unknown to himself, into touch with the many millions of like-minded men who were destined hereafter to use and apply to themselves his words for more than two thousand years at least of the world's history.

At the time, however, he can of course know nothing of all this. The talk he hears around him brings him nothing but vexation of spirit. "They talk of vanity every one with his neighbour: they do but flatter with their lips and dissemble in their double heart. They say, 'With our tongues will we prevail, we are they that ought to speak; who is lord over us?'"

How familiar to-day is this idle chatter and gossip: speaking fair to the face and slandering behind the back; this confidence in words; this substitution of specious phrases for self-denying deeds; this arrogant assumption that the speaker must be in the right; this impatience of discipline and resenting of authority!

But behind it all the Psalmist can hear other and mostly unuttered voices—"the comfortless trouble of the needy and the deep sighing of the poor." For the most part the world troubles itself little about those who make no sensational appeal to it; but two thousand years before social reform began to appeal insistently to the conscience of Christendom the Psalmist knew that it was not the will of God that the rich should lord it over the poor, or the strong insult the weak. "I will up, saith the Lord, and will help everyone from him that swelleth against him, and will set him at rest." Nothing can shake this trust in the eternal righteousness of God, the eternal compassion for those who suffer wrong. The fire of affliction may try them, but the promises of God outlive the fire. "The words of the Lord are pure words, even as the silver which from the earth is tried and purified seven times in the fire. Thou shalt keep them, O Lord, thou shalt preserve him from this generation for ever."

It cannot be denied that "the ungodly walk on every side, while villainess is exalted among the children of men," but behind all that depresses is the everlasting righteousness, power, and pity of God.

The Diocesan Statistics.

We publish elsewhere the statistics of the diocese for the period Easter 1911 to Easter 1912. They will well repay a little study. The white population has further decreased from 7,682 to 7,400. This does not represent all the white men in the diocese but represents all those who are included in existing parishes whether effectively reached by the Church or not.

It is very gratifying to note that although population has decreased during the past year there has been a marked increase in the efficiency of parochial work and also in the contributions received towards the support of the Church. Thus during the past year celebrations of Holy Communion have increased from 372 to 466. Sunday School teachers from 43 to 59. Sunday School scholars from 560 to 592 with an average attendance of 411 in place of 344. Communicants have grown from 426 to 477. Baptisms from 135 to 201. Marriages from 29 to 51, while confirmations have slightly decreased from 62 to 60. Under the new Religious Instruction in State Schools Act 18 schools have been visited and 425 instructions have been given by the clergy, but the act was only in working for a part of the period given, and the number of instructions will be increased in the next returns, as all the clergy are taking advantage of it. To turn to finance we are met with the remarkable fact that in spite of bad times and diminished numbers the total sum raised for parochial purposes has risen from £1685 to £2948. Of course a good deal of this is to be accounted for by the sums given to repair the damage caused by the Mossman cyclone, and the special effort to build a Rectory at Darwin, but apart from this offertories have increased from £680 to £758, subscriptions from £445 to £538 and parochial indebtedness decreased from £591 to £556. On the whole there is great cause for thankfulness and good hope for the future.

Illustrated Year Book.

An Illustrated Year Book of the Diocese for the Year 1913 is now ready, and may be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot, Thursday Island, or from Miss Gascoigne, of Buckingham Palace Gardens, London, S.W., England. It contains a full account of the diocese with numerous illustrations, and is sold at cost price, sixpence. As the whole edition of 1000 copies will have to be sold to cover the cost of printing, it is hoped that our readers will not only get copies for themselves but will send them to their friends, as an interesting memento of the North and incidentally a way of helping the diocese. Among the illustrations are a new view of Thursday Island, a new photograph of the Bishop, the interior of the Cathedral, the new Francis Pritt, the churches at Croydon and Cooktown, the Port Douglas cyclone, the Moa Island and Mitchell River missions, and other maps and photographs.

Deaconess Buchanan is now staying at the Chinese Girls' School, Church of England Zenana Mission, Government Hill, Singapore. The Bishop of Singapore has written to the Bishop of Carpentaria to say how much he appreciates her presence and work.

Personal.

Miss Robson has been appointed to the staff of the new Church of England School for Girls at Hunter's Hill, Sydney. We are sure that the school, which is on the same lines as the well-known school at Darlinghurst, will be a great success.

Rev. W. E. Godson, M.A., has resigned the parish of Darwin as from December 16, and the Bishop has accepted his resignation with much regret. Mr. Godson has been working in the diocese for the last three years, and has done good work at Cooktown and Darwin. We understand that it is the intention of Mr. Godson to return to the old country.

Rev. F. T. Lane left Normanton on July 29th overland for the Mitchell River Mission, where he will act as chaplain. Mr. Lane volunteered more than a year ago, but the Bishop had hitherto been unable to find anyone to fill his place.

The parishioners of Croydon and the whole diocese have reason to be grateful to an anonymous friend of the rector, Rev. L. Ayscough, who has given a sum of £250 towards the extinction of the debt of £400 on the church and rectory. The money has been placed on fixed deposit for twelve months, pending an effort on the part of the parish to raise the balance. It is a great relief to know that there is a prospect of this long-standing debt—the only debt in the diocese, being at last paid.

Miss White, who was laid up in Sydney for some weeks by illness, has returned to Thursday Island and has quite recovered her health.

Miss Cornelia White, a sister of the Bishop, who has been residing for some years in Athens, hopes to pay a prolonged visit to Thursday Island, arriving early next year.

A Bygone Type.

He has been dead many years now, and I can think of him calmly, and I hope charitably with the reflection that he had at least the merit of having convictions, which is rare in the present day. He was by birth and upbringing a nonconformist, but convinced that God had given him a mission to convict the Church of England of Romanism, which in his eyes was the sin of sins, he chose to profess himself a member of the church, although he had never so far as I know been confirmed, and he certainly never allowed any of his children to be baptised either by the church or any other religious body. Whether he was himself baptised I do not know. Anyhow he posed as an aggrieved member of the Church of England and a champion of her orthodoxy as he understood it. He was obviously sincere and honest in his convictions, but his lack of comprehension of the simplest truths or most elementary ceremonies was amazing.

When the choir turned to the East to say the creed he used to turn round and face the West door under the obsession that showing especial respect for the Apostles Creed savoured somehow of Romanism, being delightfully unconscious of the fine tribute he was paying to Roman orthodoxy. He was genuinely convinced that his Bishop turned to the East in the Creed in order to display his hood to the congregation, and often made it the subject of pleasantry.

It is needless to say that the simplest act of ritualism or the humblest symbols of faith roused him to almost speechless fury. He was at the same time a most exact and careful ritualist in his own way. He belonged to a Lodge which was permeated by the spirit of an elaborate ritual and delighted in the most far-fetched symbolism. Here he would not tolerate the smallest departure from the traditions of the past or abrogate the most recondite symbols. He would come to church on occasion clad in strange vestments and bearing the symbols of his order in reverent and careful procession.

On one occasion I tried to argue with him. "Well, Mr. X," I said, "I have no doubt that you believe the statement you have made, but what would be your position if this fundamental fact of yours were proved beyond any possibility of doubt to be as a matter of fact quite untrue?" "It would not make the slightest difference in the world to me," was the stalwart reply, and I retired with a sense of ignominious defeat, and wondering what you do say when arguing with a man for whom truth is honestly a matter of small importance compared with the dominance of his own convictions.

Not long after I received from him a letter of which the following conveys the main message. I have omitted various personalities and expressions of disapproval of those who did not agree with him:

"You may be interested to hear that I and a number of my friends are engaged in praying that you may die very soon, and that the Church may thus be saved from the Jesuitical intrigues of one who like yourself turns to the East at the Creed. In case of your being inclined to disregard this warning, I beg leave to inform you that we tried the same plan on ———, and that he died within two years of our commencing to pray." I confess that I was tempted to retaliate by publishing this extraordinary letter in extenso, but happily I concluded to ignore it instead. I was especially thankful that I refrained, as before the two years were up he had himself passed away, grim and resolute to the end. I could think of him even more kindly than I do had he only been a genuine member of the Church. As it was, I could not but feel that he had stepped a little outside his proper calling. Such men are, however, a bracing tonic which we somewhat lack in these all-tolerant days. He had at least convictions, and was not tempted to hide his light. We believe that his race is not altogether extinct yet in some parts of this continent, but for us he remains the type of a bygone age.

Girls' School.

Some of our readers may be glad to know of a good Church school for girls in the North. Such a one now exists in Townsville in the shape of the St. James' Collegiate School for Girls, of which Mrs. Preston Day is the Principal. The school has already won a number of successes, and should be of great service to those who do not wish to send their children far away. All information can be obtained from Mrs. Preston Day, St. James' Collegiate School, Townsville. Reference may be made to the Bishop of North Queensland or Archdeacon Williams.

Compensations.

There is throughout all nature a wonderful system of balance and compensation. The earth is drawn with mighty force towards the sun, but it is being thrust away from it with a force equally great. As night wears on the earth loses more and more heat by radiation until the rising sun checks the cold.

The light of the sun illuminates every corner of the earth with its brilliant beams, but after a while the eye grows weary and we welcome the darkness of night.

As the summer goes on the ground becomes dry and parched and dead; it seems as though nothing could ever again grow on its caked and hardened surface, but by and bye comes the rain and as though by an enchanter's wand the whole earth is covered with a mantle of green. So it is also with the affairs of men; things have their balances, their alleviations, their compensations, just as they have their drawbacks and debit accounts. This is borne witness to by popular saying:—"It is a long lane that has no turning;" "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown;" "The sleep of the labouring man is sweet." So the country mouse in bidding farewell to her town sister says:—

Ce n'est pas que je me pique
De tous votre festins du roi;
Mais rien ne vient m'interrompre;
Je mange tout à loisir.
Adieu donc; fi du plaisir
Que le peur peu corrompre!

The truth is that what the world considers the undesirable things of life, poverty, obscurity, isolation and lack of talents have often compensations which rouse suspicions as to the correctness of the world's judgment.

For instance, it is very pleasant no doubt to have comfort, wealth, success and happiness, but how very often do these things make us smug, self-satisfied, selfish and unsympathetic. Pain, poverty, failure, trouble are doubtless very unpleasant things, but how often do they knock the conceit out of us and make us more human, more lovable, more kind and sympathetic, more what other people at any rate think worth having in a man.

Again trouble shows us how much kindness and unselfish goodness there is in the world. The man who is rich, powerful and sought after has much reason too often to suspect his friends. He never knows whether they do not seek him for what he can give rather than for himself, but with the man who is down in the world it is not so; if his friends seek him it is for himself and he fears no ulterior motives.

Again trouble, pain and sickness are often the best of all medicines for a man's own soul. When all goes well with us physically and materially we are apt to forget God and to worship our own selves, our cleverness, our health, our wealth, our prosperity; we are content with a low ideal and have no vision of higher things; then comes some shattering blow and for a time our life feels wrecked, but after a while we realise that if we have been wrecked it is on the shore of a better country than our old land, that out of the storm wrack rise the mount in tops of higher ideals, and that in the valleys grow the plants of humble but soul-satisfying duties, and that life has a meaning and a joy that it utterly lacked before.

To the Christian no sorrow can be without its compensations because he believes that it comes from One Who "never willingly afflicteth or grieveth the children of men." He believes that in God's eyes the good outweighs the evil of it, and if he himself cannot yet see how, he is content to wait in patience on the greater knowledge and the deeper Love.

Money.

Most of us do not reflect enough what money is and what responsibilities it brings. Most of us have a vague idea that only rich people have such responsibilities, and that if we are not rich it does not matter. We criticise the extravagance, ostentation and self-indulgence of the idle rich, but obviously if they have a responsibility for the use of their money we have the same: the difference is one of degree, not of kind. Our responsibility springs from the fact that all money is a trust from God. We often hear people say, "May I not do as I like with my own?" Perhaps if it were your own, but either you inherited your money or you earned it. In the former case you owe it to the fact that God has put you in a certain position in life and given you your money, through no virtue of your own, to use for good. In the latter case it is God who gave you the strong arm or the keen brain which has enabled you to earn the money. If he withdrew his support for a moment you would not be able to earn a farthing.

Money is a trust for three purposes:—

- (1). To help forward the Kingdom of God.
- (2). To help your fellow men.
- (3). To support yourself.

You can if you like, and as most of us do, put these in the reverse order, but the responsibility still remains and though the relative proportions may vary, the responsibility rests just as much on the man with an income of £25 a year as it does on one with £250,000. Most of us forget this fact. It is this fact that constitutes one of the gravest objections to gambling. We are risking not our own but that surplus which belongs to God and our neighbour.

The Christian rule with regard to money is very clearly laid down by St. Paul. "On the first day of the week let each lay by in store as God hath prospered him"—i.e., let every Christian set aside weekly, or monthly, or quarterly if he be so paid, a portion of his earnings for religious and charitable uses.

Is a fair and just proportion so set aside in Australia? According to recently published statistics 15 millions are spent annually in Australia on alcoholic drinks, 4½ millions on amusements, 3½ millions on tobacco, and 2 millions on religion and charity combined. Can we regard it as satisfactory that we spend twelve times as much on drink, amusements and tobacco as on our neighbour's needs and the service of our God? People sometimes say that they are too poor to give, but it is very doubtful whether anyone is ever really the poorer for money given to the service of God. The saintly Bishop Wilson tells us that he devoted at first one, then two, three, four and finally five tenths of his income to religious and charitable uses in spite of bad times and unexpected expenses, "finding by the constant experience of more than forty years that God will be no man's debtor." We read in the New Testament that a poor widow gave all she had and Christ approved. Would he have done so if he had believed that by so doing she was risking her children's bread? She had faith and He knew that her faith would not be in vain.

What proportion of our income we should give is a matter for the individual conscience, but there rests on all, young and old, rich and poor alike, the duty of so using our money as to give an honest and fair proportion to the service of God and Christian charity. This duty we cannot escape and only if we fulfil it faithfully can we expect God's blessing on the remainder.

A Minor Tyrrell.

The story of Fr. R. de Bary as told in his auto-biographical "Franciscan Days of Vigil 1910" does not need the references of its preface to suggest that of the late Father Tyrrell.

Mr. de Bary is not a Tyrrell. He is altogether gentler and more peaceable, a recluse and a dreamer of dreams rather than a born fighter, but the story of his spiritual struggles and the developments that drove him from the Roman Communion are none the less of abiding interest.

He came of devout Roman Catholic stock and entered the Franciscan Order in England as the natural result of the influences about him in his boyhood. He notes that all his brothers and sisters likewise entered religious orders, but two of his brothers like himself broke away. He gives an interesting account of the monastic atmosphere and its hypnotic influence on an active-brained and imaginative boy. When he was ordained priest and was necessarily brought more in contact with the actual world of men and women he was confronted with the fact that the conventual life was quite aloof from that social aspect of Christianity which his belief in the Divine Theocracy had taught him to expect. He made efforts to gain permission to undertake religious social work among the poor, somewhat after the example of St. Francis, but his efforts were promptly suppressed.

What, however, finally made his position impossible was the discovery, which Father Tyrrell also made, that the whole Roman system is completely based upon the scholastic philosophy, and that scholasticism is quite incompatible with modern knowledge. There was no middle course. He must either accept scholasticism against his conscience and his intelligence or be disloyal to Rome, ready as he was to accept the general teaching of the Roman Church.

The predominant conviction of his mind was that Christianity was intended to be a Theocracy, a Kingdom of God. It was obvious that Rome was not fulfilling and could not fulfil this condition to more than a fraction even of professing Christians. Did the promise to St. Peter limit the power of God to extend His Kingdom to the professed obedience to the See of St. Peter? It seemed impossible, and he concluded that as Rome had practically abdicated in regard to a large part of mankind that the Spirit of God must have taken up and occupied the ground left vacant. Thus he was drawn to the Anglican Communion as being the communion which seemed to him to preserve most closely the Catholic tradition freed from the strangling bonds of scholastic philosophy and scholastic logic, and he took the step which Father Tyrrell was so often tempted to take and formally joined the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States.

Bishop's Tour in the Peninsula.

I left Thursday Island in the Suva on Monday, August 5th. The night was dark and about 10.30 p.m. the ship bumped heavily twice on a rock or reef, causing much alarm among the passengers. Fortunately she slid over the obstacle and went her way. I was asleep and heard nothing of it until next day. We reached Cooktown on Wednesday morning, and I gave an address at Evening Prayer. On Thursday and Friday I examined the Religious Instruction classes in the State School. Rev. J. H. Brown has succeeded in teaching them admirably, and I was greatly pleased with their knowledge of scripture and the keen interest they showed in their work. As elsewhere, not the slightest difficulty has been experienced in the working of the Act, and the teachers have given every assistance towards its smooth working.

On Friday afternoon I gave an address to the Mothers' Union, and on Saturday to the G.F.S. On Sunday I had a busy day and the services were well attended.

On Monday I left at 8 a.m. for the Laura. The train journey of 67 miles is not very interesting and we did not reach the Laura until 1 p.m. I found Mr. Wilkinson awaiting me, but we could not leave until the following day as there were 13 horses to be shod, and the blacksmith came up in the train from Cooktown to do it.

Mr. Wilkinson was up at daybreak next morning finally fixing and arranging heavy pack loads for eight of the horses; a portion of a load sufficed for his own modest wants, and one was assigned to my less slender requirements, and the rest were devoted to a large kerosene lantern, slides, service books, etc., and chiefly to heavy loads of corn and compressed fodder. Mr. Wilkinson goes on the sound principle that if a horse does not eat he cannot be expected to work, and always carries feed with him, a laborious and costly precaution, but one without which he could not possibly have done the work he does. It is no small task to arrange and adjust for the first time eight loads, and I watched with much appreciation of the skill and practice displayed. I say watched because I have discovered that when a man is thoroughly methodical and efficient, inefficient would-be helpers can help most by only doing what they are asked to do, and for the rest taking care not to get in the way. With all exertions we were not ready to start till half-past twelve, and after the pack horses had been got under way with the black boy, I thought in the innocence of my heart that Mr. W. would refresh himself after his herculean labours with lunch, but no such trifles are allowed to hinder his course, and we set off at once after the packs. About 4 p.m. we reached Fairview Telegraph Station and a cup of tea was permitted to my frailty, but it was dark when we reached our camp on the bank of the Kennedy River, and all the horses had to be unpacked and fed before any thoughts of tea, which we got about 8.30 p.m., and so after evensong went to bed very tired so far as my idle self was concerned. I do not know how Mr. Wilkinson felt who had been doing all the work. He is always cheerful so it did not appear. If the work is hard when, as now, the weather is comparatively cool, what when, on the approach of and after the wet season, the ground becomes a bog into which the horses sink till they have to be almost dug out, or the pouring rain ensures a wet and miserable camp after a day of tremendous labour? Next day, Wednesday, August 14th, we were up at daylight, and by hard work got the pack horses off at 10.15 a.m., waiting half-an-hour ourselves for Matins. It was a long dreary day with no time for dinner (I do not think Mr. W. ever does have time for dinner), and no water fit to drink until we got to the Hann River, a beautiful running stream, just at dark. It was 9 p.m. before we had finished our frugal evening meal, and I was glad to turn in, thoroughly tired.

Next day was like the previous day, only more so. We got the packs off at 10 a.m. and left half-an-hour later ourselves. The country is sandy and uninteresting. About 3 p.m. we passed the Morehead, a wide river with many billabongs, but not running. We were glad to get a drink from one of the waterholes. Another nine miles of very heavy country, one of the creeks being appropriately called Dead Horse Creek, brought us to our camping ground, a small and nearly dry creek. We had to wait until dark for the pack-horses, and then came the usual two or three hours' work. There was grass here for the first time. During the last two days we have not seen a human being, and indeed, not even an animal, a few birds and insects forming the only life. We turned in very tired, but were up at 5 a.m. on Friday and had breakfast before daylight, and so expedited matters that we got away by 9.30 a.m. We crossed a small stony range, and then three hours of more heavy sand brought us about 12.30 p.m. to the lonely telegraph station of Musgrave. Here I was delighted to meet Mr. L., whom I had met on previous occasions when he was stationed further up the Peninsula. I found him looking very well, and found that he had spent a year's well earned holiday in travelling in Central Africa as a change, I suppose, from the heat of North Queensland. Anyhow, it seems to have restored his health. There is a hot sulphur spring about a quarter of a mile from the station, and he had a bath about 5ft. 6in. deep, 9ft. wide, and 30ft. long, dug out of the hard soil, and this is filled with beautifully clear water, just cool enough to enable one to enjoy it. The water entirely renews itself in about eighteen hours, so that it is always fresh and clean. A bath was wonderfully refreshing, and then came dinner. To appreciate dinner one must have been travelling without any for three days, and though the resources of a bush telegraph station are not great, it seemed a Homeric feast. Mr. L. is interested in Natural History, and showed me a young carpet snake which he is educating. He assured me that he had quite the expression of a faithful dog. I suppose that is why it looked at me as though it would like to take a bite out of me. Our brief halt came at last too soon to an end, and before 3 p.m. we were again on the road which leaves the telegraph line a few miles further on and climbs up a range for about eight miles, culminating in a very sharp, rocky ascent. The way was rough and toilsome, but the memory of dinner made it seem less weary than the other days; and pushing on rapidly we reached camp on a little creek on the tableland about 6.30 p.m., after a ride of about 30 miles.

Next morning we were again up and breakfasted before daylight; and as I folded up my camp bedstead I was not sorry to think that for the next week I hoped to have no further use for it.

How I am going to get back from Coen where Mr. W. leaves me is not yet quite clear. We had breakfast again on Saturday before daylight and had a long, weary ride over endless dry gullies until 1 p.m. I was just coming to the conclusion that it was another "no dinner" day when the nearly deserted township of Yarraden hove in sight. There was only one family there, and three or four men, but we were hospitably received, and revived with that dinner which I fear has attained an altogether disproportionate place in my thoughts. Immediately after, we went on again a few miles to the Lukin, where a small battery is at work, and a few men. After leaving the Lukin, Mr. W. struck through the bush for a few miles and came down right on the hut of an old prospector who was cutting up firewood. He formed a fine picture with his long white beard, and strong bare arms tanned to the shoulder, and was a great friend of Mr. W's. He told us that he gathered one or two of the neighbouring old prospectors of an evening, and following Mr. W's suggestion would read and get them to read seven or eight chapters of the Bible, consecutively, ending with prayer and hymns. Such conduct is most unusual in the northern bush, and Mr. W. tells me that it has been the centre of a real influence for good. From here we rode for many miles, calling in here and there on the huts of prospectors, all old and single, and all getting the barest livelihood, counting their gold not by the ounce but by the pennyweight. One man told us that he had got 1½ pennyweight as the result of the last month's work. They were all worse off than usual owing to the failure of the wet season, which did not cause enough water to run to wash their "dirt." Needless to say, that Mr. W. was known to and welcomed by all, and as we had to hurry on he promised to stay a longer time with them on his return from the far north in about two months' time. About four miles from Ebagoolah it began to rain, and the thoughtful and resourceful Mr. W. commandeered a big corn-sack from one of the prospectors to serve as an apron, so that as I had already leather gaiters I made my entry into Ebagoolah in full episcopal attire. An old red-hot Socialist on whom we called was doubtless scandalised at the ostentation of episcopal attire, but he courteously refrained from condemnation. We reached our destination about 6.30 p.m., and very glad I was to get in. I had had just about enough, and do not think I could have done a sixth equally heavy day. Hardly were we well settled in, our packs in this instance having fortunately arrived before us, when down came the rain in good earnest, and we should have been wet to the skin as our coats were with the packs. We were most thankful that the first rain should be when we were safe under shelter instead of camped in the open. Ebagoolah is a small mining township very much on the down grade, the population being less than half what it was when I was last here, some six or seven years ago. Curiously enough, all the parents of the children in the school are with one exception Roman Catholics, so that there is not much to be done here in the way of religious instruction. I am most thankful to have made this ride just to know what Mr. W. really has to do. We came by his usual stages, but of course under the best weather conditions. I see that Labour men in Sydney are calling out for a six-hours' day. How would they like the work of this priest, at work at strenuous physical labour from 5 a.m. to 8 p.m., with two intervals of twenty minutes for meals?

On Sunday the services were well attended considering the very small church population left on the field. I have always noticed the fact that in a declining place the church population is generally the first to leave, so that it is nearly always much smaller than the normal population. I am not quite sure whether the fact is a tribute to our enterprise, or a reflection on our restlessness and want of hope.

On Monday evening, Mr. Wilkinson gave a lantern lecture in the schoolroom, which was much appreciated. Carrying slides on horseback is, however, risky work. He recently got £7 worth of new slides, and on the very first time he went out with them the packhorse played up with the pack and smashed every single slide to atoms. Mr. W. carries with him about 250 slides.

We left Ebagoolah on Wednesday morning, and arrived at Coen. about 30 miles to the north of it about 5 p.m. Coen is an old-established and prettily situated town, surrounded by hills and very healthy. Unfortunately like nearly all the northern mining towns, it is very much on the down grade, which is a great pity. The population has considerably decreased since my last visit. The South Coen runs through the town and into the Archer. The other Coen is nearly 100 miles to the north, and runs into the sea between Duyphen Point and Albatross Bay.

On Thursday and Friday we visited the people. On Thursday evening, Mr. W. showed his lantern, and on Friday evening a very pleasant social gathering was held at the house of Mrs. Armbrust to give me an opportunity, which I valued, of meeting new people. Between forty and fifty people were present, and innumerable babies which were deposited in all convenient places and behaved with much decorum. On Saturday we rode out to the Police Camp, where I found a constable who remembered my first visit to McKinlay fifteen years ago, the occasion on which a bellicose inhabitant wished to fight me on the suspicion that I was the new policeman.

On Sunday we had a celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., with seven communicants; and at 10.30 a.m. I confirmed four candidates. In the afternoon I addressed the excellent little Sunday School of about thirty children conducted by Mrs. Maine, assisted by Miss Armbrust. I was much pleased with the school, and to note the regularity with which it has been conducted and attended. At night we had most of the male population of the Coen at the service, and as many of the women as the children allowed to come.

On Monday, Mr. Wilkinson saw me a mile or two on my way, and then set off for the far north, while I travelled on, with a black boy to drive the horses, to Ebagoolah, and next day to Yarraden. Next day I had a long stage of 32 miles down the range to Musgrave Telegraph Station, which I reached about 4 p.m. By this time I was in good condition and did not mind the riding, but one has to go slowly not to lose sight of the packhorses, and slow travelling is always tedious. Mr. Lindeman made me most hospitably welcome; and next morning I set off with a white boy who was going down the line to meet the inspector who was coming up. The first night we camped about 27 miles from Musgrave, but next day we could only do about 21, as there was no water on which to camp. On the third day we made a very early start, and a little beyond Black Dog Creek, the first water, met no less than three inspectors—police, works and telegraph officers—travelling together up the line. They kindly invited me to turn back to Black Dog and share what they modestly called "lunch," but which was to me after days of salt beef and bread a magnificent banquet of chicken, a lordly ham, preserved fruit and cake, served under a specially erected canopy. I thought it is well to be an inspector. I believe that bishop means "inspector," but he does not run to chicken and ham in these parts. I tore myself away from my fellow-inspectors after assimilating a plentiful supply of good things and reached Fairview Telegraph Office about 4 p.m., after about a 30-miles day's journey. As I had most of the packing and unpacking of the horses to do during this six days' ride, I had a good opportunity of experiencing what Mr. Wilkinson's daily work is in addition to the actual labour of travelling, and I was glad to have the experience, though usually pretty tired at the end of the day. Fortunately, the horses were no trouble, being always on hand for their feed in the morning.

I left Fairview early next morning and got into Laura about 11 a.m., feeling very fit after my long ride of six and a-half days continuous travelling. Next day I got the train to Cooktown. I must acknowledge gratefully the kindness and hospitality with which I was everywhere received.

Sunday, 6th October, was observed as a day of special thanksgiving for being relieved of the burden of the debt. For eighteen years a debt of £420 had hung over the parish. In May of this year it was determined to make a special effort at debt reduction. No sooner was a start made than an anonymous donor sent along the magnificent gift of £250. This gave the parish fresh encouragement, and everyone set harder to work. The effort was to take the form of a two-day sale of gifts. This was held on 26th and 27th September. The week previous news came to hand of a gift of £50 from Mr. A. G. Elmslie.

The sale realised a net profit of £95, to which was added a subsidy of 5 per cent from the Bishop, and 20 per cent from the Diocese. As a result, the whole debt of £420 was tackled and wiped out in four months. It was to thank God for this that a special day was set aside. At 7 a.m. the rector celebrated, and was assisted by the Rev. A. McD. Hassell from Georgetown. At 8 a.m. Mr. Hassell celebrated, assisted by the rector. Festal evensong was held at 8 p.m. The officiants were the rector and the Rev. A. McD. Hassell, whilst the sermon was preached by the Bishop of the Diocese. The Te Deum brought to a close a day of hearty services.

CONFERENCE OF GULF CLERGY.

Under the presidency of the Bishop of the Diocese, a conference of the clergy of Croydon, Normanston and Georgetown, and Mr. Matthews of the Mitchell River Mission, was held at Croydon rectory on Wednesday, 9th October.

Amongst the subjects discussed were—the Diocesan Conference, State School lessons, the suggestion of forming a Gulf Brotherhood, the Gulf Church Gazette, hours of service, immorality, Bishop's visits to the Gulf.

There were very useful and helpful debates on all subjects. It was unanimously decided to hold these conferences yearly, and pleasure was expressed that the Bishop was able to be present at the first.

Thursday was observed as a Quiet day for the clergy, when four addresses were given by the Bishop on "Hope."

Early on Friday morning the Bishop, Rev. J. Tweedie, and Mr. Matthews left for Normanston, Mr. Hassell remaining until the following Wednesday morning, when he coached to Georgetown.

Croydon, N.Q.,

10th October, 1912.

To the Editor,

"The Carpenterian."

Dear Sir,—I notice in your October issue, in an account of the Bishop's visit to Croydon, that the impression is given that a southern friend of mine had donated the generous sum of £250 towards the debt on St. Margaret's Church. May I take the liberty of correcting that impression? This money was given by a former resident of the oldfield, and was earned by him while in Croydon. He is a man who had worshipped in the Church, and was impelled by a desire to give back something which he had won from the field to relieve the trouble in which we were.

May I at the same time state that Mr. Elmslie, who gave us £50, was also at one time a resident on the field. So the whole £395 which was got to either here in four months was Croydon money, either directly or indirectly raised in the parish.—Yours, &c.,

L. AYSKUGH, Rector.

Why I am a Sceptic.

On one very vital point I am a profound sceptic. I cannot possibly bring myself to believe that life is so dull, so meaningless and so petty as a great majority of people would have us believe.

The popular creed to-day is: "Great is man! At least he is the greatest thing in the world that is worth practically troubling about. Get money, which means good eating and drinking, comfort and enjoyment. Enjoy these things while you can, before you get too sick or old to find any pleasure in them. As for a future life, it is too vague to be weighted against the enjoyment of the present. As for spiritual ideals in this life, they have no cash value, and therefore, can be safely neglected."

Now all the intellect and all the common-sense that I have rebels against this popular dogmatism, this new religion which makes man, and the most obvious part of man, the measure of life. However confidently it is reiterated by the practical materialism of the day, it does not convince me one little bit. No doubt it is in one sense pleasant not to trouble about duties, not to be troubled by ideals, to do what one likes without bothering about the maxims of moralists; but when I ask myself, "Is it true?" "Is it a rational theory of life as it is?" reason will give me no answer but No! No! No! However much I might like to believe, I cannot. I remain a profound sceptic.

One reason for my scepticism is that life on this theory is so profoundly dull. Certainly pleasure does give one a thrill to begin with, but one wearies so soon of pleasurable sensations, they must be continually stronger, more piquant, more frequent, if they are not to become tiresome. After a time one exhausts the pleasure of them, though the desire for them remains, a mere goad and taskmaster. What does it all mean, whither does it tend? We get wearier and wearier; as we get older real pleasures become rarer and rarer, and we cling to life not because we desire it, but because we fear death.

I do not find this tedium of life among the animals. Life for them may have its moments of fear and terror lest they should lose it; but life itself is full of interest and pleasure. I find no tedium or lack of pleasure in the whole of things, in Nature. I find it full of activities and processes of absorbing interest down to the smallest details. What is wrong with man? Why do we hear from him such unceasing complaints, discontent and grumbling?

Surely because man has largely mistaken his vocation. He is here like the animals, not merely to enjoy himself, but to work for his life; but his life includes elements that the animal's life does not include, and if he omits these spiritual elements, this duty to One higher than himself, then everything goes wrong.

We have a faint analogy in the relations of the domestic animals to man. If a domestic animal, horse or dog for instance, thinks that he can follow his own desires entirely he soon finds himself in trouble, out of harmony with the conditions of his life; and so, on a much more extended scale, with man.

On the other hand, the man who recognises the higher duties and relationships of life, who lives not for himself but for others and for God, finds that life is intensely interesting, and that as he grows older and rids himself of some of the inevitable self-engrossments of youth, it becomes more and more interesting. He sees no reason to conclude that death puts any period to these interests, for they are for the most part not concerned with things that death can affect. Given the survival of consciousness, the things in which he is interested will not pass with this world, but have fuller and freer course. He sees a meaning and a purpose in life, he sees that suffering is often entirely rational and leads to good; if he cannot grasp the meaning of life he can at least grasp enough of it to understand that it may have a meaning to one who knows more of it than he does. He has enough to act on. For me, I prefer rationality to irrationality, and therefore I am profoundly sceptical as to the truth of modern materialistic dogmatism.

A Visit to Yarrabah.

BY THE BISHOP

I am frequently asked for my opinion of the Yarrabah Mission, and as I have recently paid the mission a brief visit after an absence of several years, I should like to give such an account as one can form from a hurried inspection.

In company with the Archbishop of Brisbane, Rev. F. D. Witt Batty, and Mr. Justice Shand, I left Cairns on Sunday afternoon, September 22nd, in a good, useful launch belonging to the mission, and reached Yarrabah in time for the evening service, at which the Archbishop preached. We spent the whole of Monday at the mission, leaving for Cairns about 9 p.m. The character of the mission has very largely changed since my last visit. The population of Yarrabah itself consists largely of children, with very few adult male workers; the majority of adults are now in some eight or nine settlements from two to twenty miles distant. These settlements are rapidly becoming self-supporting, their produce being bought by the mission and paid for in stores and goods. The expenditure has been very greatly reduced since the advent of the present head, and the natives do far more work than they did previously. The white staff has been also very largely reduced, as the present system requires much less supervision. The native court has also been revived, with excellent results. Each settlement is under a native teacher, and regular services are held. On great occasions, such as the Archbishop's visit, all gather at Yarrabah itself. The superintendent calculates that all the out-stations should be self-supporting by the end of this year. I am inclined to think that the mission is now at length on the right lines. This is not intended as a reflection on the past, as the transition from purely communal work to individual effort and individual returns was certainly not possible until a number of years had elapsed, and the people educated up to it. The same change has taken place at Mapoon, but we are not yet ready for it on any large scale at the Mitchell, though we look forward to it as an ideal and have made some steps already in that direction. At Moa it is the system which, owing to the more advanced standard of the people, we were able to adopt from the beginning.

Everyone seemed happy and contented, and I have every hope for the future. Among the white workers is Miss Broom, who volunteered for the Diocese of Carpentaria, but went to Yarrabah to acquire experience for a time in the work before going to a more remote mission.

G., Bp. of C.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held on Wednesday, November 13th, at 5 p.m., at Bishop's House. Present—the Bishop, the Subdean, Messrs Lee Bryce, Sullivan, Eggers and Allen.

It was resolved that a letter be written to the Rector and Wardens of Croydon congratulating them on the removal of the debt, also to the Manager of the Q. N. Bank thanking him for preparing a most careful terrier of the property and deeds belonging to the diocese. An application from Croydon that the amount hitherto paid by the diocese for the interest on the debt should be continued towards the Stipend Fund was agreed to.

An appeal from Georgetown against the Diocesan assessment was upheld on the ground that Georgetown was not a parish. An application for a grant towards a church porch was postponed.

An application for the use of the Banzai for fishing by the Moa people was considered and approved if certain conditions with regard to running the mail were fulfilled.

A report from the Douglas Memorial Chapel Committee showed that the contractors had not yet quite completed the work. It was resolved that they be requested to complete their contract at once.

It was resolved to put in hand the following orders for furniture:

Altar, £10 10s., given by the Wyben Lodge.

Prayer Desk, £10, given by the District Grand Lodge of North Queensland.

Cross, £5, given by the Torres Lodge.

Memorial Window, £25, given by the Torres Straits Islanders.

The design for the window has been received from England and represents St. John in old age with the face of the late Mr. John Douglas. The likeness is very good, and the window will form a great addition to the church. It will be some months before the window and furniture can be obtained. It was resolved to have the furniture made in Australia if possible.

The Bishop announced that Mrs. Pritt had given £105 for lead ballast and other needs of the Francis Pritt.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Volume XIII. - No. 49. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1918

The Provincial Synod.

The Queensland Provincial Synod held a brief but most important session at Townsville on Tuesday and Wednesday, September 17th and 18th. Practically the sole subject of discussion was what steps can Queensland take, and what steps is it willing to take towards the autonomy of the Church in Australia, which is at present tied and bound, not by the bonds of common discipline and doctrine with the Church in England, for these no one desires to break or weaken, but by the legal nexus of English Parliamentary Law, so that we are bound by laws which we have had no voice in framing in the past, and shall have no voice in framing in the future. It is generally admitted in Queensland at least, that the present state of things is illogical, unjust, and harmful to the life of the Church, but we are by no means agreed as to the best time or best method for remedying the evil, and it will be remembered that while all the other dioceses were in favour of action being taken by Queensland a large majority of the laity in the Brisbane diocese threw out the bill which was lately presented to them. The Provincial Synod though numbering only about 30 members was fairly representative of the best clerical and much of the best lay opinion in Queensland.

Our own diocese was represented by the Bishop, the Subdean Rev. E. J. Nash, Rev. E. Taffs, and Messrs Sieley and MacIntosh, two Townsville laymen who kindly acted for us. Townsville being the place of meeting the Diocese of North Queensland was fully represented. Rockhampton was fully represented by four of its most capable clergy and by Major Dawson and Mr. Holyoake Woodd (brother of our late missionary). Brisbane was well represented by clergy, Archdeacon Lefanu, and Canon Pattinson, and Canons Osborne and Hay, who fairly reflected the division of opinion in Synod, while the laity contained such old experienced and valued church workers as Mr. R. O. Bourne and Col. Moore. Unfortunately none of the Brisbane laity were those originally appointed as delegates, a real source of loss to Synod, as the members elected to fill vacancies naturally felt that they spoke with less authority.

The Bishop of North Queensland introduced a series of seven resolutions on behalf of the Bishops of the Province who felt bound to give the Synod a lead in a matter which they felt to be of such great importance.

They ran as follows:—

1.—“That this Provincial Synod of Queensland assert the general principle of autonomy of national churches within the Anglican Communion, believing that national churches will give their best contribution to the life of the Church Universal if allowed to grow up freely in their own soil, and to develop under local conditions.”

2.—“That this Provincial Synod of Queensland assert that the Church of England in the Dioceses of Australia and Tasmania should be autonomous: that it should be enabled to act effectively, in matters affecting Australia, and that it shall remain in full communion with the Church of England in England.”

3.—That this Provincial Synod of Queensland believes that the only possible way to obtain autonomy for the Australian Church is by the Dioceses in the various States approaching the Legislatures of their respective States for relief from the legal nexus with the establishment in England.”

4.—“That this Provincial Synod of Queensland, in order to give effect to the foregoing motions, instruct the standing committee of the Province—(1) To take immediate steps to procure the drafting of a Church of England Relief Bill by the best available legal draftsmen, who shall, if necessary, take counsel's opinion in England; (2) to send the proposed Church of England Relief Bill without unnecessary delay to the various Diocesan Synods for consideration by them, and return to the next session of Provincial Synod to be held before the 1915 session of General Synod; (3) to send a report of the action taken, together with a copy of the proposed Church of England Relief Bill, if passed, for the information of General Synod, and to request General Synod to seek legal opinion as to methods by which the Church of England in Australia and Tasmania can be organised effectively as an autonomous Church in full communion with the Church of England in England.”

These resolutions were carried, most of them unanimously, and all by a large majority, and without the need of a division.

This does not mean that they were not keenly scrutinised, criticised and discussed.

The Synod was unanimous with possibly one or two exceptions, that it desired the Church in Australia to be autonomous so far as regards subjection to the English Parliamentary law, and perfectly unanimous that it desired to remain in the fullest possible communion with the Church in the old country. It was also unanimous, with again one or two possible but not explicit exceptions, that it did not desire the Church in Queensland to be autonomous by itself even as a temporary means towards obtaining the autonomy of the whole church.

The resolutions adopted by Provincial Synod represent the opinion of the clergy and laity of all the dioceses except Brisbane and of the clergy of that diocese. It remains to be seen whether in the two years which will probably elapse before the subject comes again before the Brisbane Synod the laity will have come to see that they were under a misapprehension in thinking that there was any danger to the church in the proposals, and that the church is likely to suffer by their rejection. With a view to making the issue plain a pamphlet is being issued containing the speeches of all the Queensland Bishops, together with a short history of the question and issue. We commend the pamphlet to our readers who desire fuller information on the subject.

Nomenclature of North Queensland.

At a meeting of the Bishops of the Province of Queensland, held September 17th, 1912, the Archbishop read a protest from the Bishop of Carpentaria on the subject of the name of the diocese of North Queensland. After some discussion the two Bishops concerned asked the other Bishops present for an expression of their opinion. The Metropolitan and the Bishop of Rockhampton accordingly replied after further consideration in the following terms: “We are of opinion that there is no authority capable of effecting a change in the name of the Diocese of North Queensland, except the Diocese of North Queensland itself. We recognise that there would be technical difficulties in the way of any change of name, involving considerable trouble to the diocese of North Queensland.”

We are, however, of the opinion that the present name is highly unsatisfactory, and if the Diocesan authorities could see their way to an alteration they would be acting in the best interests of the Church.”

In the course of his address to his Synod on October 28th, 1912, the Bishop of North Queensland said:—

“While acknowledging to the full, that regrettable inconvenience to the Diocese of Carpentaria must have arisen from a nomenclature which is certainly not now accurate, it is only fair that I should point out that a change of name would entail considerable inconvenience and loss upon the Diocese of North Queensland.”

“(1). The Diocese of North Queensland has not yet passed out of a missionary state. We are still dependent upon the generosity of Church people in the Old Country. Much interest has been stirred up, but it appears to me extremely probable that a change of name would largely retard our interests. It would particularly cause perplexity among those who while they are not regular subscribers are still ready to help work in this Diocese.”

“(2). The second inconvenience likely to be brought about by a change of nomenclature is a legal one. The Chancellor of the Diocese, in a memorandum to me upon the subject has expressed his opinion that ‘if it were decided to change the name of the Diocese it might be necessary to get an Act passed in Parliament for the purpose, and it would certainly be necessary to pass a Canon through our Synod validating the new name. The Canon would have to be recorded under the Act of 1895. Then the existing Deeds of Grant and Certificates of Title for Diocesan properties would have to be surrendered and fresh ones bearing the new name obtained from the Real Property Office. The expense of this would be considerable. And a new Diocesan Seal would be required.’ ‘Who would pay the expense?’ the Chancellor asks with his usual practicality.”

“(3). The third reason for our not desiring a change is one of sentiment. We have been known as the Diocese of North Queensland for thirty-four years. We have grown up with this part of tropical Australia, and by a thousand living fibres is the Church bound not to all in North Queensland, but to nine-tenths of the population of the whole district. Church people who have grown up all their lives, thus, will not find it easy nor pleasant to change. They will ask, should not the daughter bear even considerable inconvenience rather than urge the mother who gave her life to change the name she has held for over 30 years? These are sentimental reasons. But they will be keenly felt—most keenly outside Townsville.”

“I have put forward these reasons against change, because I consider it is my duty to do so. None the less, I feel that Synod cannot lightly put aside my claim for justice, and the Diocese of Carpentaria undoubtedly believes that it is suffering loss and wrong. I do not recommend Synod to take hasty action one way or another. I suggest that they appoint a committee to consider the matter, with power to consult with the Diocese of Carpentaria and the Metropolitan upon the subject. In view of the speedy advent of a new Bishop, it may be advisable to make the committee report to the Diocesan Council, with a view to action being taken, if necessary, before the next Bishop is consecrated and enthroned. I certainly feel that this Diocese can much more easily change its name now than it could have done ten years ago, and that the proper time to make any change is before the enthronement of a new Bishop."

The following resolution was subsequently moved by Archdeacon Williams, and carried:—"That a Special Committee be appointed to consider the nomenclature of the Diocese, that it be empowered to consult with the Metropolitan and the Bishop of Carpentaria, and it be instructed to make a report to the Diocesan Council at an early date in order that the Diocesan Council may make a recommendation to the next session of Synod; the Special Committee to consist of the Rev. A. E. Saxon, the Rev. C. W. Tomkins, and the mover."

Proposed Enlargement of the Diocese.

In his address on Monday, October 28th, 1912, to Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland the Bishop (Dr. Frodsham) said:—"In our 'Year Book' we read as follows:—

"The Northern boundary is defined by a line running from the eastern boundary of the State of South Australia at 19.30 S. to 144 longitude east of the meridian, and thence by a line running due north 16.40 parallel south, and thence by a line running due east to the coast, intersecting Port Douglas on the north and Cairns on the south.

"The western boundary is the border line of the States of Queensland and South Australia. The eastern boundary is the ocean.

If you will look at a map you will see that this arrangement gave the Diocese of Carpentaria the maximum of bush and the minimum of settled coast line. Since 1902 the railway line has been opened from Cairns to Klondike, and it is now passing through the Georgetown mining field, both of which places are in the Diocese of Carpentaria, and yet are much south of Cairns, which remains in this Diocese. The railway sooner or later will reach Croydon and Normanton, and then will be linked up with the system which connects the South of Queensland and the Northern Territory. But even now the Bishop of Carpentaria cannot get to the main railway of his Diocese without first coming through a part of this Diocese. I am not claiming that this is unjust. I simply assert that it is inconvenient. It is not to the best interests of the Church that the time of a Bishop should be thus wasted. The situation will become much more inconvenient if, through any Federal legislation, such as is contemplated, oversea steamers are not allowed to carry coast-wise passengers between Thursday Island and Cairns.

"The Bishop of Carpentaria and I, during the Bishops' meetings in connection with the recent session of Provincial Synod, asked the other Bishops present for an expression of their opinion. They replied as follows:—

"In connection with this subject we think it may be well to suggest that in view of the growth of population and the development of the railway system of the State, it might be desirable for representatives of the two Dioceses concerned to confer about the desirableness or otherwise of some alteration in the boundaries as at present defined.

"With this carefully guided recommendation I heartily concur, and I invite Synod to appoint a committee to consider the northern boundaries of this Diocese. I do not overlook the fact that any readjustment must entail the transfer of Church property and the temporary dislocation of existing organisations. It will be a wrench to any parish who may not like being handed over to another Diocese. But it behoves all concerned to look at the matter in no narrow selfish fashion. It is the welfare of the whole Church of Christ which we must consider first and last."

Subsequently the following resolution was carried on the motion of Archdeacon Williams:—"That a Special Committee be appointed to consider the possibility of a readjustment of the Northern Boundary of the Diocese, so as to allow the Bishop of Carpentaria better access to the railway line connecting the Southern parts of his Diocese with the coast; that the Committee consult with the parochial authorities of Cairns and with the Community of St. Barnabas (North Queensland Bush Brotherhood), with the Bishop of Carpentaria, and with the Metropolitan of the Province, and report to the next ordinary session of Synod, the Committee to consist of the Rev. A. E. Saxon, the Rev. C. W. Tomkins, the Rev. J. Needham, the Rev. R. Halse, Mr. L. C. Woolrych and the mover."

Should the proposed alteration come about it would mean that the white population of the diocese would be more than doubled, although the area would only be slightly increased. There can be little doubt that the proposed alterations would lead to greater efficiency of administration than is possible at present.

Mariolatry.

We are frequently told that the accusation of Mariolatry brought against Roman Catholics is an entire prejudice, and that the reverence paid to Our Lady is only what is due to the first and holiest of the saints. We had recently sent us a copy of the "Rosary" for June, 1912, a Roman Catholic periodical for parochial use, and in it we find an article by Père Garraud in which the following passage occurs:—"Christ and Mary, then, are to the living soul what the lily is to the artist who paints, they are at once rule, model, and ideal. All science consists in knowing Them; all piety consists in loving Them; all perfection in imitating Them. It is the great law formulated in these terms by the Apostle St. Paul, Quos præsavit et prædestinavit conformes fieri imagini filii sui. It was of Christ without doubt that these words were written, but Mary being the perfect copy, or rather complement of the Man-God from every point of view, of her, as of Him, the necessity of this imitation and of this resemblance must be affirmed." It will be observed that Mary is placed on a perfect equality with Christ. "All science consists in knowing Them, all piety consists in loving Them, all perfection in imitating Them." Christ told us that the Heavenly Father was the type of all perfection. "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect," but Père Garraud tells us that all knowledge, all piety, all perfection, can be measured by a human being who, though we gladly honour her as the best and holiest of the saints, was certainly not infallible. Then we are told that Mary was the complement of the Man-God from every point of view." Ei her Père Garraud does not know when he is talking nonsense or he is guilty of appalling blasphemy. Complement means "Anything necessary to be added to make a person or thing complete," so that Mary has to be added to Christ to make Him complete "from every point of view." While the Roman Church, which is supposed to exercise such strict discipline, permits its children to be fed with such nauseous stuff, English churchmen may be pardoned for thinking that charges of Mariolatry are not brought without reason against its popular teaching.

The Old Royalist's Creed.

The Marquis de Kermahuc on his death bed: "I have my own ideas on eternity. Look here! People like me are not saints—far from it. We have been too fond of fair faces, and have been too obstinate to obey anyone, even our Holy Mother the Church. But, le bon Dieu, who lets nothing be lost, enlists people like us for great occasions, as the King used to enlist the Swiss: undisciplined soldiers, pillagers, and rogues, but steady under fire. So with regard to us. We do Him poor service most times, but He knows that we are always ready to go for the scoundrels who think they know everything, know nothing, and deny His existence: for the villains who are plundering His Church, the old Mother whom one vexes sometimes, but loves because it was she who made France. So He is like to have some spot at the entrance of His paradise, a kind of guardroom for soldiers like us. Oh! it won't be a grand place like the dwelling of the Saints, those who were pure, submissive, and virtuous, but it will be tolerable, I imagine. Le bon Dieu will come there from time to time and will say to us, 'Good morning, bad lot! You are not worth much, but you were always ready to risk your skin for me, come, I will tell St. Peter to grant you some little alleviations.' I am not ambitious, Jacques: I hope for a place in this quarter. Do me the kindness to go and find a parish priest I know—a thin fair little fellow who comes from the Auray district; only a Breton can understand my sins, which perhaps have not been so great as they seem.—Les Morts qui parlent,

E. M. DE VOGÜÉ,"

New Rector of Darwin.

The Bishop has appointed Rev. W. A. Fletcher, Th. L., Rector of Darwin, in succession to Rev. W. E. Godson, M.A. Mr. Fletcher is Curate of All Saints, Petersham, Sydney, and has three years leave of absence from the Archbishop of Sydney. He was ordained in 1907, and has done good work in his recent position. He was to arrive in Darwin by the Mataram on December 14th, and will take charge at the beginning of the year.

Visit to Mitchell River Mission.

I determined this year to visit the Mitchell River Mission by land instead of by the Francis Pritt as usual, as I wished to visit some of the stations which I had not seen for eight years. Accordingly I left Normanton on Tuesday, October 15th, and went by coach 60 miles to Delta Station, calling at Maggieville and Midlothian on the way. Mr. Matthews had brought in horses to Normanton but they were in such poor condition that I sent him on ahead to Delta to give the horses a rest. They were, however, still so poor that we had to purchase a pair of horses at Delta to help us on our way. A few miles from Delta we met Mr. Wambi going in for stores, and were glad of his help, as just as we met him one of the horses managed to shift his pack, and we were delayed some time gathering up the fragments. Mr. Wambi kindly lent me a riding horse, which was strong and in good condition and carried me out well. He was supposed to buck on occasions, but evidently had a sense of responsibility, for he behaved admirably. Accompanied by the mailman who was going in the same direction we reached Macaroni station the same evening, and next day Mr. R. accompanied us as far as our midday camp on some fine waterholes, leaving us there to look after a bush fire which was threatening the run. In the afternoon we crossed the Staaten River, a wide tidal stream into which in flood time the main flood waters of the Mitchell find their way, and stayed for the night at Mr. Wambi's, about four miles further on. Eighteen months ago there was a terrible flood, and everyone had to take refuge on the roof, with a heavy loss of cattle and horses, the flood being ten feet over much of the country. Strange to say, this flood which came down from the Upper Mitchell did not affect the mission or the waters near the mouth of the Mitchell, but washing away Highbury station altogether, poured itself into the Nassau and Staaten, and so into the sea. Next day we travelled over salt pans and a big plain ten or twelve miles across to Inkerman, where we found Mr. Curr at home. The duck across the lagoon were so plentiful that they hid the pond in places, and Mr. C. killed eleven with one shot. We were glad of an afternoon's rest, and next day we travelled on to Waterloo. The owner was absent, but we were made welcome and were much amused by a young emu, which had come to the conclusion that a cattle bitch was its mother and insisted on camping at night among the puppies, who did not quite know what to make of their feathered brother whom their mother accepted with philosophical unconcern. Next day we rode to the Nassau River, where we found the mailman who had gone ahead waiting for the tide to ebb before trying the crossing which is deep and none too safe on account of the large alligators who take their toll of horses and cattle along the banks. Many of these brutes run up to fifteen or twenty feet, and the skull of one which I measured was 2ft. 7in. in length. However, we found that by taking off the pack-bags and carrying them in front of us we could cross safely; and about four hours afterwards we reached Lochnagar. Mr. Matthews, who had a fresh horse, determined to push on home, as the mission was only twelve miles away, but our horses were so done up that I determined to wait till next day, and spent the night with Mr. F. Simpson, who lives here alone with only one half-caste boy. Next morning I parted from the mailman, Mr. Alick Macdonald, who had given us much assistance on the road, and reached the mission about 11 a.m., very glad to rest after seven and a-half days' travelling. I found all well at the mission except Miss Matthews, who had been working too hard and thoroughly knocked herself up, and was reluctantly forced to retire to bed before my arrival.

The first object that drew my eye was the new church. The building has been in use since Christmas, but the work of erecting the permanent walls is only just completed—in fact, the porch and part of the west end remain still to be done. The building, which is 75ft. long, is simple and dignified. The altar was presented by the "Heralds of the King" of Toolburra, Queensland, and suits the church admirably, but a great many more fittings are still needed, a list of which will be found elsewhere. It is needless to say that the church fills a very important place in the daily life of the community, and is destined we hope to fill a still larger place. The next thing that struck me was the welcome face of the chaplain disguised in a new black beard. Mr. Lane looks very well, and is hard at work from morning till night. Signs of the prolonged dry season were visible in the cultivation paddocks, where much of the cassava which was planted at last wet season had died. However, 8000 plants remained, and were strong and healthy, and next season's yield should be good.

As we travelled out from Normanton the country was almost bare of grass, and the condition of the cattle was pitiable, many of them being mere skeletons. I was therefore surprised to find our cattle sleek and fat, but Mr. Matthews explained that there was still good grass on the swamps to the north of the Mitchell, but it was evident that another month of dry weather would be serious for the mission and disastrous for the neighbouring stations. When I arrived there was only two inches of rain-water left in the tank, and though there was plenty of water in the lagoon it was beginning to get thick and unpleasant.

On Wednesday, after a busy morning, I went out with Mr. Matthews on a little tour of inspection, and was glad to note the strongly fenced 160-acre paddock, which is proving of great service. Our cattle have now increased to 180, of whom 70 were purchased at various times, the rest being natural increase. We have made a real beginning, but only a beginning. We have ample feed for more than twenty times the number, and then we should be independent. It is hard to wait and know all the opportunities we are missing. The superintendent is constantly having to refuse natives who wish to join the mission because our funds are inadequate. We cannot even kill cattle, except very rarely, while the herd is so small. Mr. Matthews has received a gift which will enable him to raise our number to 200 before the wet, but even so, we cannot even pretend that the reserve with its splendid country is beginning to be stocked. It would carry 5000 head with ease. As I thought of all the poor cattle we had passed on the road and looked up at the blazing sky, I felt that it was a case for the Church's remedy, and asked that the prayer for rain might be said at Evening-song, when, as usual, I was delighted with the hearty singing of the hymns and canticles. After tea we had a conference of the staff, and spent a most interesting time. I gave some account of my recent visit to Yarrabah, of which an account is given elsewhere; and it was generally agreed that self-support and independence of the natives must be the aim and ideal of the mission; but while Yarrabah and Mapoon have been training men and women for twenty years, we have only a third of that time behind us, and some years must elapse before we can imitate these missions. If we could increase our cattle enough to endow the head station with its schools, hospitals, and staff for spiritual work, and develop at the same time the spirit of self-help which is gradually growing, the problem would be solved. At present one great difficulty is this: We never had any capital to start us with buildings. Exclusive of the houses of the married people, there are 13 buildings, all erected by the staff and people, and almost entirely out of local materials. Of these only four have iron roofs. All the rest are roofed with cabbage-tree palm leaves, which require renewing every two years at least if they are to withstand all the tropical rain. Thousands of leaves have to be cut, carried four or five miles, and fixed with much labour. This means weeks and weeks of hard work for every available man just at the time when labour is most valuable for preparing the ground for cultivation. From an economic point of view it is needless work and useless labour, but it would take at least £250 to roof all the buildings with iron, and because we have not got it we have to go on withdrawing the workers from productive work year after year to patch up the old roofs. In addition, there is the constant risk of the whole mission being destroyed by fire. After the conference, which was most appreciated, I went to bed and slept until 5 a.m., when I was awakened by the growling of thunder, and before breakfast we had nearly three inches of rain, sufficient to remove all fears of drought until the wet season. I cannot say to what extent the rain was general. In the afternoon, I inspected the settlement at Angeram, about a mile distant. About 40 acres of excellent land have been enclosed with a strong fence, and about half of it cleared ready for planting. Three houses have been erected, and it should become a productive centre. At 8 p.m. a Quiet Day began for the staff, and was continued until 9 p.m. on Friday. The subject of the addresses was "Sanctification through Work, Prayer and Suffering." These opportunities of devotion are much appreciated.

Saturday was a busy day. The manager of Rutland Plains came over to see me about fencing the border, and I had interviews with the individual members of the staff with regard to their work and difficulties. In the evening we had a service of preparation for Holy Communion, followed by a Celebration at 7 a.m. on Sunday morning. At 10 a.m. the church was filled for the great ceremony of the day, the first confirmation of a native of the mission. Hitherto our only native communicant has been Lizzie who came from Yarrabah at the beginning of the work, and whose husband, Peter Bendigo, was baptised by Mr. Gribble seven years ago. Peter has been a worker on the mission ever since with vicissitudes of character and earnestness, and at last the time has come.

when he has been fairly tried and thought by the Chaplain and Superintendent to have shown himself worthy of fuller trust. The congregation evidently were deeply interested, and the singing was inspiring. There were two simple addresses, one on the confirmation of the baptismal vow, and the other on the Epistle for the day, "the armour of God." In the afternoon I addressed the married people, and also preached at Evensong, which was a very hearty service.

Next morning I rode down to the beach and saw the new out-station established at Koongalara on the banks of the creek, about half-a-mile from the sea. This is in charge of Tom Solomon who has built a house, with several grass houses for the natives. Several acres of land are under cultivation, and the soil seems promising. I found the Francis Pitt anchored at the mouth of the creek, and we got away about 2.30 p.m., but made slow progress owing to light winds and calms. We did not reach Mapoon until 2.30 p.m. on Thursday, and I went ashore and spent the afternoon with Mr. and Mrs. Hey, who were as usual cheerful and full of work.

We sailed again at daylight on Friday, and reached Vrilya Point about 6 p.m. As we could not go through the shoals in the dark we anchored until next morning, when we got a stiff breeze, and reached Thursday Island about 2 p.m. on Saturday. I was very glad to get home again after a rather strenuous visitation of just three months continuous travelling.

"The fields are white to harvest, look and see,
Are white abundantly.

The full-orbed harvest moon shines clear,
The harvest time draws near,
Be of good."

"Ah, woe is me!

I have no heart for harvest time,
Grown sick with hope deferred from chime to chime."

"But Christ can give thee heart who loveth thee:

Can set thee in the eternal ecstasy of His great jubilee:

Can give the dancing heart and shining face,
And lips filled full of grace,

And pleasures as the rivers and the sea.

Who knocketh at His door

He welcomes evermore:

Kneel down before

That ever-open door

(The time is short) and smite

Thy breast, and pray with all thy might."

"What shall I say?"

"Nay, pray.

Tho' one but say 'His will be done,'

He hath not lost his day

At set of sun."

Bishop Elect of North Queensland.

We welcome most heartily the election of Rev. J. Feetham, M.A., as Bishop of North Queensland, who received the unanimous vote of the clergy and 33 out of 37 votes of the laity.

Mr. Feetham was born in England in 1873, and educated at Marlborough and Cambridge. He was ordained priest in 1900, and after work at Bethnal Green for some years, came out as Principal of the Brotherhood of the Good Shepherd, Dubbo, N.S.W. in 1907. He had completed his five years' term of service, and had intended after a visit to England to return for a second term of five years.

As Principal of the Brotherhood he has done splendid work in organising and extending its operations. His attractive character and deep spirituality have caused him to be much in demand for holding retreats and quiet days; and his literary ability is shown in the "Bush Brother," one of the most capable magazines published in Australia, and worthy of a much wider circulation than it enjoys. We look forward to a great work being done by the Bishop Elect in North Queensland.

St. Michael and All Angels' Church, Georgetown.

Yesterday, September 29th, being our patronal festival (St. Michael and All Angels' Day), services of a festive nature were held throughout the day. The choir for some weeks previous had been practising special music under Mrs. Curtis's care. The altar vases were filled with beautiful white Eucharis lilies, which looked very well against the new rich dark-red curtains. The early morning celebration was of a choral nature, with fourteen communicants.

The Bishop arrived from Forsyth at 10.15 in the morning, in time for the 11 o'clock service, when he celebrated, and dedicated the altar cross (presented some months back to the memory of J. R. Munro of Oak Park Station), and also the new organ (which had been procured by free-will offerings).

At Evensong the church was filled; the Bishop preached, and before giving his text congratulated the people on having procured such a fine organ. Our next step here will be to add a porch to the main entrance of the church, which will take off its present outward barn-like appearance and enable us to keep the church doors open. At present they have to be closed, and quite naturally people think they cannot gain admission during the week.

Mothers' Union.

The third Diocesan Council Meeting of the Mothers' Union was held at Bishop's House on Wednesday, November 27th. Many points of interest were discussed, and the following report of work in the diocese was read:—"At Thursday Island the Mothers' Union work is going on steadily, and several new members have recently joined, two of them being emigrant girls who have married and settled here. We have a most indefatigable secretary in Mrs. Nash. I quote from her last report, June, 1912. "Our total numbers at the present time are 32, consisting of 26 members and 6 associates. We have much cause to regret the departure of our late president, Mrs. Milman, from the Island, in September last. Mrs. Milman, as our president, took infinite trouble in arranging each gathering of our Union, and we shall never cease to grieve for her sad loss, which took place at the end of September, in the death of Mr. Milman, our Governor."

At the end of 1911 two new branches of the Mothers' Union were started, one at Normanton and one at Burketown. Early in 1912 a branch was started at Port Douglas. The branch at Cooktown has now been in existence for two years and is fairly flourishing. At Burketown the meetings are in abeyance. The place is very tiny, and can only be occasionally visited by the clergyman from Normanton, so it is very hard to keep up an interest in the work. In Normanton also the population is steadily decreasing, and the Secretary wrote a month or two ago saying that she found it impossible to get the members to attend the monthly meetings. I wrote begging her to try and keep it going, and suggesting having only the quarterly meetings for a time. This she is going to try to do.

The Mothers' Union work out here is very difficult. In a small place it is very hard to keep up a regular interest in any kind of Church work, except among the faithful few, who are to be found everywhere.

I am glad to say that the M.U. women at Moa are still keeping faithful to their promises. When Mr. and Mrs. Nash visited Moa in July, Mrs. Nash held a M.U. meeting there.

Parting after parting,

Sore loss and gnawing pain:

Meeting grows half a sorrow

Because of parting again.

When shall the day break

That these things shall not be?

When shall new earth be ours,

Without a sea,

And time that is not time

But eternity?

To meet, worth living for;

Worth dying for, to meet;

To meet, worth parting for;

Bitter forgot in sweet:

To meet, worth parting before

Never to part more.

Bishop's visit to Northern Territory.

I left Thursday Island in the S.S. Mataram on Monday, Dec. 9, in company with Rev. W. A. Fletcher and arrived at Darwin on Thursday Dec. 12, after a smooth and pleasant voyage. The Judge, Mr. Justice Bevan, kindly asked me to stay with him and I was glad to avail myself of the shelter of his cool house and wide verandas as the weather was extremely hot, and the hotels overcrowded. On Sunday we had well attended services in the Church, and on Monday morning I was present at the interesting ceremony of the presentation of the Royal Albert Medal to Neighbour a Roper River aboriginal for gallantry in saving the life of a constable. Later in the day I met Neighbour who grinned from ear to ear and on talking to him I discovered that he had been one of the camp natives on the occasion of my first visit to the Roper and considered me as an old friend. On Monday evening I met the Parochial Council and introduced Mr. Fletcher to them, and during the following week we had opportunities of which I was glad to avail myself for seeing and visiting the people. On Saturday the Guthrie arrived from Singapore and I was delighted to welcome back to the diocese Deaconess Buchanan who had been lent for six months to the diocese of Singapore on account of their great need for a worker to replace those on furlough. On Sunday evening the Church was crowded for the Installation of Rev. W. A. Fletcher, and the solemn and beautiful service was much appreciated by the people.

Christmas Day was spent at Darwin, and on the following day I went up to Pine Creek staying with Mr. Tamblin about one and a-half miles out of town. I had been vaccinated at Darwin and fortunately or unfortunately it took only too well and I was more or less incapacitated during my stay at Pine Creek. On Sunday morning I dedicated the new Church which has been erected in place of the little room which has been so long used for services. The cost has been £250 of which all but £50 were raised locally. I was not able to come in to the evening service at which Rev. W. E.

Godson bade farewell to his many friends at Pine Creek. He is in hopes that after a visit to England he may be able to return and take up work at Pine Creek. I returned to Darwin on New Year's Eve and on Friday held a Devotional Day for the Parish. The number was not so good as on previous occasions but this was no doubt partly occasioned by the great heat and the unsettled state of the weather. On Sunday Rev. W. E. Godson preached at the Morning Service and at Evensong Mr. D. A. Roberts was licensed as Lay Reader, he having held the same position in the Adelaide Diocese. After Evensong Rev. W. E. Godson was presented with an address and cheque for £25 from the parishioners. I had to wait several days for my boat which was not due until Jan. 8 and actually sailed Jan. 11. One day I attended an interesting trial at the Court House. Two young men were charged with burning down a Chinaman's house at Pine Creek. The story of the Chinese was plain and clear and entirely unshaken by cross-examination. It revealed a brutal and unprovoked assault on a weak old man and the deliberate firing of his house. Four white witnesses exclusive of the accused told a story so improbable that they could scarcely have expected it to be accepted. Though sorry for the young man who has brought severe punishment on himself, I am unfeignedly thankful that a white jury has been found in Darwin honest and courageous enough to bring in a verdict against their own country man when justice demanded it. It has not always been so in the past and I earnestly hope that it may be the pledge of an era of more impartial justice in the future. The summing up of the judge was a model of clearness and impartiality. The second young man was found not guilty by the jury on the grounds that he had not like the first prisoner wilfully and deliberately intended arson but had merely stood by his companion, from probably a mistaken sense of honour. As the judge said it was clear that either the Chinaman's or the white men's story was false from beginning to end and the jury of white men decided that it was the white men's story which was untrue.

I caught the Mataram on her return voyage and after a narrow escape from being quarantined on account of a case of suspected smallpox, landed at Thursday Island January 14.

Mitchell River Mission.

Letters have been received from the Mitchell River Mission dated Jan. 3rd., up to which date there had been no heavy rain. The Chaplain, Rev. F. T. Lane, says that the Church was beautifully decorated with flowers and creepers on Christmas Eve. On Christmas Day there was Holy Communion at 7 a.m., Morning Prayer at 10 a.m. and Evensong at 6 p.m. At the 10 a.m. Service the school boys and girls sang as an anthem Simper's Hymn of Christmas, everyone joining in the chorus. Mr. Lane says, "We should be glad of some simple sacred songs for teaching to the school children to use on these great days."

The Christmas Tree on Christmas Eve was a huge success. The generous donors would not have regretted their openhandedness if they could have seen the dusky assemblage sitting on the ground round the tree and their manifestations of joy. Mr. Reside appeared dressed as Father Christmas and addressed a few kindly words to the assembly and the presents were distributed by willing helpers. The proceedings were watched with deep interest by a large number of camp natives. On Christmas Day there was a collection in kind consisting of dilly-bags, spears and woomeras. It was explained that these would be sent to Thursday Island and sold to provide some gift for the Church, but on the next occasion it would be for some outside missionary object. Altogether a very happy time seems to have been spent.

Mr. Reside says, "We had a really happy time at Christmas. The weather was perfect. Mosquitoes have become a thing of the past and for some unaccountable reason the flies seemed dazed and ceased to worry. I am thankful to say we are all well. We are all pulling well together and I feel sure that even the trial of three or four months' isolation will not disturb our harmony. I thank God that my life here is so happy."

Australian Church Quarterly and Church Standard.

The Australian Church Quarterly Review for December contains as usual many interesting articles. We cannot understand why the circulation of this Review, and of the Church Standard, of which an advertisement appears in this issue, is so disappointingly small. Every priest at least should take the Church Quarterly and every layman and laywomen the Church Standard. The subscription is small, 6s. and 6s. 6d. respectively, and well worth the money. If we allow good Church papers to die out through our apathy in subscribing to them we are seriously weakening the Church by our neglect of the obvious duty of keeping in touch with our fellow Churchmen, which most of us in this sparsely inhabited country can only do through the medium of a Church press.

Presentation of Albert Medal.

On Monday, December 16, at 11 a.m. all the officers and heads of department and a number of the public also met at the Government House, Darwin, for the presentation by the King's command of the Royal Albert Medal to Neighbour, a pure-blooded aboriginal who while being conveyed as a prisoner in chains by a constable jumped into a flooded river and saved the life of the constable who had been kicked on the head by his horse and was in danger of drowning. Professor Spencer read the official account of the action of Neighbour and the Administrator then called upon Judge Bevan and the Bishop of Carpentaria to speak. The latter spoke as follows:—"I am grateful to your Excellency for giving me the opportunity of saying a few words on this occasion. It was the Professor who in one of his earlier books drew my attention to some of the more noteworthy of the aboriginal characteristics. He there points out that the native is often accused of ingratitude because he does not offer us profuse thanks when we give him something but accepts it as a matter of course. The Professor pointed out that this is because the aboriginal has attained or has not left a social status, towards which many think our own efforts ought to be more and more directed, a State in which no man regards property as his own but as belonging to the community, in which no man thinks it strange or a matter for thanks that his neighbour gives to him because he is always ready to give to his neighbour."

It has long been the fashion to speak of the aborigines as the lowest type of humanity and Professor Haeckel in one of his works speaks of them as being hardly higher than anthropoid apes. These of us who have had much to do with aborigines under their normal conditions of life and not as mere hangers on upon the fringe of white civilisation have felt that this is absurd. We recognise that the aboriginal is a child and often a foolish and wilful child, but with a child's keen powers of observation and a child's capacity to grow and develop."

Neighbour's action, which does not stand alone as witness the faithful Jacky who accompanied the first explorers of the Cape York Peninsula and saved their lives at the risk of his own, or the faithful aboriginal who warned Eyre and accompanied him in his terrible tramp round the shores of the Great Bight, Neighbour's action shows that the aboriginal is capable of a generous and unselfish action even at the risk of his own life.

I feel that the authorities have acted with courage in the public acknowledgement of his act. I cannot pretend to think that it is popular but 'fat justitia ruat coelum', and it will be a great encouragement to those who are striving not only that justice should be done to this primitive race whose place we have taken, but that they should be treated with the generosity which the strong ought to show to the weak. I shall do my best to make this morning's ceremony known among the aborigines of Queensland, and I feel sure that it will have the best effect.

Deaconess Buchanan has begun work at Darwin to try whether her strength will enable her to stand the climate and the large amount of walking entailed by her work there.

The House of Life.

I do not know how it was we came to the shore of the island, but there it was, a long low plain of sand through which the green grass was springing, and on which many horses and cattle were feeding. A road led parallel to the sea, towards a white building, some miles distant. A far off we saw the sharp line of cliffs crowned with snow, from which a cold wind swept across the plain. As we drew nearer we saw that the gable end of the house was towards us, and in it two doors. My companion, following the well beaten track to the right, entered by that furthest from the sea, and as we passed the threshold he said simply, "It is the House of Life." We entered a bare, unfurnished room, in which were two doors in addition to the one by which we entered, one opposite and one on the left. There was also a window looking out over the plain. We passed through room after room behind the first, and exactly like it? Is there no other way out? "I asked. "None," he replied, but through the rooms, no one has ever returned who once entered. "But why are the rooms all so bare? "I asked. "Nay but look back," he said. I did so, and behold, the room was not bare, but fully furnished. On the table lay great store of food and drink. On a side table were writing materials and many sheets of manuscript. Clothing hung in a recess, and many tools and weapons were scattered about; the walls also were covered with pictures, some beautiful and some hateful to see. All was in confusion. A picture was laid aside half painted, and another begun in its place; an almost finished statue had received a blow which defaced it; a splash of ink had fallen on an ivory carving. The table also was in confusion; at one end it was as though men had dined, and at the other it was set as for guests. Then I wondered and entered the next room, and it too was utterly bare until I had passed through, then I turned and it was furnished like the other, and with a like confusion. So I passed through four or five more rooms, then I turned to my companion and said, "What are these?" And he said, "They lead to the House of Life as it might be!" Then I asked if I might open one of the doors and look within, and he said: "Thou mightest have done so at any time." Then I opened the door half way and the light was so great that I shaded my eyes with my hands. For a time I saw nothing; then I was aware that the room was furnished but plainly, yet on the walls I saw many pictures, and the meanest of them was worth a King's ransom; but I stayed not to look because my eyes were drawn to the window which was very great, and made of a sheet of glass that came down to the floor; now this glass must have had within it some wonderful property, for whereas from outside only a few miles of sea could be seen and that dully, as I gazed through the glass of the window the sea seemed to stretch away into infinite distance, and to shine with a brilliancy and beauty beyond the tongue of man to describe. The whole surface seemed of that shimmer which floats on the surface of mother of pearl, and from beneath there shot up light as of ruddy fire, yet soft and harmless. Far away I saw islands on whose shores it broke in diamond flashes, and the islands were like jewels of emerald floating in a sea of opal. Yet further and further did my eye travel into infinite distance, till I saw far distant worlds, suns and systems of suns, that seemed to rise and fall and circle with the motion of the sea, in whose gleaming depths they were lost; yet still my eye travelled on beyond the worlds, and never did the ocean cease in its gleaming wonder, till I saw a light so great and dazzling that I could not look near it; yet did I notice that the ocean stretched on beside and beyond it so far that I became weary with gazing, and, like a diver who can find no bottom in some deep lake, my eye travelled backward again, seeking an escape from the profundity. Then, when I had come to myself, I turned to my companion, and he smiled and said, "Can man fathom Eternity?" And I saw how the light which came through the window filled the room with a reflection of its own glory, so that the commonest things shone with a strange glamour and beauty. Then I asked if any man had passed through that House, and he said that only One had ever passed through it, but many had looked therein, and that all might do so if they would but open the doors of it. Then with a sigh, I shut the door, because it is only permitted to look for a time. When we entered the next room I saw a man at the window, manipulating an elaborate arrangement of mirrors, which were projected upwards and outwards on long poles; I asked him what he was doing, and he told me he was trying to obtain a view of the sea over the roof of the house by means of his mirrors, and that he had great expectation of success. Then I said, "Why do you not open the door and look through the window of the next house?" And he smiled and said that any ignoramus could do that, but to see it over the roof required much skill and science. I asked him what conclusions he had come to, and he said that the sea seemed to him, so far as he was able to judge, a very ordinary sea, but he hoped after a while to be able to suggest certain improvements. After this we went on through many more rooms, and I noticed on looking back that they became less and less fully furnished after our passage. Then at last, when we had passed through about eighty rooms in all we came to one which had no window, and it would have been quite dark, for it had been growing rapidly dusk, had not my companion left the door behind us open. While we were crossing this room we heard a murmuring sound, and when the further door was opened we stood at the top of a flight of steps which seemed in the mist and darkness to lead down towards the sea. Every now and then the darkness lifted, and I seemed to see a boat which lay off the steps, and a great light shone dimly over the water, but whether it came from a ship or from the other shore I know not; then the darkness would come down again, and I could see nothing whatever, nor hear any sound except the wash of the waves. While we stood there a man came swiftly behind us with a cry of fear and ran swiftly down the steps, and the darkness coming down I saw not what became of him, but as I looked forth it grew lighter, and I noticed with wonder that the door of the other house opened upon the same steps, and while I wondered my companion closed the door and said, "Not yet," and taking me by the hand he led me to the right side of the room, where he opened a small door which I had not perceived, and led me out into the plain, where the stars were shining. As we retraced our steps over the road by which we had come, I looked back and caught the faint glimmer of the far-off snow on the cliffs, and the white gable of the House of Life, and heard only the browsing of the unseen cattle, and the gentle plash of the sea, as I turned to follow my companion towards the spot whence we had come.

Some Books.

For a good simple inexpensive book on the Future Life based on Holy Scripture and enlightened by sound common sense we recommend "The Gospel of the Hereafter" by Rev. J. Patterson Smyth, Rector of St. George's Montreal. (Hodder and Stoughton 3s. 6d.) It clears up many popular misconceptions and is very suitable for giving to those who have lost near relatives or are troubled by doubts as to the future.

Under the somewhat vague title of "Law and Love" is a most excellent study of the Psalm "quomodo dilexi" by Rev. I. L. Boyd, Vicar of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. (Longmans Green & Co. 2s. 6d.) The principles of the psalmist are applied to modern life and conditions in the most direct and helpful manner. We can cordially recommend this little book.

Those who want a really good up to date but reverent and intelligent commentary on the Bible cannot do better than get "Dummelow's One Volume Commentary" (sold by Angus and Robertson, Sydney, 15s.) The prefatory matter is excellent and the whole to be thoroughly recommended.

"Among the Idolmakers" by D. P. Jacks. (Williams and Norgate 6s.) is a collection of very striking stories. The author is editor of the Hibbert Journal and there is much food for thought in these studies apart from their literary interests.

"Prehistoric Man" by W. L. H. Duckworth, University Lecturer in Physical Anthropology, Cambridge (Cambridge University Press 1s.) is a purely scientific account of the remains of the earliest known human skeletons. It is an interesting fact that while some of the Palaeolithic skulls indicate a very low brain capacity similar to that of the Australian aborigine, others have a brain capacity equal to or, allowing for the difference of stature, exceeding that of the modern European.

The tragic death of the author lends additional interest to "Faith and Fact: a study of Ritschlianism" by Rev. E. A. Edghill, (Macmillan, 8s. 6d.) This most capable study is of great value in view of the widespread influence of various forms of depreciation of the value of historical fact in the present day. We strongly recommend it to thoughtful readers.

"Some weak points in Christian Socialism. A Defence of the Middle Classes" Rev. W. Sanday, D.D. (Longmans 1s. 3d.) Whether we altogether agree with this pamphlet or not it will do us good to read it. Dr. Sanday points out, and the warning is not unneeded, that little good is done by exaggeration, overstatement, and wholesale denunciation. Real progress has been made and when people are slow to adopt some of the proposed panaceas for social evils it is often because they are really doubtful as to whether they are likely to do more good than harm.

The "Revue des Deux Mondes" for April, May and June, contains a most deeply interesting series of articles by M. Ollivier, who as the head of the Ministry of Napoleon III. had ample opportunity for knowing the facts of the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. The lesson that he teaches is one that England will do well to take to heart. The defeat of the French was not due to lack of courage but to unpreparedness, lack of leadership, purpose and initiative. Had these been present the result of the war might have been very different.

"The Kingdom of God", by William Temple, Headmaster of Repton School. (Macmillan 2s. 6d.) This is a most striking little book. The chapter on the application of the Christian motive to practical life and the use and abuse of Compromise is especially excellent, as is that on a belief in "a sort of a something." The thought is often original and its expression clear and straightforward.

Visit to St. Paul's Mission, Moa.

I left Thursday Island at 7.30 a.m. on Thursday, November 28, in the Government ketch Melbidir which dropped me at Moa on its way to Saibai at midday. I found Mr. and Mrs. Cole in good health and all well in the settlement, though everything was parched for want of rain.

After lunch I read through the Scripture examination papers of the school and found them very well done. The following is by no means the best answer to the question, "Write out in your own words the story of the Good Samaritan." This was one of twenty questions in general Scripture knowledge, and is by Rebecca, aged 14. It is given as being brief and to the point. "A man who was going in a journey from Jerusalem to Jericho was beaten by thieves and left half dead. By chance a priest came on the other side and saw him and went on, and then a Levi came on and came near him and went on. By chance came the Good Samaritan, saw him and came to him, and gave him wine to drink, and also bound up his wounds and carried him and put him on his ass and said to the master of the house, take care of this man and what thou spend on him when I will return I will repay thee what thou didst spend for this man. The story teaches us that we ought to be kind to one another." An answer to the question, "name some of the things that hurt (1) our bodies, (2) our souls" was: "Bodies—trouble, tree falling, shark biting us, stone fish. Souls—Jealousness, sin." On the whole I thought the questions very well answered, and showing considerable grasp of the subject. I afterwards spent an hour in the school and was much pleased with the progress made, especially in arithmetic, which is a subject particularly useful to the boys who will in after life have to make many calculations as to the value of shell and other produce. The numbers of the school have grown from 30 to 40 during the present year. After school I walked down the village and was pleased to find a number of new houses being built of a much superior kind to the older houses. Most of the men were away out on their boats or at their gardens where they work until dark. After evening prayers I had a talk to the men about the Church, towards which they have now collected among themselves over £100, and about the request which they had made to be allowed to use the Banzai for fishing when she was not employed in running the mails. It was decided to agree to the suggestion under certain conditions as to the care and upkeep of the vessel. I was pleased to find that the population is steadily increasing. Last year there were 6 births which is at the rate of 60 per thousand; all the children are well made and healthy.

Next day, Friday, I inspected the country on the south side of the Mission and found that there are plenty of good building sites adjoining the school on that side so that there will be no trouble about enlarging the village if necessary.

Some excitement was caused by a boy named Leo aged 14, a Maubuiag boy sent over for schooling, running away in a fit of temper. A bigger boy named Arona was sent to bring him back and though he had had no breakfast entered into the chase with much zest. The quarry however was not to be caught and in spite of Arona's endeavours to head him off led him such a chase all day through the bush that evening found them both exhausted at a waterhole twelve miles away. Here they fraternised for the night and returned hungry and tired next day. In the evening we had Evensong in the school and I gave a preparation for Holy Communion. At 7 a.m. on Saturday being St. Andrew's Day and the Day of Intercession for Missions we had a Celebration of Holy Communion with 27 communicants, all adults and nearly as many men as women. I was much pleased as one of the boats was still absent and a week day is not convenient for many of the men. There is a great need of a set of Altar vessels and Altar linen for Moa. As it is we have either to bring over the Thursday Island vessels which is not always convenient, or use a tiny set of sick communion vessels utterly unsuited to twenty or thirty communicants. After the Celebration I had a baptism for which all stayed. The child was named Pattaram and is the daughter of Kohami (Samwell) and Nullam.

After lunch the Melbidir appeared flying along before a stiff breeze and I rushed to pack my bag but she passed the entrance through the reef and held on her course to Badu so that we judged that she would not be back till the following day. It is blowing hard which is unusual for this time of the year. In the afternoon Mr. Cole and I went to look at some of the gardens and then on to the coast to the north of East Point. The reef there, as in front of the village, is of extraordinary beauty. When it is covered by a foot or two of water it shines with every shade of translucent colour till it reaches the fringe of white breakers and the deep blue of the open water.

On Sunday morning we had a most hearty service and soon after the Melbidir appeared and made a quick run into Thursday Island with a strong breeze landing me about 4 p.m. after a very pleasant visit.

Deaconess Buchanan has notified the Bishop that her health will not allow her to continue her work at Darwin after the cool weather comes to an end.

Rev. A. McD. Hassell has succeeded Rev. J. Tweedie in charge of the parish of Normanton.

Rev. J. Brown has resigned the parish of Cooktown from the end of July, and the Bishop has nominated Rev. L. Ayscough, Rector of Croydon, as his successor.

Volume XIII.—No. 50. Thursday Island, April 1, 1913

An Easter Message.

My dear people,—

I wish you joy of the great festival of Easter.

It is the great memorial of the power of Christ at once to raise our bodies from the dust of death and to raise our souls to the newness of the eternal life.

Let nothing rob you of your belief in the Resurrection of Christ, not merely as a symbol of hope but as one of the best attested of all historical facts.

It was when the disciples were most overwhelmed with the apparent failure of Christ's mission, most hopeless of any earthly realisation of His Kingdom, that the great fact of the Resurrection showed them that God ruled on earth as well as in heaven, and stirred them up to newness of life and hope.

So to-day there is much to overwhelm and oppress. Much of cold indifference and of blatant materialism, many subtle poisons of worldliness and compromise, which have tainted the Church's life, much of honest doubt and bewilderment that has weakened the hands and chilled the hearts of the faithful; still to-day as of old we trust in the resurrection power of Christ.

Never has the Church been striving more honestly to fulfil her missionary duties and responsibilities, and while this is so the heart is still sound. Faith in the spiritual and the unseen is for those who think becoming much easier than it was a generation ago. The awakening of the East and the enormous pressure upon it of Christian thought and civilisation is producing an opportunity such as the world never saw before. Social and political revolutions are taking place of which it would be untrue to our belief in God's government of the world to believe that their ultimate end is not for good. Everywhere there is a stirring and a new life, and faith sees its opportunity and its hope.

It rests with you to do your share in turning the new life into the channels of faith and righteousness. The message of Easter brings hope and joy. "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us. Therefore let us keep the feast, not with the old leaven of malice and wickedness but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." "Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

GILBERT,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

The Bishop's Engagements.

As far as can yet be fixed, the Bishop's engagements for the rest of the year are as follows:—

Easter will be spent at Thursday Island, and on April 14 the Bishop will leave for Brisbane to be present at the consecration of the new Bishop of North Queensland on St.

Mark's Day April 25th., and to discuss the proposed new boundaries of the diocese. On April 28th he will leave for Sydney to undertake a busy month of speaking and preaching on behalf of the Aboriginal Missions of the Australian Board of Missions. This will occupy the whole of May. During June, July, and the early part of August, he hopes to visit, if possible, Port Douglas, Cooktown, Forsyth, Georgetown, Croydon, Normanton, and the Mitchell River, returning in time to be present at the Diocesan Conference which will begin at Cooktown on Thursday August 21st. Immediately after the Conference the Bishop will leave for Brisbane to attend the Church Congress, at which he has been asked to read a paper on the proposed reforms of the constitution of the A.B.M. He hopes to return immediately after the Congress, and to visit Darwin and the Northern Territory in October. Arrangements have not yet been made for November and December.

Divorce.

The report of the Divorce Commission in England has now been published. The majority report in favour of vastly increasing the facilities for divorce, and in fact very closely assimilating the law to that of N.S.W. The minority of three protest strongly against altering the present law except in so far as the present process of law may be simplified and cheapened. They point out that the causes for divorce approved by the majority are governed by no principle, and may be indefinitely extended; and point to the evils of easy divorce in America and elsewhere. The "Times" and other leading English newspapers are strongly on the side of the minority report. It is not likely that the Government will introduce any divorce legislation, as by so doing they would lose the support of the Irish party by which they are maintained in power.

St. Basil on Evolution.

It is sometimes supposed that the idea of evolution is a modern one, but the following passages from the first book of the Hexameron of St. Basil, Bishop of Caesarea A.D. 370-376, will show that the idea was familiar, and also the Christian reply to it, more than 1500 years ago. It must be remembered that the Hexameron was not a philosophical treatise, but a series of sermons delivered to the artisans of Caesarea. Speaking of theories as to the origin of the world he says: "Some took refuge in material hypotheses, attributing the cause of everything to the elements of the universe. Others imagined atoms and indivisible bodies, and thought that their agglomerations and their motions contained the nature of all phenomena, and that the indivisible bodies now uniting and now separating caused the generation and dissolution of all things." It is not easy to refrain from quoting by way of comment Mr. Herbert Spencer's definition of evolution as "an integration of matter and concomitant dissipation of motion during which the matter passes from an indefinite incoherent homogeneity to a definite coherent heterogeneity, and during which the retained motion undergoes a parallel transformation"; and equally difficult not to think that St. Basil is the clearer of the two. The preacher goes on to speak of various kinds of theories as to the position of the earth in space, and proceeds, referring to the various philosophic theories: "If there seems to you something plausible in these arguments, transfer your wonder to the wisdom of God, Who has ordered these things thus. For our admiration of great works is by no means lessened, when the manner in which any of those things that we wonder at is accomplished is made clear." Whether certain theories of evolution are true or false is an interesting scientific question, but as St. Basil saw long ago, they have no bearing on religion save to give us a deeper admiration for the wisdom of God when we see the way in which the things that we wonder at are accomplished.

Bishop's Visit to Manila.

The Bishop, in response to a cordial invitation, left Thursday Island on January 30 to pay a visit to Bishop Brent at Manila. Bishop Brent, who has been the American Bishop of the Philippine Islands since 1901, is a man of remarkable power and a devoted missionary. He is well known through his book, "Adventure for God," a powerful appeal for missionary service, and his remarkable sermon on "Unity" preached in Westminster Abbey a few years ago. He was recently elected to the See of New York, but he refused to leave his missionary outpost. Our own Bishop hopes to obtain from him much practical information as to the working of the Board of Missions in the American Church, in view of the paper he has been asked to read at the Brisbane Church Congress on the reconstitution of our own Board of Missions: and to see something of the practical working of the American missions in the interior. The Bishop hopes to be back in Thursday Island before Easter.

I left Thursday Island in the Kumano Maru on Thursday, January 30th. From the start we had beautiful weather, cool and somewhat cloudy; and as there were only about twenty passengers we had plenty of room. On Sunday we had a well-attended service in the music saloon, and managed the hymns very well. We passed a number of islands, some of them active volcanoes, but none nearer than 15 miles except Ceram, which we passed after dark. We were only a short distance from the land and saw the lighthouse and lights very clearly. On Wednesday morning we sighted the first of the long series of Philippine Islands extending for 800 miles in length and about 150 in breadth. This was Basilan, an island about the size of Prince of Wales, and somewhat resembling it in appearance. Passing close to its point, we crossed the strait to Zamboanga, a small town with red-roofed houses at the foot of a range about 2000ft. high and the southern point of the island of Mindanao. We steamed to within a few hundred yards of the jetty before turning at right angles along the coast. The position of the town reminded me strongly of Cairns, but every yard of the beach for miles was covered with cocoanut trees. There were a number of small fishing vessels with curious striped square sails and small outriggers. The steamer passes for six or seven miles close to the shore, giving one a beautiful view of the plantations and the hills that rise behind. A few miles further on we left the island and struck once more for the open sea. All next day we ran along the coast of the islands, getting some beautiful views. One especially dwells with me off, the coast of Mindoro; a sea smooth as polished steel, a couple of green islets, and behind a crumpled mass of tangled reddish hills, every fold and shadow standing out clear and sharp in the light of the setting sun. Behind, higher hills half hidden and melting into masses of fleecy cloud, on which a rainbow played like the colours of mother-of-pearl; on the right a great mountain over 7000ft. high, and on the left yet another as high and wrapped in clouds. In the west, the sun, a glowing heart of ruby fire, sank behind a level plain of old red gold, which covered the face of the water from within a few yards of the ship into an apparently infinite distance; as the sun disappeared the old gold changed to crimson and wrinkled under a breath of air into ten thousand eddies and pools of light. Then the breeze sank again and the sea became one-half purple and the other pale chrome yellow; while from where the sun had disappeared shot up great streamers of rosy light far up into the over-sky. At daylight next morning we arrived at Manila.

Bishop's House, Manila,

Feb. 7th, 1913.

Manila Harbour reminds me a good deal of Colombo, and was full of shipping. I landed about 9 a.m., and was met by Bishop Brent and also by Bishop McKim of Tokyo, whom I met at the time of the Lambeth Conference. It was strange that we two were the first episcopal visitors Bishop Brent has ever had, and we both arrived from different directions on successive days. Bishop McKim returns to Tokyo the day I hope to get back here. The Bishop took us round the town, which is very interesting, and the most crowded with carriages and light-cart traffic, I should think, of any city in the world. Everyone down to the poorest seems to drive something. We visited a hospital with over fifty beds supported by the American Church, with a Deaconesses' Home and other mission buildings, all in beautiful order. The Bishop has a delightful concrete house, built for the tropics, and I was shown my room when I return to occupy it. I was delighted to note the bed on the veranda. On one side is the Cathedral, a very fine concrete building built in the style of the old Spanish Cathedrals, and on the other a Church Club and other buildings. In front, a fine open space where the University is to be built.

At lunch we had a most interesting talk about the future of the Philippines. A bill is already before the United States Congress to practically give them their independence. The future is full of risk, not only to the Philippines but to Australia as well. Unfortunately Congress, like our Commonwealth Government in dealing with the North, knows and cares nothing about the Philippines, and may commit acts of utter absurdity in consequence. I hope to go more fully into the matter later. In the afternoon we went to a baseball match, and watched two great struggles, the first between the Army and Navy, and the second between the Philippines and a Japanese team from Tokyo, in which to the general surprise the former won amid a scene of wild excitement among the spectators who are all agog for nationality, independence etc. I hope to get back here this day week and on Sunday I am to preach at the ordination of the first Chinese deacon to be ordained in the islands, then the Bishop will take me up into the real wilds to see the missions among the aboriginal head hunters (or late head hunters.) This evening I go back to the Kumano and we leave at daylight. We ought to arrive at Hongkong on Monday morning, and I hope to catch the Nikko on Wednesday, midday. I have an ambitious scheme of going up to Canton in the interval, but don't know if it will come off. I am enjoying myself immensely.

Kumano Maru,

Feb. 9th, 1913.

There has been a fresh breeze since we left Manila, too much for many of the passengers. We had only three at the service this morning, but we are lucky to get it no worse in these seas. We left Manila at 6 a.m. on Saturday morning, and expect to arrive at Hongkong at 8 a.m. to-morrow, Monday. My plans at Hongkong are unsettled as yet.

Victoria Hotel, Canton,

Feb. 10th.

I have actually arrived here after a most interesting time. I was up early and saw the entrance to Hongkong through what I think they call the West Passage, about twenty miles through islands, passing through an immense number of fishing junks. It was very cold, and the top of the Peak (2000ft. high) was wreathed in mist. The view of Hongkong from the harbour is very beautiful. The Nikko arrived within about half-an-hour of the time that we did, so after breakfast I transferred all my luggage but a bag to her, and came ashore. I found the Bishop's house with some little difficulty, and he took me through the Gardens and showed me the Cathedral, a fine large building. I then took the funicular railway up the Peak, and then had to walk about half-a-mile on to the flagstaff at the top. It was not very clear, but is certainly a very wonderful view. The Peak is covered with fine houses, barracks, hospitals, &c., and everything is substantial and beautifully kept. I returned to the Bishop's for lunch, and immediately after crossed over in the ferry to Kowloon on the mainland, and took the 2.30 p.m. train for Canton. The first 25 miles or so is very hilly and belongs to Great Britain; then one enters China proper. A young officer who was going out to a camp outside Hongkong gave me a lot of interesting information till he got out. The only other European fellow-passenger was a young fellow belonging to the Consulate who also told me much. At all the larger stations and many of the smaller ones along the line were soldiers of the new Republican army, guarding the line. They all had fixed bayonets and serviceable uniforms. There was a delightful variety about them. The first lot stood like statues in the most approved military attitude, but the next lot lounged about with rifles and bayonets held anyhow, under their arms, sideways, upside down or anything, and one man had no hat and looked a wild ruffian; even the guard of the train sported a huge revolver.

The towns and villages were very picturesque and substantially built of stone, and every inch of available country under cultivation, but all very dry. We saw several pagodas and walled towns with towers. There is only one hotel in Canton, and I had taken the precaution to wire to the proprietor to send to the station to meet me. We got in about 6.45 p.m., and it was nearly dark. A Chinaman met me and put me in a rickshaw, and we started off down the Bund or River Front along a good road. The river was crowded with thousands of sampans and the streets crowded with Chinese. We passed a company of soldiers, always with fixed bayonets, but to some of them were hung paper lanterns and others had paper flags stuck in the muzzles of their rifles. After about 1½ miles we had to get out, as the road came to an end, and walk about half-a-mile through some very rough slummy places till we came to a guarded bridge, and crossed on to the Island of Shameen, which is leased to the French and English and where no Chinese are allowed. It is quite a small island with trees and fine houses. The sudden change from the densely crowded streets to the silent and almost deserted European quarter was most startling. I got dinner and a comfortable room at the hotel, where there seem to be only four or five men staying, and am writing this before taking a turn round the Shameen.

I have just returned from my stroll round. I knew Shameen was an island so that I could not get far lost; so I set out after an emphatic warning from the porter "outside must not go"—i.e. not across the two bridges. I soon found signs of late troublesome times, barbed wire entanglements into one of which I walked, big barricades of fascines at the heads of the streets, and armed sentries every hundred yards. Still it was very beautiful walking along the river front and seeing all the twinkling lights on the water. I thought I could find my way, but got lost and had ignominiously to ask my way of a brawny Sikh with a black beard and a big bayonet.

Hongkong, Feb. 12, 1913.

I started out with my gu de in a chair at 8 a.m. and had a wonderful time. There is so much to see—such enormous crowds, such an infinite variety of sights, sounds and smells, that it is well-nigh impossible to give any adequate account of Canton in a letter. To begin with, the streets are extremely narrow, about 6ft to 8ft. and there is only just room for the chair to pass the dense crowd of foot passengers, to warn whom the bearers keep up an incessant chanting cry. Three men carried my chair for five hours, the two in front changing their positions occasionally. Nearly every house is a shop of some kind or a workshop, and overhead are long coloured streamers with inscriptions. The smells are bad, but I have smelled worse in Italy and the dirt not nearly so apparent as one is led to believe. Everything is done within the very smallest space of course, and there are 2,000,000 in Canton. The people seemed quiet and orderly. One lad made a grimace at me but that was the only sign of dislike to foreigners. The place was full of the soldiers of the revolution, every few hundred yards the "Government shooters" as my guide called them, were on guard with big revolvers, and posts and barracks were frequent. Bishop Lander tells me that about a month ago he was going along the crowded Bund when they suddenly fired about 50 shots. He says that in five seconds he was the sole person on the Bund, and he walked off as fast as was consistent with dignity. Things are still rather mixed, a whole quarter of the city is inhabited by Manchus, who of course do not approve of the Government, and in the country where there are few troops there is a good deal of disorder. The weather was dull and the cold very great.

the Chinese seemed to feel it as much as I did and many wore thick quilted coats. We went to several temples, where there seemed to be very few priests or attendants. They were chiefly Buddhist or ancestor worship. The temple of medicine is a peculiar idea, at one side is a counter where you pay your fee. You then take a brass vase with about 30 numbered sticks in it and shake them up together. You then take the number that comes uppermost and exchange it for a prescription of the same number, and there you are, you have got your proper medicine. The temple of 500 Genii is interesting. There are 500 seated statues of gilded clay about life size. They are all portraits of ancient sages and include Marco Polo in a very European hat, frilled collar and cloak. All the features are very well done. One of the ancestor worship temples was very beautiful, with ample stone courts and grey old walls with wonderful carvings among which the birds flew and an old garden, a very peaceful and beautiful spot. There seemed to be little trace of worship or religious feeling except in one temple where a few women seemed very devout; some of them had small feet, but not many. Provision shops were numerous everywhere and people buying incredibly small portions of fish and pork. I saw the Flower Pagoda (nine stories) built of wood and brick, and the five story Pagoda built on a hill with a fine view of the town from the city wall. There was a lot of fighting here about a year ago and many were killed. I did not go to the Execution Ground. My guide sorrowfully explained that its chief glory was departed; "No more cut off head, only shoot him now." I went into a silk weaver's house, wonderful work but I was more interested in the family who were at dinner. I saw also the old water clock, a curious and very accurate clock which has been running for about 500 years. I got back to the hotel for lunch and then returned by launch to the station where I got the train at 3 p.m. arriving at Kowloon at 7 p.m. and was back at the Bishop's for dinner at 7.30 p.m. I met in the train a young Melbourne lady who is travelling by the Nikko. She also had been visiting Canton. There was a celebration at the Cathedral this morning of which I was very glad. The Nikko sails at midday.

Nikko Maru, Feb. 12th.

I hope you got my long letter from Hongkong giving an account of my visit to Canton. I came on board the Nikko about 11 a.m. without attempting more at Hongkong as I wanted to finish my letter to you. We sailed at 1 p.m. in fine weather, and she is a very fine boat. Bishop Brent says that we cannot get back in time for the Eastern, so I hope to catch the Kumano, arriving on Easter Day.

Notes.

Rev. James Tweedie has had to resign the parish of Normanton owing to a severe attack of malarial fever. He came to Thursday Island for rest and recovery on Jan. 21st., and left for Pine Creek by the Mataram on Feb. 10th. It is hoped that a separate parish may be established there.

Rev. W. E. Godson, M.A., left for the south in the Mataram on Jan. 14th. He hopes to visit the old country and to return and take up work at Pine Creek sometime in 1914.

An altar and prayer desk for the Douglas Memorial Chapel have been designed by Mr. Hannington and ordered from Campbell's of Brisbane. The former is the gift of the Wybern Lodge and the latter of the District Grand Lodge of North Queensland. A stained glass window has also been ordered from England. It is the gift of the Torres Straits Islanders.

Mr. B. S. Cole, Superintendent of St. Paul's Mission, Moa, returned to Moa on Jan. 15th. after a short holiday in Papua. Mrs. Cole has been staying with her mother Mrs. Monaghan in Townsville, and hopes to return to Moa shortly.

Extension of the work of A.B.M.

At a meeting of the Executive Council of A.B.M. held on Jan. 10, 1913, the following resolution was passed unanimously:—"That this meeting of the Executive Council of the Australian Board of Missions is of opinion that it is desirable to extend the work of the A.B.M., in accordance with its stated functions, to areas more distant than the present spheres of work. That Japan being geographically and commercially in close proximity to Australia would be a suitable field in which to begin operations."

"The Executive Council recommends further that the Australian Board of Missions make the most earnest and immediate effort to carry out this resolution into effect."

A beginning of carrying out the above resolution has already been made, and on May 7th Miss Holloway of Melbourne will start for China to work under the auspices of A.B.M. for the Bishop of Shantung. She will be supported by the A.B.M. in Australia. We welcome this new departure, and believe that it will bring new life to A.B.M. to extend its operations to the world.

Socialism and Character.

The book with the above title by Vida Scudler, (Dent and Sons, 5s.) is a book to be read and thought over by everyone. It is full of the ardent faith of a convinced Socialist, but a Socialist keenly alive to the many follies and weaknesses of modern Socialism, and not afraid to say that the leaders of the Socialist campaign are the very last people to be trusted with the administration or direction of Socialism when it arrives.

She brings out with unsparing frankness the essential materialism of Socialism, and accepts economic determinism and class consciousness as its necessary principles, but is nevertheless convinced that in the end spirituality and idealism will under Socialism have freer and wider scope than at present—nay, she goes much further and admits that, unless this were so, increased comfort and wider material security would be poorly gained at the cost of the soul.

We do not quite understand the author's religious standpoint. She uses at times phrases that grate harshly on Christian ears, especially as regards the personality of Our Lord, and yet she insists that the most vital and hopeful doctrines of Christianity are the [Holy] Trinity, the Incarnation, and the Atonement; and she administers a well merited rebuke to some Christian-apologists who are inclined to set aside as a weakness the Christian claim to a foundation of acknowledged historical reality.

The chief value of the book lies in its attempt to show that Socialism need not, in spite of its obvious dangers, result in deterioration of character, and should result in its deepening and enrichment. It is a not unneeded call to a deeper faith in God's providence and His power to bring good out of seeming evil.

The book is so full of good things, so replete with faith and courage, that one must not be surprised to find also some that to criticise.

A lady may perhaps be excused for saying that St Paul uses the word charis in his famous chapter on charity, whereas the word is, of course, agape, a very different thing but there is no excuse for repeatedly representing Our Lord as bidding His followers "take no thought for the morrow in the face of the Revised Version which shows that what He forbade was anxiety and worry.

We should have thought that in America as in Australia it was a somewhat wild exaggeration to speak of "the necessity of putting an end to the infamous conditions under which the majority are living," and, indeed, here in Australia all the arguments drawn from the down-trodden condition of the worker leave us somewhat cold, because he is not the slave but the man in power.

We are not impressed by the author's theology. We are not sure that she does not fall into the error of thinking that man makes God rather than God man. For instance, she says, "The God of the East is perceived from the vast silences of Nature. The God of the future democracy must be rather the God of them that dwell in cities." Why? May not democracy, among its other triumphs, succeed in restoring man to the land? If it does not so succeed will it be necessary to reconstruct our idea of God?

In spite of its defects, this is a noble and timely book. It faces facts squarely and preserves its ardent faith in the spiritual amid all its sympathy with the material; and above all it seems to us to be largely true, to present facts which cannot be ignored, and to indicate tendencies which cannot be resisted.

It is interesting to find a writer who is in many ways detached concluding with the fact that apart from the salvation of Socialism the world's great hope lies in Christianity, and amid the various forms of Christianity that portion of it which holds most strongly to the catholic belief in the Church and the sacraments.

Diocesan Accounts.

We would call attention to the Diocesan accounts for the past year published as usual in this number of the Carpentarian.

Our total receipts for the year, £1777.16s. 1d., appear to be smaller than those of the previous year, £1967.2s. 11d. but the money received for the sale of the old Francis Pritt £298.1s. 7d. and a transfer of £197 from the Christison Fund were included in that total, so as a matter of fact our regular receipts are somewhat larger than those of the previous year.

Of these receipts £696.12s. 11d. con-from Australian sources, £410 from English subscribers and £395 0s. 6d. from grants from English societies, or roughly speaking £700 from Australian and £800 from England, the previous year it was about £750 from Australia and £650 from England.

With regard to expenditure the amount spent on missionary work £582 11s. 6d. is nearly the same as that expended in 1911, namely £584 10s. 11d., while the grants to parishes were smaller by about £100. Of the amount lent to the Douglas Memorial Chapel committee £110 is in hand and will be shortly repaid. The diocese owes much to the extremely clear and careful manner in which the accounts have been kept by Rev. E. J. Nash, Acting Diocesan Accountant.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop has had a busy time in Sydney speaking and preaching for the Australian Board of Missions. On Sunday May 4th he preached at Christ Church in the morning and St. Thomas's North Shore in the evening.

On Monday he gave an address to the students of Moore College, and on Tuesday spoke at a meeting to bid farewell to Miss Holloway who was leaving as A.B.M. Missionary for China. At night he spoke at a missionary meeting at Christ Church. On Wednesday he addressed the Church of England Grammar School for Girls in the morning and the students of St. Paul's College at night. On Thursday he addressed the Church Girls' School at Waverley, and on Friday attended a meeting of the Executive Council of A.B.M. On Sunday May 11th he preached at St. John's, Darlinghurst, in the morning, and at the Cathedral at night. On Monday he addressed a meeting at St. John's Darlinghurst. On Tuesday he met the representative of the C.M.A., and on Thursday spoke at a missionary meeting at Strathfield, and on Friday at the Church of England Grammar School for Boys, North Shore. On Saturday morning he left for Newcastle, he was unable to visit West Maitland on account of the floods, but preached at Hamilton, and addressed the Sunday School and the Public High Schools at Newcastle. He preached on Sunday at Newcastle, where he also addressed a meeting. On Tuesday he returned to Sydney and addressed a meeting at A.B.M. office and on Wednesday was the chief speaker at the annual meeting of A.B.M. in the Chapter House. On Thursday he spoke at All Saints, Petersham, and on Friday at North Sydney. On Saturday morning he left for Dubbo where he preached on Sunday and spoke on Monday. During the following week he addressed meetings on successive days at Orange, Bathurst, Portland and Nudgee, returning to Sydney on Saturday May 31st. On Sunday he preached three times at Strathfield and in the evening at St. James' Sydney. On Monday he left for Brisbane arriving on Tuesday evening and leaving next day by the Suva for Thursday Island. Rev. J. Jones is working very hard and successfully for A.B.M., ably seconded by Mrs. Jones and Miss Robson, so that Carpentaria is well represented in missionary circles. The Bishop hopes to leave Thursday Island for Normanton on July 1st and will hold a Confirmation at Croydon on July 6th, and Normanton July 7th. On July 8th he leaves overland for the Mitchell, arriving there about July 13th and leaving on July 21st by sea, for Karumba where he hopes to catch the Suva July 26th for Thursday Island. On August 18th he will leave for the Diocesan Conference at Cooktown, going on from there to Brisbane for the Church Congress. He will leave Brisbane immediately after the Conference and proceed to the Northern Territory, concluding the year with a visit to the Gulf towns and Georgetown.

Notes.

The Bishop arrived in Brisbane by the Suva on April 20th, having called at Cooktown for an adult confirmation, and at Townsville to baptize the son of Mr. and Mrs. Cole. The week was filled with a number of meetings, diocesan and provincial matters; a visit to St. Francis College, Nundah, to see the diocesan students; meetings of the Standing Committee of Provincial Synod, the Congress Committee, and Board of Missions, and an "At Home" to friends of the diocese.

The consecration of John Oliver Feetham as Bishop of North Queensland took place in the Cathedral, Brisbane, on St. Mark's Day, April 25th, at 10.30 a.m. There was a large congregation, and the service was very impressive. The consecrating bishops, who all wore their copes, were the Archbishop and the Bishops of Carpentaria and Rockhampton. A very powerful and moving sermon was preached by Canon Micklem. This is the first consecration of a Bishop held in the Cathedral. The new Bishop has kindly undertaken to be present at the Church Conference at Cooktown in August, and to conduct a devotional day.

We regret very much that Mrs. Matthews is suffering from a severe eye trouble. She was three weeks in Thursday Island Hospital, and has to go south for treatment. She and Mr. Matthews are going to Melbourne on furlough.

Mr. Hopkins, of Sydney, with his wife and sister-in-law, arrived on July 1st to work at the Mitchell during Mr. Matthews' absence. Mr. Hopkins will examine and report on the possibility of increasing the stock on the reserve.

Mr. A. West arrived from England by the Waipara, and has left for work at the Mitchell River Mission.

Rev. H. R. Longmore, B.A., also arrived by the Waipara, and left on July 1st for Croydon, where he has been appointed rector in succession to Rev. L. Ayseough.

Rev. L. Ayseough leaves Croydon on July 6th for Cooktown, where he succeeds Rev. J. H. Brown.

The Bishop left Thursday Island for Croydon on July 1st. He holds a Confirmation there on July 6th, and at Normanton on July 7th. On July 7th he leaves overland for the Mitchell River Mission, and hopes to return to Thursday Island on July 27th.

The Diocesan Conference will be held at Cooktown on August 20th. The Bishop of North Queensland will be present, and will conduct a Quiet Day for the clergy.

The Bishop of South Tokyo, Dr. Bouflower, is expected at Thursday Island on Sunday, August 10th. He has been invited to preach at Morning Prayer. He continues his journey the same day.

The Bishop met the Committee of the Synod, appointed to report on boundaries and nomenclature, at Townsville on June 7th. After a long consultation the committee agreed unanimously on their report to Synod.

Rev. A. McD. Hassell has succeeded Rev. J. Tweedie in charge of the parish of Normanton.

Deaconess Buchanan has notified the Bishop that her health will not allow her to work at Darwin after the cool weather comes to an end. She expects to be present at the Brisbane Church Congress.

Mrs. Jones will read a paper at the Congress.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held on Friday, June 27th. Present—The Bishop, Subdean, Messrs. Lee Bryce, Sullivan, and Mackenzie. Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., was appointed Diocesan Secretary. Mr. Mackenzie kindly offered to convey to Me the balance of materials for building the new church free of cost. The Bishop gave a satisfactory report of the work of the diocese. It was resolved to approve of the suggestions of the committee of the Diocese of North Queensland in their recommendations to their Synod as to the course to be adopted with regard to boundaries and nomenclature.

Among the visitors expected at the Brisbane Church Congress are the Bishops of South Tokyo, Christchurch, and Travancore. In addition to most of the Australian Bishops. Among the lay speakers is Mr. McGowan, late Premier of New South Wales.

The Rev. A. E. Smith has been ordained priest by the Archbishop of Brisbane. He has now for some years been in charge of St. Peter's Church, West End, S. Brisbane.

The materials for the new church at Moa have been ordered from James Campbell & Co., and should arrive early in June. A further sum of at least £50 will be needed before the actual erection of the church can begin.

Rev. Longmore and Mr. West left England by the Waipara, which is due at Thursday Island about June 23rd. Mr. Longmore will probably work in the Gulf district and Mr. West is a volunteer for the Mitchell River Mission.

Deaconess Buchanan expects to leave Darwin at the end of August and to proceed to Brisbane for the Church Congress before paying a visit to her brother for a complete rest.

With reference to the article in our last number on the lack of convictions of white men for outrages on natives and aliens in the Northern Territory, a correspondent sends us a list of five persons who he says had been previously convicted by local juries and served terms of imprisonment. We are always glad to receive fair corrections and in this case we are especially glad to hear that we were under a misapprehension as to the facts. We have not had time to verify our correspondent's list but we fully accept his statement. Our correspondent admits that there have been miscarriages of justice, and we have no desire to countenance any misapprehension as to their extent.

The Bishop discussed the matter of the the proposed alteration of boundaries with the Archbishop and Bishop of North Queensland, and it was arranged that the Bishop should meet the Committee of the Diocese of North Queensland to further discuss the matter prior to the meeting of the North Queensland Diocesan Synod in July. The Bishop has addressed the following letter on the subject to the Bishop of North Queensland:—

Bishopbourne, Brisbane,
April 22nd, 1913.

My dear Bishop Elect,—

I understand from the Administrator of the Diocese of North Queensland that the Committee of Synod would prefer that I should make a direct request to your diocese for the cession of Cairns and the north-east corner of the diocese, in addition to my detailed letter of Nov. 26th, 1912, in which I give the reasons why such action would be of real service to the diocese of Carpentaria. As the whole subject was voluntarily raised by the Bishop of North Queensland without any suggestion on my part, I should have preferred to leave it to the same generous feeling which dictated that action; but I am perfectly willing to make a formal appeal on behalf of the Diocese of Carpentaria, and in accordance with the wishes expressed by Diocesan Council and Diocesan Conference who have requested me to represent them.

I beg, therefore, that the Diocese of North Queensland will take into consideration the fact that the Diocese of Carpentaria is much handicapped in its working by the fact that the only railway of any account in the diocese runs for 260 miles parallel to but just inside the southern boundary of the diocese, entering the diocese, and to request that the diocese of North Queensland would consider the possibility of ceding the railway line from Cairns to Einasleigh to the Bishop of Carpentaria, making the boundary run from the coast immediately south of the Yarrabah reserve to a point 10 miles south of Cairns, and from thence 10 miles south of the main Cairns-Forsyth railway to a point where it enters the diocese of Carpentaria near Einasleigh. I would suggest, though not in any way putting it forward as an equivalent, that in order to preserve the same area of the diocese of North Queensland, that a corresponding area, west of Camooweal, be taken from Carpentaria and added to North Queensland, by which it can more easily be worked.

I have given my reasons for this request of the diocese of Carpentaria very fully in my letter of Nov. 26th, and need not repeat them here, merely saying that I fully recognize that the Diocese of Carpentaria has no legal claim to the territory asked for. I understand that Herberton will shortly be accessible from Townsville by a direct line from the south, in which case it will not be necessary to go round by Mareeba. I find it impossible to agree to the suggestion of the cession of the line excluding Mareeba, but see no difficulty in an agreement by which Mareeba could be worked as at present, at any rate until the direct line is completed to Herberton. I may say that this was the Bishop of North Queensland's original suggestion in regard to Mareeba. Trusting that the diocese will see its way to an agreement which seems to us to be for the good of the Church at large, though undoubtedly calling on the diocese of North Queensland to make a sacrifice, I am yours sincerely,

Gilbert, Bishop of Carpentaria.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House, Thursday Island, on Wednesday, April 9th, at 5 p.m. Present: The Bishop (in the Chair), Rev. the Subdean, Messrs Lee Bryce, Sullivan and Allen.

The Bishop reported that he had made an appointment to Cooktown, and that Rev. Jas. Tweedie was opening new work at Pine Creek. It was resolved that the Douglas Memorial Chapel should be opened on June 29th, when the new window given by the Islanders would also be ready. Owing to the difficulty of fitting in the steamers at Thursday Island, it was decided to hold the Church Conference this year at Cooktown on August 21st. A letter was read from the Diocese of North Queensland, and the Council, stating that they were quite unable to agree with the views contained in the letter with respect to the boundaries and nomenclature of the diocese, left the matter in the hands of the Bishop. The Bishop stated that there were nearly enough funds in hand to obtain all the materials for the Church in Moa, but not to erect them. It was resolved to obtain all the materials and store them at Moa, but not to proceed to erect the church until the funds were in hand. It was agreed that in the absence of the Bishop cheques should be countersigned by Mr. Lee Bryce. It was resolved that Mr. K. O. Mackenzie be invited to fill the place on the council vacant by the removal of Mr. P. Eggers. The meeting then terminated.

Trubanaman.

The following letter from the Government Resident at Thursday Island will be of interest to our readers as the opinion of a disinterested and impartial observer of our missionary work:—

Residency, Thursday Island
9th April, 1913.

Dear Bishop White—

During my recent visit to the Gulf I had an opportunity of visiting Trubanaman Mission Station. The system on which the station is worked appears to be well suited to the class of country available, and affords congenial employment to the natives.

The settlement has undoubtedly proved of great benefit to the aboriginals, and it is remarkable to see a body of people, who a few years ago were intractable and lawless, now settling down to a life of usefulness and peace.

It is quite evident that Mr. Matthews and his assistants have gained the confidence of the natives, and their influence extends to tribes located at a considerable distance from the head station. It is a difficult matter to break down many tribal customs which are obnoxious to Europeans, but the tactful way the superintendent handled some difficult situations during my visit proves that he is on the right track, and will ultimately effect a greatly to be desired change of affairs.

The mission staff deserve every praise for their devotion to duty. They pull together well, and under circumstances which would be irksome to most people are perfectly happy and contented.

I have every hope that this station will in time realize the most sanguine hopes of those interested in it. Sincerely yours,

WM. LEE BRYCE, Government Resident.

Trubanaman Mission
North Queensland, 25/3/13.

Dear Miss White—

The Francis Pritt is leaving to-morrow or Thursday, and although we have no mail to get ready during the wet season, it is always a rush to get ready for the first trip of the boat.

We have had a splendid rainfall and everything is looking its best. It is more than we can do to keep the weeds under, for they will cover the plants in spite of the hoe being used. All have been well, and it is wonderful how quickly the time of isolation passes when one is kept busy. We are a world unto ourselves, and are so absorbed in it that we find the time passes very rapidly indeed.

Christmas and Easter have both been very happy seasons, especially the former, when our people gave their first offering; and it was very touching to see the spears, womerahs and dilly bags laid on the altar at the ten o'clock service. We do miss our good old John Savo, who is taking charge of Koongalara, whilst Tom Solomon is away on the boat.

There are so many things John helps with, that it is only when he is away for a few weeks that we value his unselfish work, and both Miss Matthews and I will be glad to see his rugged old face again when the boat returns. You will be glad to hear Nellie is keeping well; she is better now than she has ever been and she is able to take her share of household duties.

How glad the girls were to see her again; some were quite overcome with joy, for they were beginning to think she would not return. Tom Solomon has had a wonderful crop of watermelons at Koongalara, and many found their way to Trubanaman.

We have had a splendid lot of limes. Mr. Matthews is sending you some for home use.

I think the lime drinks have something to do with our good health during the wet season, for they seem to supply a want. There was a splendid lot of gifts came in the Christmas boxes. Friends in the South were very good to us. Kind remembrances to Thursday Island friends.—Yours sincerely

M. A. MATTHEWS.

The Caldey Secessions.

We have received a pamphlet entitled "A Correspondence," issued by the Abbot of Caldey on the occasion of his secession to the Church of Rome, followed by a majority of the lay brothers and of the associated sisterhood. It is interesting to note, however, that none of the priests of the community seceded with their Abbot.

The history of the community is interesting and instructive. It was founded by the present Abbot, a nephew of Thomas Carlyle, to carry out in the Church of England the Rule of Life drawn up by St. Benedict, and it received the sanction of the late Archbishop Temple in 1902. After some vicissitudes the community settled on Caldey Island, where by the liberal gifts of Churchmen considerable buildings were erected. In regard to this property the following statement signed by the Abbot appeared in December, 1908, in "Pax," the quarterly organ of the Caldey Benedictines:—"Our friends may like to know that on the completion of the purchase the whole property was at once vested in a trust consisting of solemnly professed members of the community. A great deal of care was taken, acting under expert advice, to safeguard the stability of the community and to ensure the preservation of Caldey to the Church of England. My death could make no difference to the carrying out of the trust."

It seemed to many, and to the writer of these lines, who spent a few days in Caldey in 1908, that the experiment at Caldey was a very genuine attempt to revive the separated life in the Church of England, a side of its work that has existed in the Church from the earliest days, and which cannot be ignored without serious loss to the Church as a whole. At the same time the writer took the occasion of his visit to point out to the Abbot that if the experiment was to be a success it must be on English and not on Roman lines; and that in his opinion certain tendencies were developing which were rather Roman than English, and which might lead to trouble in the future. He was assured, with we believe entire sincerity at the time, that nothing was further from their thoughts than any disloyalty to the Church of England, but he went away hopeful that the evident earnestness and reality which characterised the life would prove more potent than a certain discontent which he seemed to notice with the simple teaching of the Book of Common Prayer. Unfortunately this was not the case, and a line of practice and teaching which was quite incompatible with loyalty to the Church. This, however, does not seem to have been clear to the members of the community. For in Lent, 1912, they considered their position and came unanimously to the conclusion that there was no call for them to leave the Church of England. Meanwhile the Abbot, who had been ordained in America with the approval of the Archbishop of York had applied (December 1911) to the Archbishop of Canterbury for a license to officiate under the Colonial Clergy Act. The Archbishop, after some correspondence, required that the community should first appoint an Episcopal Visitor, and recommended the Bishop of Oxford for that purpose. Bishop Gore, before accepting the office, suggested that he should appoint a commission to enquire and report, and this was accordingly done, Rev. J. Darwell Stone and Rev. W. B. Trevelyan being appointed commissioners. The Abbot agrees that the report which these gentlemen sent in was in accordance with the facts.

As a consequence of this report, Bishop Gore stated that he could not consider the question of accepting the office of Visitor unless to begin with certain things were made clear:—

1.—That all property must be clearly secured to the Church of England.

2.—That the Communion Office of the Prayer Book must be the exclusive rite in the Chapel of the community.

3.—That the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin was eliminated from the prayers.

4.—That Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament and Benediction given with the Blessed Sacrament were abandoned.

The Abbot replied on Feb. 19th, 1913, that the matters on which the Bishop required assurance were vital to their conception of the Catholic Faith, and that the Bishop's requirements cut away the very centre of their liturgical and devotional life and that, accordingly, they intended to secede to Rome.

The decision is not at all surprising if it be true that unwillingness to trust the Church in regard to their property, the use of a Latin instead of an English Communion Office, a belief in the Immaculate Conception and in the value of the Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament, were indeed the centre of their devotional and liturgical life. The amazing thing is that they could ever have believed that these things were a part, much less the centre, of the liturgy and devotion of loyal members of the Church of England.

It seems to us that the Caldey community or, to be exact, the Abbot and those lay members who have followed his leading, have thrown away a great opportunity of being pioneers in the revival of community life on thoroughly English lines to become an unimportant unit in the Roman Church, where that side of the Church's life is somewhat overdeveloped.

The Abbot has announced that he intends to hold on to the property in spite of his declaration in "Pax" that it was secured to the Church of England. The case will probably have to be decided in the law courts, but it would certainly have been more impressive if he had gone forth into "holy poverty" rather than carrying with him property to which his right is, to say the very least of it, very doubtful.

The secessions will probably for the moment give a set back—and an unjust set-back—to community life in the Church of England, but such community life is bound to increase in the future, partly because it is the only method of grappling with some of the problems of modern life, and partly from the growing earnestness and devotion of those who wish to give themselves entirely and without distraction to the service of God and of man for God's sake; and it may be just as well that the special risks and dangers of such communities should be dramatically pointed out while as yet they are few in number, so that the right lines may be laid down in the future.

Three points suggest themselves as essential. First—that the charter or constitution of the community should state very clearly its adherence to the formularies of the Church of England; secondly—that an episcopal visitor should from the first be insisted upon; and thirdly—that the property of the community was secured to the Church of England in the event of the lapse of the community. Had these three rules been observed it is improbable that events would have turned out at Caldey as they have done. It is a sad business at best, but we can at least draw from it instruction for the future. The Abbot's letters do not seem to show that he is in any sense a theologian, and he seems to have strayed away from the Church rather through the spirit of imitation and the use of Roman books and practices than from any deep-seated conviction.

In regard to the whole question of secession to Rome, it is interesting to note the admission by the great Roman Catholic writer, Von Hügel in his latest book, "Eternal Life," that "the conversions to Rome so numerous and remarkable between 1845-70 have notably diminished in both respects, especially during the last decade." We doubt if the latest example will alter Von Hügel's opinion.

Thoughts hardly to be packed
Into a narrow act, Fancies that broke through language and escaped;
All I could never be,
All men ignored in me,
This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped.

Ay, note that Potter's wheel,
That metaphor! and feel
Why time spins fast, why passive lies our clay,—
Thou, to whom fools propound,
When the wine makes its round,
"Since life fleets, all is change; the Past gone, seize to-day!"

Fool! All that is, at all,
Lasts ever, past recall;
Earth changes, but thy soul and God stand sure;
What entered into thee,
That was, is, and shall be:
Time's wheel runs back or stops; Potter and clay endure.

He fixed thee 'mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This Present, thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest;
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

Bishop's Visit to the Philippine Islands.

I arrived at Manila from Hongkong on Friday, Feb. 14, about five in the afternoon, and after tiresome formalities at the Customs drove to Bishop Brent's house in the Calle Isaak Peral. Next morning we had a celebration of Holy Communion in Japanese for the benefit of one or two Japanese Churchmen. The celebrant was Bishop McKim of Tokyo who is visiting Manila. After breakfast I visited the old Cathedral in the walled city, a fine but very plain building, and the Augustinian Church which was a beautiful cloister enclosing a garden. In the afternoon we heard of the arrest of two Philipinos, Government draughtsmen, who were caught with almost completed plans of the strong American forts at Corregidor Island, which they were supposed to have been making for a foreign power.

On Sunday morning I preached in the Cathedral at the ordination of the first Chinese deacon for the Chinese congregation of the Episcopal Church in Manila, Mr. T. Pay. The Cathedral is a very large fine building in Spanish style of Architecture, a gift from a former member of Bishop Brent's congregation. The Choral Eucharist was beautifully sung and there was a large and reverent congregation, with a good proportion of communicants. The Cathedral has only been built a few years but looks 100 years old. The windows, like those of all the houses in Manila, are of transparent oyster shells set in wooden frames. They give a soft light and look like the old-fashioned leaded diamond pane windows.

On Monday morning the Bishop furnished me with an introduction to the Acting Director of the Bureau of Science, and I spent a most instructive hour going over the fine buildings of the department with the director. The laboratories are large and well equipped, and all kinds of bacteriological experiments are carried on for the Health and Agricultural Departments. Another thing that interested me much was the fish section, where I saw specimens of the hundreds of coloured parrot and butterfly fish that haunt the reefs. Everything seems to be done on the most thorough and complete scale. After saying good-bye to the director, a most courteous American, I went on to the Observatory at the Jesuit College and presented an introduction to Father Algue, the well-known director, whose labours in the study of typhoons have been of such inestimable value. His system of typhoon detection has been introduced in the U.S. navy, and has just been adapted to the prediction of storms in the North Atlantic. Father Algue, a kindly, old, grey-haired priest, told me that he had received requests for data to assist in the prediction of storms in Australia, but the whole system of storms on the other side of the equator was different and warnings from Manila would be of little service. He then handed me over to a young English father, who took me all over the Observatory and explained everything to me in detail. I was especially interested in the earthquake recorders and anemometers. The maximum force of the wind recorded at Manila was 130 miles an hour, the monsoon average maximum being only 30. The clock in the Observatory has been going without a stop for over ten years. It is in vacuo and is wound up every ten seconds by electricity.

We left Manila on Wednesday, Feb. 19th, at 8 a.m., by train from the Tondo station. The line runs north over a great level plain between the mountains and the sea, covered with an endless succession of rice-fields, now dry and showing only the stubble on which hundreds of carabao were feeding. This is a kind of buffalo which is almost exclusively used for ploughing and for the rough native carts. To the west is the mountain of Merivales, at the entrance to Manila Bay. In the morning paper was an interesting letter from a young Philipino pointing out the uselessness of the much desired independence to the Philipinos at the present time, partly because they had no money to maintain an army and navy, and without both they could not protect themselves from foreign aggression; secondly, on account of their lack of education and political experience; and thirdly, because the various tribes were so bitterly at feud with each other that the withdrawal of the strong hand of the American Government would simply mean internecine domestic strife. These are wise words, but I fear they will not be much heeded. After about forty miles rice was displaced by sugar. The cane was not as large as the Queensland cane, and the method of extraction in the small mills scattered all over the country very primitive. The sugar is made in earthenware jars in a solid lump. The jar is then broken and the sugar sent to Hongkong or Japan to be refined. On Mindanao and other islands, however, large central mills are being erected with modern machinery. On the right of the line is a conspicuous extinct volcano, Mount Arayat, rising directly out of the plain to a height of 8,300 feet, and many legends centre round it. On the left is a more lofty range of barren hills. The local trains are crowded and the stations filled with gaily dressed crowds, the women all wearing bright dresses with huge starched muslin sleeves, and the men striped gauze jackets of varied hues. After about another forty miles sugar gives place to the cocoanut trees, which increase in numbers as the line approaches the coast at the mouth of the Bayambang River. One notices all through this country, as well as in Manila, children of three or four smoking cigarettes with inimitable gravity.

At San Fabian the present line towards Baguio branches off to the right towards the huge mountains which tower up to a height of over 9000 feet. After leaving the coast the cocoanuts are displaced by tobacco, cultivated with great care and in beautiful condition.

Baguio is the Simla of the Philipippines, and in February all the Government departments migrate to it for the summer. At Camp I. the train was met by eight large motor cars, each holding 14 passengers, and with commendable forethought their luggage was sent on ahead in a big baggage motor. The road, which rises 4500 feet in 22 miles, follows the narrow gorge of the Bued, and has been built with wonderful skill and at immense cost. The river has been known to rise in places 100 feet, and many of the countless bridges have been destroyed more than once. The road runs without parapet along dizzy heights and winds round curves so sharp that one wonders how the car can ever get round them. There is, however, an excellent system of regulation of traffic, which has to run to schedule time to avoid meeting; every few miles is a bar which is only raised when the section ahead is signalled clear. One or two baggage cars have had serious accidents, but only one passenger car. In this case it was the fault of the driver, who was bringing up a number of Chinese and wanted to show how near he could drive to the edge. Fortunately he was himself the only one seriously hurt. The whole 22 miles is intensely interesting; the cliffs rise up on either hand to a height of in some places 1500 feet, and the hills are covered with trees and extraordinarily varied in form. I do not know any place quite like it. At Camp 6, about 10 miles from Camp 1, the road leaves the gorge of the Bued and rises up 1500 feet by a bold zigzag on to the Baguio Plateau, which is 5000 feet above the sea and surrounded by lofty hills. The trees are here all pines, reminding one of Bournemouth, and the air is fresh and nipping. The Governor-General had arrived in the morning and we passed under arches of welcome inscribed, "Welcome to our Gove". At the station we were met by the boys of the Bishop's School, who welcomed us with hearty cheers. We walked with them to the School situated amid the pine trees about half-a-mile away. This school, which is proving a great success, is for the sons of the white residents in the Philipippines, chiefly army men and officials. The school, which has thirty-two boarders, is crowded out, and additional buildings are being erected to accommodate about twenty-five more. A similar school for girls is to be shortly established.

On the following day I called with the Bishop on the Governor-General, Mr. Forbes, in his official residence, a somewhat mean house on a magnificent site with a view extending over hill and valley for forty miles up to the huge mass of Mount Pulag, which is nearly 10,000 feet high. The conversation turned on the Jones Bill now before the Congress, and it was agreed that premature independence would be most disastrous to the best interests of the natives. The Governor, in common with other Americans that I have met, expressed much interest in Australia and its problems. The roads are very carefully kept and there are many Igorots working on them. Their national costume is simply a loin-cloth which, as in India, seems clothing enough by itself, but to improve their appearance they add to it a hat and coat which gives them an extraordinary half-dressed appearance far from beautiful. In the afternoon I drove with the Bishop to the Easter School, a Church school for Igorot children. Over fifty boys and girls live at the school and earn quite a lot of money by weaving. The looms are somewhat primitive and are made by the boys, but the work is very beautiful.

Next morning I walked to Mirador Observatory, a branch of the Jesuit Observatory at Manila. It is situated on a conical hill a mile or two out of Baguio and commands a most wonderful view. On the west the mountains drop down to the coastal plain and the waters of the Lingayen Gulf, only twenty miles away as the crow flies, but 40 by road, and beyond the Pangasinan Peninsula and the China Sea, sixty miles away, shining beyond it. From Mirador one sees that Baguio consists of a tableland, roughly circular and some six or seven miles in diameter. It is cup-shaped at the top, and in this circular valley the town lies. To the east over the Baguio hills that rim the town one sees the long, bare mountain range that culminates in the peak of Mount Pulag (9,400 feet), about thirty miles away. I met a number of natives coming in to market, some of the women having very bright dresses; one young woman was gorgeously attired, smoked a huge cigar, and had balanced on the top of her head what I took to be an ornament, but which turned out to be a square piece of yellow soap.

In the afternoon the boys met the soldiers at baseball and, playing splendidly, won a complete victory. I am becoming quite a convert to baseball. It is a game for busy people, more interest and excitement are crowded into an hour even than in football. After the game the Bishop and I walked up to Camp John Hay to call on the General. The officers' quarters, and especially the General's house, have one of the most beautiful views in the world, I think, and the whole place is kept in splendid order. I learnt somewhat to my surprise that except for the army of occupation the Philippines cost the U.S.A. nothing, all expenses being paid out of local revenue, and there is a considerable surplus. In the evening the boys celebrated their double victory with a bonfire and impromptu entertainment, followed by choir practice. The favourites were "My country, 'tis for thee," for which I was given special permission to substitute "God save the King," and a beautiful school hymn written by the Bishop.

On the following day (Sunday) we drove out for the 8 a.m. celebration at Easter School. I gave some account of Mission work among the aborigines, and this was followed by a Choral Eucharist beautifully sung. We met a great number of country people coming in to market and returning from it. Several led a dog by a cord or piece of bamboo, and it was a shock to learn that this was their dinner, dog taking among these people the place of goat or sheep, so that your dog is praised not for his beauty but for his size and fatness. About 600 dogs change hands every market day. We had a hurried meal and sandwiches in the carromato, a light two-wheeled cart, and got back just in time for the 10 a.m. service at the school. The service is held on a large veranda, and there was a good attendance of townspeople. The head master, who is evidently worshipped by the boys, has an original theory of corporal punishment. He holds that it should never be administered for any serious offence, but be freely used for trivial and not dishonourable breaches of law. For instance, last night we were sitting in his room when two small boys began to play ball in an adjoining room. "Jones," he called out to the elder, "don't you know that you must not play ball there?" "I know it." "Well, come in here and let me talk to you about it." The boy came in quietly, took off his baseball glove and laid it neatly on a chair, went to a corner and fetched a flat piece of board and laid himself down across the master's knee. A smart spanking followed which he bore without a wince, and went off quite happily with his offence purged.

In the evening there were some very interesting Bible classes, and after prayers I was requisitioned in the dormitory to tell the boys something about Australia until we were all ready for bed.

Next morning we were up at 5 a.m. and managed to get off about 6.30 a.m. We had 12 cargadores or carriers to carry our luggage and fodder for the ponies. The three ladies and I had sturdy little mountain ponies, but Bishop Brent preferred to walk. The trail leaves the road just outside Baguio and mounts up steeply for about twelve hundred feet and then descending winds along the mountain ridges fairly level for about twelve miles. The trail is most skilfully engineered, and is sometimes a mere ledge cut out of the side of a precipice which falls away hundreds of feet so that you see the tops of the pines far below under your feet. Fortunately the ponies are surefooted, for a slip would send rider and horse hundreds of feet below. The scenery is most marvellous. I have never seen anything more beautiful and rarely anything as beautiful. About 2 p.m. we reached the rest house of Sapangao perched among the pines on the mountain side, and waited patiently for nearly two hours for the dinner which was to be ready immediately. Owing to the trail keeping to the ridge the views are generally distant and uninterrupted. When dinner did at last arrive consisting of the inevitable fowl, beans, rice, and camotes (a kind of sweet potatoe) we did it ample justice, and then after making a sketch of the Rest House I climbed about sunset up on to the roof of things high above the trail and saw the sun set above a sea of clouds. The cargadores are a cheery lot. They carry enormous weights up the steepest hill on a bamboo framework which fits the back and is secured by straps round the shoulders and forehead. The pace is about 2½ to 3 miles an hour, which is good going for the country.

Next morning we left about 6.45 a.m. and had a day's journey which was far more wonderful than the last. For hours the trail ran over mounting but beautifully graded along the western side of a great mountain. After the sun had been up for hours the trail was still in deep shadow and the rocky upper side of the track was hung with a marvellous tapestry of ferns and flowers. Gorgeous pink begonias, Japanese anemones, spiraea, balsams, Michaelmas daisies, white violets, white forget-me-not, pink azaleas and wild roses on a background of countless ferns and wonderful mosses white, green, yellow, old gold, brown, and every intervening shade, all drenched in dew and festooned with fairy hammocks of spider web. The moisture-laden breeze comes over the top of the intervening mountains and keeps everything damp and fresh where it is shaded from the morning sun. On the left the mountain side falls 1000 feet almost perpendicularly, and in one place one can drop a pebble 2000 feet before it strikes the rock. We could see clear over the mountains to where the distant sea was hidden in cloud. We had lunch where a tiny stream crosses the track and where we could look down on the gullies filled with tree ferns far below. After a few miles we ascended sharply for about 500 feet and came into another world of ilex scrub above the pines. For several miles the trail ascended through the scrub, full of orchids, great masses of pink azalea, a wonderfully beautiful white hydrangea, crimson leaves, and mossgrown trees until it came out into a little clearing where there is a rest-house kept by an old soldier married to an Igorote woman. There is no distant view from the house, but the air is cold and fresh as the house is 7,300 feet above the sea, and great mists come sweeping up out of the world below and pass overhead of the little hollow in which the house lies. A track leads to a hill about half-a-mile distant from which a magnificent view can be obtained. About dark we were quite ready for the host's invitation "Sit right to, folks," and a feast of beautiful lamb, soup, rice, comotes, red cabbage, eschalots, and potatoes all grown on the place. We did not get off until about 8.30 a.m. the following morning and the trail kept along the mountain side all day at a height of about 6000 feet. In the afternoon we emerged from the shady forest on to a bare hillside along which the trail ran for a couple of miles or more; the slope below ran down uninterruptedly to the river 4000 feet below, and across the valley rose the great dividing range between east and western Luzon with its summits wreathed in cloud. We made a short camp for lunch and reached the Boyayo rest-house (6000 ft.) about 5 p.m. after travelling about 23 miles. I felt so well that I walked nearly all the way and led my pony. During these three days the trail has never descended to 5000 feet, and has averaged about 6000.

Next day, Thursday, we made a short day leaving the rest-house about 8 a.m. and reaching the village of Mankayan about 1.30 p.m., the distance being about 17 miles. We descended about 3000 feet and passed several small hamlets and some cultivation as we neared Mankayan. Here the presidente or headman gave us a decent house for our accommodation, but our ponies had to pass the night tied up to convenient fences. They have to be well separated as they fight furiously. We carried 'trigo' or barley for them and could usually get 'palay' or rice in the ear and comotes in addition. Our cargadores left us here and we have a new lot to-morrow. They are paid a peso (two shillings) a day without food, which only costs them about 3d. a day, so they do well.

Next day we left at 6 a.m. and shortly lost our good trail, having to lead the horses down a place like the side of a house for about 1000 feet. The hills here were bare of trees and the scenery equally beautiful, but quite different to anything we had seen before. We passed small huts and small bits of cultivation and wherever it was possible, coming down on to the river we had a wonderful view of the rice paddies below. The rice was about 6 in above the water, and the brown earth shining through the water, between the parallel rows of rice had the most beautiful translucent effect like watered silk of every shade from brightest green to red, brown, and sometimes bright blue where it reflected the sky. Our way lay down the narrow river valley for many miles and the heat was tremendous after the coolness of the mountains. We were all very glad to reach Cervantes about midday. Cervantes is a considerable village and boasts a "gubernador" and a post office. There is no rest-house or inn however, and we were driven to invade an empty house whose owner was away and make ourselves at home as best we could. Cervantes though in the Bontoc country is a Christian village with a large Church and good school. I made a sketch of it in the afternoon and was surrounded by all the children of the village with whom I conversed in a mixture of Igorote Spanish and school English. We went to bed early in hopes of making a very long day tomorrow.

We got up at 3.30 a.m. but had to get breakfast and load up a new lot of cargadores so that we did not get off until after 5.30 a.m. At Cervantes we got on to the main trail from the coast to Bontoc. It is well graded and wide enough to be practicable for the small native bull carts. We rose gradually, following the course of a river and getting some beautiful views of the gorge below. The extraordinary thing of travelling in this part of the world is that every day's scenery is entirely different to the preceding. We have in six days' journey never had two days in the least alike. After about fifteen miles we left the main trail and by a somewhat rough track reached in about five miles the village of Bauco, where we rested for about four hours. We started again about 3 p.m. and striking the main trail again followed it till after dark when our cargadores struck and said they could go no further. We determined to leave them behind and go on and had a long weary journey in the dark running into some bull carts in the darkest and narrowest part of the trail, we had to go back some distance before we could pass. It was nearly 11 p.m. when we reached Bontoc, where everyone had given us up. The ladies were very tired but stuck to the trail gallantly. Bishop Brent walked the whole 37 miles of the day's journey, I walked a good deal but got a good rest on my pony now and then.

Bontoc consists of a native town of about 4000 people and about 30 American residents, and is the capital of the mountain province. It is about 300 years old and was garrisoned by the Spaniards who however were several times wiped out by the turbulent population.

Bishop Brent has a strong Mission here and we stayed at the Mission house. The people here were all head-hunters till lately and feuds are still only restrained by the strong hand of the U.S. Government. Only last week some men from Bontoc killed some men from a neighbouring town and a force of some hundreds of armed men invaded Bontoc with the announced intention of clearing it out, but they were interrupted by the constabulary and about 60 of the ringleaders lodged in jail. We had a celebration in the little Church at 8 a.m. on Sunday morning. The service was beautifully sung and very reverent. The ritual is somewhat advanced and seems to appeal to a people who are taught much by the eye. All the men carry spears about five feet long with a broad steel blade and it is curious to see them peacefully carrying lime for building with these weapons in their hands. It is certain that were the American forces withdrawn local feuds would immediately break out with much bloodshed.

In the afternoon through an excellent interpreter I gave the children some account of the missions to the Australian aborigines and they seemed deeply interested. Evensong was very heartily and well sung in English which the elder children understand fairly well. The girls wear a short shirt or blouse and a sulu such as our mission boys wear, with a sash designed and woven by themselves in beautiful colours; the sulu is often also woven by themselves and the whole effect is excellent. The boys wear the national costume of loin cloth and jacket. At Church the girls wear a white handkerchief thrown over the head. It is very simple and looks very well.

On Monday I visited the native town which consists of perhaps 500, more or less, conical grass houses. It is divided up into five wards, each of which is ruled by a council of old men who meet on a curious platform of stones. The roof of the houses comes down to within three feet of the ground and there are no walls. The floor is about five feet from the ground up in the roof. The people live and sleep on the ground under the roof, the house itself being used chiefly as a store house for rice and camotes. The old women, girls, small boys, and unmarried men, all have separate ward dormitories. The girls are under no sort of moral control and there is said to be much license, but once the women are married they are said to be faithful to their husbands. Alongside of each house and sometimes under the house is a stone pit containing a pig, and the sty is rarely if ever made clean. I doubt if our aborigines would live in the filth and smell of an Igorote town. I sat it out for about half an hour while I made a sketch, but had to flee before it was done. It must be understood that the Igorotes are not and never have been Christians like the majority of Philipinos and their traditions are all purely heathen. The mission staff at Bontoc consists of three ladies, one layman, and one priest. I was immensely struck here and elsewhere by the high quality of the American women engaged in mission work in the Philippines. It was not only that they were capable and earnest, but they were in most instances also women of high culture and education and well able to hold their own in any society. Many of them had come and continue to work at their own expense.

Next day the Vice-Governor-General arrived on a visitation of the north, and there was a wonderful "cañao" (pronounced "can-yow") or, as we should call it, "corroboree," held in his honour. Representatives came in from the neighbouring villages and towns until some 2000 were assembled, and each had its own particular dance. The men had bronze gongs which had been handed down for generations and which they will not sell at any price. The handle is always made of a human jawbone, and frequently the drumstick also. They are many of them beautifully tattooed, and wear different headdresses according to their tribe, while in their belt is stuck the formidable head-hunter's axe which they make at little primitive forges with bamboo bellows, and which up to a year or two ago was in constant use for its real purpose. This axe is nearly square, and on the top back edge has a sharp iron beak some five or six inches long. One tribe, the Kalingas, wore a headdress of feathers eighteen inches high. Some of the presidents or headmen interested me greatly by the keenness and intelligence of their faces. They were evidently accustomed to lead their men in more serious evolutions than the dance. One man named Oipod especially struck me. He was nearly six feet, which is very tall for an Igorote, and rules all the north country. He defied the Spanish power and was imprisoned by them for seven years. The men dance round in a circle on their toes, beating gongs, and three or four women dance in the centre with much posturing and waving of the arms.

In others the place of the women was taken by a man with shield and spear or head-axe. I never saw more graceful dancing, and the cries of the spectators and the noise of the gongs, and the brilliant colour of the women's clothing and the men's headdresses, and the excitement of the children, made a bewildering scene as we looked down on it from above. There must have been several thousand people crowded into the plaza below, and at least a dozen cañaos going on at the same time.

We left Bontoc about 9 a.m. on Thursday, and after retracing our old trail for about three miles struck up a steep track to the right, which rose 2500 feet in a few miles. The scenery again changed utterly, and we rode for some miles over bracken-covered uplands, full of caves and holes in the earth and sharp-pointed limestone crags. About two miles from Sagada we were met by a number of boys from the mission, who welcomed us with much blowing of horns and beating of gongs. I was astonished at the size and permanent character of the mission buildings, as the mission is only twelve years old. The buildings occupy a hill in an open valley 5000 feet above the sea, and are about a quarter of a mile from the native village. They cover some 80 acres of ground and are substantially built of local stone and timber from the mission mill. A large stone hospital and stone church to take the place of the present wooden buildings are in the course of erection. There are large workshops, dormitories, schools, stores, and other buildings, besides two fine houses for the mission clergy who are married men. The mission extends its influence for a day's journey in all directions, and has 1200 baptised members.

Next day I rode over with the ladies to the sawmill about six miles distant. The trail runs along the hills for about four miles and then drops suddenly down 1500 feet into a green valley where the sawmill is built in the river gorge. All the timber used in Bontoc and the surrounding district is cut in this mill and has to be carried 10 miles on men's shoulders, and it provides a living for hundreds of men, women and children. The women carry the heavier loads, then the men, while the children carry the smaller pieces. The mill has proved very profitable to the mission. The scenery was exquisitely beautiful and I stayed to sketch while the ladies returned. On my way back in the afternoon I had wonderful views of Sagada backed by high mountains black with mist and rain clouds.

At 5 p.m. the service of the stations of the cross was held in the Church. Thirty or forty adults mostly men, besides the school children were present. The service lasted over an hour and many of the men had just knocked off work but there was no flagging of attention. The singing was beautiful and entirely congregational and the people seemed to feel that it was their service and a solemn act of devotion. It certainly was a democratic service for Igorotes and Ilocanos, English and Americans, Spaniards and Mestizos, men and women, bishops and little children were thoroughly mixed up in the congregation which walked and prayed round the Church. At night it rained heavily.

On Saturday morning we all rode over to Besao, a villa about five miles off, where the mission has just put a teacher and school. The trail was very narrow and the rain had made it slippery and dangerous. In some places there was less than a foot of it, which is not pleasant with a fall of 200 feet below. The site of the new mission commands a wonderful view. We raced a shower back, and rain fell in the afternoon. The workshops of the mission are extraordinarily complete, and all kinds of carpentering and ironwork are done, besides plumbing and tin-smithing. The electric light plant is managed entirely by Igorote boys, and a young Igorote is head of the printing department which turns out most excellent work.

On Sunday morning the Bishop held a confirmation at which fifty-five candidates, half of them adults, were confirmed. In the afternoon he left for Bagnan, where he was to hold service at night and confirm early on Monday morning. In the afternoon Señor M., a Spanish gentleman who is one of the right hands of the mission, undertook to guide us to a neighbouring cave. I had much interesting conversation with him—or, rather, received much interesting information from him, for although I easily understood what he said I did not feel my Spanish equal to giving him much information in return.

The whole of this mountain country is liable to landslips, and he pointed out a large portion of a valley which, with the houses and rice fields on it, had dropped 30 feet in three days. Indeed, we noted a flourishing camote field on our way to the cave, and on our return we found that a portion of the centre of the field had in the meanwhile sunk five feet into the ground. The cave is a very large one, extending about a third of a mile under ground, and is fifty feet wide and a hundred high. Through it runs a subterranean river which reappears four or five miles lower down. Señor M. was formerly a Spanish officer, and was hidden in this cave many years ago during an insurrection.

Next morning we left the mission at 6.45. I was deeply impressed by the missions both here and at Bontoc. They are exercising a wide influence, and evidently fill a very real place in the lives of the people. Should the Philipinos be given independence it is very doubtful whether the missions would be adequately protected from the ladrones, who are only held in check by the American Government. It is more than doubtful whether a Philippino Government could maintain safety of life and property in these wild regions. We picked up the Bishop at the village of Bagnan soon after 8 a.m. and continued our way up the mountain, which was shrouded in mist. We rose steadily to a height of 6000 feet and came on to the region of oaks and other high altitude trees. About 9 a.m. the mist rolled away and we had a most magnificent view on both sides, the trail, which was in parts very rough, following the ridges of the mountains. About 10 a.m. we reached the summit, 6500 feet, and thence plunged down 5000 feet to the valley of the Abra, stopping to rest for an hour at the picturesque village of Cayam on the way. We found the river-bed very rough, being filled with boulders and swollen with the recent rain; and just missing a thunderstorm reached about 3 p.m. our old trail where we had left it ten days before at the town of Cervantes, where we put up at the house of the "gubernador," whose active wife made us extremely comfortable. The Bishop soon after our arrival set off in the rain on a long ride to baptise two children somewhere in the mountains, and did not return till dark.

Cervantes is situated in the river valley between two great ranges of mountains, and is consequently very hot. It used to be the capital of the province, but this has now been transferred to Bontoc. We were to have started at 6 o'clock next morning, but owing to the temporary indisposition of one of the party did not get off till 8 a.m. We had to cross the great ridge of mountains which runs north and south between Cervantes and the sea, and rose up by a good trail in long zigzags to nearly 6000 feet, coming again among the pines and oak trees. The descent on the other side facing the sea was totally different, the whole mountain side being clothed in a mass of tropical jungle full of gorgeous butterflies and strange birds. In places the cliffs rose almost perpendicularly for over 1000 feet, but so covered by vegetation that no rock could be seen. After a long descent on the western side we reached the Cuscusong Rest House, situated on the banks of a wild rocky river. We could find no one in charge, but after a time our cargadores began to arrive and an American road foreman turned up with rolls, fresh venison, and a small boy to be baptised. After the baptism we had a sumptuous tea and went to bed, as we knew we should have a long day on the morrow. We were off before 6 a.m. and for four or five hours followed the course of the river, finally leaving the foothills behind us and emerging from the mountains on to the sea plain six or seven miles from the important town of Tagadin. Here we were hospitably entertained at lunch by the local Governor, and about 4 p.m. we left in a motor from San Fernando which we had ordered by telegraph to be there to meet us. Shortly after leaving the town we came to a wide but shallow river, which we crossed on a most primitive raft of a single thickness of slender bamboos fastened together. How it ever bore the weight of the motor and its passengers I cannot conceive. We had no fewer than six of these rivers to cross, but the rafts on the others were stronger, though the road was heavy and sandy as it ran parallel to the sea for nearly thirty miles. It was long after dark when we reached San Fernando, and next morning we continued our journey by motor to the rail-head of the north coast railway, which we left about 9.30 a.m. on the ten-hours journey to Manila.

Looking back on my visit to the mountains, it stands out as one of the most delightful times I have ever spent. I have, of course, seen higher mountains in Switzerland and elsewhere, but nowhere such infinite variety or a more delightful climate.

For the information of those desiring to travel I add a few hints. Bedsteads are provided at the rest-houses, but bedding should be taken, as also a certain amount of food, though many of the rest-houses provide excellent meals. Each person requires at least two cargadores, who carry about 46 lb. and cost 2s a day. A pony may be hired at Bagnan for about 30s a week. Some feed should be carried as palay is not always obtainable. The cargadores will travel about 25 miles a day. The ladies of our party thoroughly enjoyed the trip and suffered no inconveniences, but it is not a country in which ladies should travel alone. A large canteen for water should be carried, as it is not safe to drink the water unboiled.

Before leaving Manila I had the opportunity of attending a lunch at which many of the prominent Americans of Manila were present, and the question of Philippine independence was discussed. The general opinion seemed to be that it would be an immoral act on the part of the United States to give up the Philippines at the present moment, though no one wished to retain them once the Philipinos were fit for independence.

I must confess to being most agreeably surprised by the American administration in the Philippines. An immense amount has been accomplished in a very short time, and the good of the people seems to be the real aim of the Administration.

The higher officials seem to be men with high and, in some instances with very high, ideals, and the lower officials, governors of towns and so on, seem to be capable, efficient, and interested in their work, though one wonders what will be the result in the future of the fact that so many of them have native wives.

I saw absolutely nothing of any high-handedness or oppression on the part of Government officials. So far as I can judge, the Americans are making a real success of Luzon and other islands, are trying honestly to bear the white man's burden for the good of the people, and are trying to train them for an independence which they recognise must be in the very far and dim future.

Much harm is being done, however, by ignorant people in the United States who know nothing of what is being done, and by advocating a policy of scuttles are raising false ideas among the Philipinos.

With the Mohammedan Moros in Mindanao and Jolo the Americans seem to have been less successful. They have tried only a policy of repression, with the result that in Jolo every man in the island is practically out on the warpath, and the Americans are apparently in for a bad time.

The other point that struck me about the Philippines was the immense influence exercised by Bishop Brent among men of all classes and political opinions. It is an open secret that he has again been offered other work, and if he should leave the Philippines one of the strongest factors for peace and mutual understanding will be withdrawn.

It is clear that the interests of Australia are bound up with the Philipinos to a considerable extent. To begin with, nearly everything that is used by the Americans, flour, butter, milk, jam, honey, meat, cattle fodder, comes from Australia; and the total volume of trade, including the supplies for the army of occupation, must be enormous. In the second place, should the Americans withdraw from the Islands, it is almost certain that, defenceless as they would be, they would fall into the hands of either Japan or Germany, and Australia could hardly regard with equanimity either of these Powers established within five days sail of the Australian coast, for Manila is nearer to Thursday Island than Sydney is by 100 miles, and Zamboanga is nearer than Brisbane. It is sincerely to be hoped that the Americans will not withdraw until the Philipinos are strong enough to stand alone, and that is not likely to be in this generation.

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

By the BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA,
DIOCESAN CONFERENCE, COOKTOWN, AUGUST 20th, 1913.

My Lord Bishop, my brethren of the clergy and laity—I bid you heartily welcome in the name of the Holy Trinity to this sixth Conference of the Diocese of Carpentaria held for the first time at Cooktown.

The Conference should have been held last year, but was postponed because of the difficulty we always experience in this diocese in getting our clergy together, owing to the great distances and the uncertainty of boats. The postponement, however, has given us the great pleasure of the presence and assistance of the new Bishop of North Queensland, who has most kindly agreed to my request to be present and to conduct a Devotional day for the clergy.

In the name of us all, I wish you, my Lord Bishop, a most hearty welcome to the Diocese of Carpentaria and to this Conference, and I thank you sincerely for coming.

CLERGY.

Next, my brethren of the clergy, I bid you welcome. I know that those of you who have come have done so at great personal inconvenience and difficulty, because you wish to share in the corporate life of the diocese. I deeply regret that so many of you are necessarily absent from our gathering. Among those who have begged to be excused owing to the very great loss of time which would have been incurred are Rev. W. Wilkinson, who is absent on one of his immense journeys, this time to the southern parts of the N. Territory; Rev. F. T. Lane, who in the absence of the Superintendent cannot leave the Mitchell River Mission, Rev. H. R. Longmore, B.A., who has just come to Croydon; and Revs. W. A. Fletcher, J. Tweedie, B.A., H. Birch, and H. E. D. Warren, all of the Northern Territory.

I welcome you, too, my brethren of the laity, those of you who have been able to be present. Unfortunately distance prevents most of our laity from coming to Cooktown.

Among the subjects for discussion are the Boundaries of the Diocese, The advisability of forming a Synod; Missionary Organisation; Ecclesiastical Fire Insurance; Sunday Schools; Religious Instruction; Incomes of Clergy and Diocesan Accounts. The whole of Friday and also Saturday morning will be devoted to a Devotional Day conducted by the Bishop of North Queensland.

NEW BISHOPS.

Since our last Conference three new bishops have been elected to Australian sees: Bishop Sharp to the arduous work of the Missionary Diocese of New Guinea; Bishop Long to Bathurst; and Bishop Peetham to North Queensland. We rejoice that Bishop Sharp has recovered from his painful and dangerous illness, and we look forward to great things being done for the Church by the new bishops of the two Continental sees.

THE DIOCESE.

Two years ago I invited the Archbishop of Brisbane, without prejudice to any question of precedent or inherent metropolitical powers, to hold an informal visitation of the diocese as Archbishop, and to send visitation questions to the clergy through the Bishop. The Archbishop kindly undertook the task, and his report, which was published at the time in the "Carpentarian," is extremely interesting.

He terms the work of the diocese a gallant attempt to cope with very great and almost paralysing difficulties, owing to the steady depopulation with its consequences of financial strain and isolation of the clergy.

The Archbishop speaks of the energy and self-devotion of the clergy in terms of praise which I believe to be fully justified by the facts. "They are", as he says, "doing a noble work in the face of quite exceptional difficulties—a work which ought to stir the energies and command the sympathy of the whole Church."

PAN-ANGELICAN GRANT.

It was in very large degree by the help and sympathy of the Archbishop that this diocese had the good fortune to receive since last Conference a sum of £2,500 from the Pan-Anglican Fund for the increase of the Bishoprick Endowment, and a sum of £500 towards the formation of a Clergy Sustentation Fund. By this means the income of the See has been raised to £394 16s., leaving only £25 4s. to be contributed by the diocese.

DIOCESAN FINANCE.

During the last three years our Diocesan receipts have been as follows:—

1910	...	£1617	8	10
1911	...	1749	0	8
1912	...	1602	3	7

and our expenditure—

1910	...	£1660	14	7
1911	...	1791	10	3
1912	...	1518	15	8

Our receipts were made up as follows:—

	ENGLISH GRANTS	ENGLISH SUBS.	AUSTRALIAN SUBS., ETC.
1910	299 16 0	290 0 0	1029 12 10
1911	242 7 4	694 7 4	1055 13 4
1912	395 0 6	400 0 0	807 3 1

I desire to express my most grateful thanks on behalf of the diocese to those generous donors in England and Australia, and to the S.P.G., the C.C.C. Society, and the Carpentarian Association, who have made the work of the diocese possible, and lifted an immense load of financial anxiety from my shoulders.

Our expenditure has been as follows:—

	GRANTS TO PARISHES	MISSIONS	VARIOUS
1910	284 14 4	856 19 3	519 1 0
1911	531 18 4	782 11 6	476 15 5
1912	368 10 0	585 11 6	936 4 2

The details will be found in the audited accounts for 1910, 1911, and 1912, which are laid upon the table and have been published year by year in the "Carpentarian."

I have to express special thanks to Mr. R. Christison who, in accordance with the promise I announced last Conference, gave £600 in 1910 for the assistance of white mission work in the diocese. We have been enabled to give greater assistance in consequence to the parishes during the last two years, and £300 of this fund is still in hand.

PAROCHIAL WORK.

Parochial work goes on steadily in spite of the difficulties created by an ever-dwindling population in almost all parishes of the diocese. This diminution will be seen from the statistics, which I subjoin, for the last year, 1912, compared with the average of the three previous years.

	1912.	AVERAGE OF THREE PREVIOUS YEARS
Baptisms	130	172
Marriages	52	36
Confirmees	22	62
Burials	27	59
Communicants	447	443
S.S. Teachers	43	45
S.S. Scholars	515	574

It will be seen that in almost every instance the numbers are below the average of the previous year, the only exceptions being the number of marriages which is much above the average, and the number of communicants which has slightly increased. Turning to finance, the sum raised last year in the parishes was £2303, as compared with an average for the previous three years of £1904, so that in spite of bad times the parishes have been doing their best. In this connection attention must be called to the splendid effort made at Croydon, which resulted in the complete paying-off of the long-standing debt of over £400 on the Church and Rectory. We congratulate the late Rector, to whose faith and energy the result was mainly due.

At the present time the total indebtedness of the whole diocese only amounts to £46, which is offset by parochial credit balances £41, exclusive of Sunday School and Building Fund balances. Thus we may say that neither diocese nor parishes have any debts at all. I trust it may long be so.

CLERGY.

This result has been, however, only attained by the personal sacrifices of the clergy. I feel quite ashamed of my own income, although it is none too large, when I think of the utterly inadequate incomes on which the clergy of this diocese are doing their devoted work. There are only two parishes in the diocese which pay £200, or over, while the average below which the incomes of some of the clergy fall considerably is only £170, even when supplemented by diocesan grants. I feel that considering the cost of living in the north no priest should receive less than £200. I am not blaming the laity, who are doing their utmost. Our Church population does not exceed 3000, and is raising £2000 a year for Church purposes. This is a high percentage for a poor population, but the difficulty remains that the clergy are not adequately or nearly adequately paid for their work. They have never complained to me, but I know that the stress is often very great.

CHANGES.

During the last three years there have been changes. We have lost temporarily Rev. H. H. Ayscough who, after a year at Moore College, has gone to England to take his B.A. degree at Durham; and Rev. W. E. Godson, who has also gone to England on leave and who hopes to do some work for the diocese there. Both these gentlemen hope to return to the North, and both will be more than welcome. Rev. J. Prankerd has also returned to England, and Rev. J. H. Brown has left for the South. On the other hand, our diocesan staff has been increased by Rev. L. Ayscough, whom we welcome as our host in Cooktown; Rev. W. A. Fletcher, Rector of Darwin; Rev. J. Tweedie, B.A., who has opened up new work at Pine Creek; and Rev. H. R. Longmore, B.A., who has succeeded Rev. L. Ayscough at Croydon; and Rev. H. E. D. Warren, missionary at the Roper River.

During the past three years I have visited Cooktown and St. Paul's, Moa Island, five times; Normanton and Croydon four times; Georgetown, Mossman, and the Mitchell River three times; Darwin and the Northern Territory twice; and Burketown, Coen, and the Roper River once.

DIOCESAN COUNCIL.

The changes in our Diocesan Council reflect our changing conditions of life. We have lost by death Mr. H. Milman, a true and faithful friend of the Church, whose welfare lay very close to his heart; by removal Mr. A. S. L. Wells, also an old and tried friend of the Church; and Mr. P. Eggers, and Mr. H. Allen; while we have the assistance of two valued new members, Mr. W. Lee Bryce and Mr. K. O. Mackenzie. The Council has held regular meetings and given me the greatest assistance in the conduct of diocesan business.

CHURCH BUILDING.

The Cathedral has been greatly improved by the erection of the Douglas Memorial Chapel at a cost, including furniture, of over £250. An effort is being made by the members of the Mothers' Union to complete the other aisle, when the building will be complete so far as it goes. A beautiful window given by the Torres Straits Islanders recalls to us with exact faithfulness the much-loved features of our old friend, Hon. John Douglas.

House and land have been bought for a Rectory at Darwin, and a new Church erected at Pine Creek. At Port Douglas the Church and Rectory destroyed by the cyclone have been re-erected and a beginning has been made for a stone Church at Mossman. Unfortunately the cost of foundations, necessarily very massive owing to the liability to flood, has been so great that we have so far been unable to proceed with the Church itself.

MISSIONS.

During the last three years the diocese has expended an average of £750 a year on missionary work including St. Paul's Mission, Moa, the Mitchell River Mission, and work among the South Sea Islanders. The Mission to Moa is entirely a diocesan mission, and the work so splendidly begun by Deaconess Buchanan has been carried on faithfully by Mr. B. S. Cole. We have this year allowed the men the use of the Banzai for fishing on condition that they run the mail thus effecting a considerable saving to the diocese and also helping the islanders very materially. The new Church is in the process of erection and will I hope be opened before long.

The Mitchell River Mission has made steady and remarkable progress during the last three years. One of the great needs of the Mission is a substantial increase in our small herd of cattle, and Mr. Hopkins who kindly volunteered to stay at the mission during the four months of Mr. Matthews' furlough has promised to report fully on the matter with regard to which he has expert knowledge. We deeply regret that Mrs. Matthews is suffering greatly from a serious affection of the eye and wish her a speedy recovery from the trouble brought on we fear by her over exertions at the Mission. It is impossible to over estimate the benefit the Mission has received from the presence of a chaplain, and Rev. F. T. Lane has shown a rare devotion to duty in that office. The Mission has recently received an energetic recruit in the person of Mr. A. West.

The Roper River Mission has been strengthened by the arrival of Rev. H. E. D. Warren, and Mr. W. G. Vizard. A pumping plant has been erected which will we hope irrigate the whole of the immediate neighbourhood of the Mission Station.

DIOCESAN BOUNDARIES.

At the last session of the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland the Bishop suggested that a rearrangement of boundaries should take place by which Cairns and the railway to Forsyth should be included in this diocese. The Diocesan Council approved of this suggestion but could not see their way to agreeing to the proposed exclusion of Mareeba from this arrangement. Much conference has taken place on the subject, and I met the representatives of North Queensland at Townsville on June 7th. As no agreement could be arrived at, the committee appointed by the diocese of North Queensland to report on the matter unanimously agreed to advise their Synod to refer the matter to the Archbishop of Brisbane for arbitration, a suggestion with which I and subsequently the Diocesan Council gladly agreed. The Synod of the diocese of North Queensland met in July and decided not to refer the matter to the Archbishop. I prefer at present not to comment on this action. I desire however to express my thanks to the Bishop of North Queensland for the fair and friendly attitude that he has personally taken in this matter.

On the late vacancy of the See of North Queensland I repeated my protest against the use by that diocese of the title "North Queensland" as misleading and incorrect, inasmuch as the diocese does not include the North of Queensland which is part of this diocese. The Queensland Bishops, excluding the two concerned, considered the question and passed the following resolution:—"We are of the opinion that there is no authority capable of effecting a change in the name of the diocese of North Queensland except the diocese of North Queensland itself."

"We recognise that there would be technical difficulties in the way of any change of name involving considerable trouble to the diocese of North Queensland. We are however of the opinion that the present name is highly unsatisfactory, and that if the Diocesan authorities could see their way to an alteration they would be acting in the best interests of the Church."

In connection with this subject we think it may be well to suggest that in view of the growth of population and development of the railway system of the State it might be desirable for representatives of the two dioceses to confer about the desirableness or otherwise of some alteration in the boundaries as at present defined."

This matter was also discussed at the meeting on June 7th to which I have referred and the committee resolved to make a similar recommendation to that on the subject of boundaries.

This recommendation was also thrown out by the North Queensland Synod. As the Bishops point out might is entirely on their side, so that it seems useless now to discuss the question. I think we ought to acknowledge gratefully the stand which the Archdeacon of North Queensland took in the matter.

DEACONESS BUCHANAN.

There is one matter to which I must refer before turning to other subjects. Deaconess Buchanan has regretfully come to the conclusion that her health will not allow her to work longer in the North where constant walking is practically a necessity and proper attendance unobtainable.

I do not like to contemplate the greatness of the loss to this diocese. Deaconess Buchanan had been already working in Thursday Island for some years when the diocese was formed, and although not actually in it at that time she at once returned at my request.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the greatness of the work she has accomplished during her years of labour in the North. By her deep piety, her quick humour, her unfailing sympathy, her wise teaching, her boundless charity, she has won and touched hearts that others could not reach. The roughest sailors love and respect her, the Mission at Moa owes its spiritual life to her fostering care. With an absolute devotion, with unfailing patience, without any earthly reward or compensation she has devoted life and means to the service of her fellow men, while at the same time herself in such constant pain and suffering that almost any other person would have been resigned to become an invalid waited upon instead of waiting upon others. Her life and work have been a constant inspiration to us all, and wherever she is or may be working Deaconess Buchanan will be followed by the prayers and blessings of the diocese with which her name has to its honour been so closely associated.

Before concluding I wish now to turn to some subjects of wider and more general interest to the Church at large.

SCIENCE AND MATTER.

The progress of science cannot but have a profound influence on religious ideas, because science in so far as it is true is but another chapter of God's self-revelation to men, but it is only by slow degrees that new scientific ideas become assimilated and become part of our habitual convictions. For a long while though we may hold them formally they fail to affect those settled ideas which were accepted and became part of our mental equipment before the new truths were enunciated. So it is with regard to the new conclusions of science as to matter, or the ultimate substance of things.

We read in text books of the conclusions on which the scientific world is practically agreed, but we do not realise how fundamental and how revolutionary they are; and we go on holding our old beliefs side by side with conclusions which we admit but do not practically realise.

Perhaps there is no discovery of modern science which will ultimately so largely affect our beliefs as its conclusions on the ultimate constitution of matter, and they have a special interest because of their bearing on one of the central doctrines of the Christian faith—the Resurrection of the Body. It had long been suspected that matter was composed of minute atoms, and modern science alone has shown us how very minute the atoms are; but we now learn that the atoms themselves are composite bodies, being built up of electrons which are relatively so small that if an atom were magnified to the size of Thursday Island the electron would not be bigger than a man running round it. But if we want to be more exact we must substitute for the man a small whirlwind, for the point of the whole matter is that the electron is not a substance at all, but a centre of electric force moving in a circle with such intense velocity as to give to the atom the appearance and properties of reality.

If, then, we ask: of what are things made? "What is the ultimate reality behind all phenomena?" the answer is "Force." What we call matter is in the last resort nothing but a form of force. Yet it is obvious that mere force could never turn earth, air, and water into the roots, stem, leaves, flower, and fruit of a plant, or develop an egg into a chicken. Everywhere we find that force is directed and informed by intelligence, and the whole of science is based on the conviction that nothing comes by chance, but that every effect is produced in accordance with a universal and all-pervading intelligent law.

It is obvious that this new scientific conception of matter, if it be true (and we are so often asked to accept off-hand the results of scientific inquiry which are supposed to be antagonistic that we may be pardoned if we claim the same right to accept what is favourable to Christian belief), vastly simplifies many difficulties, and especially our ideas of the resurrection of the body. The body is not simply a living substance which ceases to be when the breath is withdrawn from it. The body is a collection of forces which at death do not cease but are directed into other channels, where they exercise equal and sometimes even greater energy and motion. So when in the early ages of the world the luxuriant growth of the tropical swamp died and was buried, it seemed to come to an end; but the coal into which it was transformed was a thing laden with even greater force than the plant, and was capable of yet more wonderful transformations in the future. We must remember, however, that we are not merely composed of physical forces. Spiritual forces such as the will and conscience are as real and practical as material forces, just as the immaterial flash of lightning, or the concussion of an explosion which knocks you down, is as real and practical as a bar of iron lying on the ground. When the material body was regarded as something absolutely different in kind to the immaterial part of man it was certainly difficult to conceive of a spiritual body, or to understand how the soul could survive the loss of the body with which it was so closely entwined; but when we understand that it is simply a case of one force replacing another force, then we can picture to ourselves how it is that spiritual forces may replace material forces in the building up of a spiritual body.

Death is not so much the destruction of the forces which constitute the body as the introduction of a new relation and a subordination of the material to the spiritual.

The new science destroys the idea of a material world which was the only reality, and show us that the spiritual is not a phantom evolved from matter, but that it is the spiritual that gives life and reality to the material.

FAMILY LIFE.

All national greatness and all national security is ultimately based upon family life. As even the worldly Horace saw long ago, it was the break-up of family life that sealed the doom of the great Roman Empire, and there is danger of a similar break-up to-day to be followed as surely by a similar fate unless the warning is heeded in time.

When family life decays not only are there not enough men to defend and extend the life of the community, but children deprived of the natural education of family life grow up selfish and neglectful of duty, unwilling to accept for themselves family ties and responsibilities, and the race degenerates and dies.

Two great causes tend to disintegrate family life in the present day. The first of these is the insatiable love of pleasure which is such a prominent characteristic of the present day. Time was when men were content to regard pleasure as an occasional sweetener of toil, whereas to-day toil is regarded as an unpleasant necessity which must be undergone in order to attain the one object of life—pleasure. Nations have risen and prospered while men lived and worked for their country, for their homes, for duty, for their faith; but no nation ever prospered, or can prosper, where men live for pleasure.

No doubt this love of pleasure is largely responsible both among men and women for the modern unwillingness to be burdened with the responsibilities of a family, and the successful efforts to escape from these responsibilities by every perversion and debasement of married life. But there is another and perhaps not less potent cause. There have been times when the love of pleasure was perhaps as great as it is to-day, but when its consequences were less disastrous, because the majority of women had not rejected, as so many do to-day, the ideal of a home life as a woman's greatest ideal and fullest joy.

To-day we are face to face with a widespread revolt of woman against the conditions of nature, a claim not only to be on an equality with man but to be able to prove that women can form a separate social unit, independent of man, leaving men free to pursue their own ends while they themselves are free from all domestic and family responsibilities. It is this spirit which in England has manifested itself in the extravagant violence of the suffragettes. The withholding of the vote is rather the occasion than the reason of their action, and there is no reason to suppose that the granting of it, which is desired by many who have no sympathy with violence, would put an end to their policy, which is the product of a much wider ambition.

The Christian Church has always been the champion of women's rights, and can never oppose the claims of women to equal justice and equal treatment with men; but the modern woman's claim is something very different to this, and is destructive of all family life and all social peace in that it is based on a theory of the relative injustice and wickedness of man as compared with woman, which is neither charitable nor just. The truth is that the life of men and women is inextricably bound up together, and the modern feminist doctrine of setting men against women is as radically false as the Socialist's policy of setting class against class. Nature will not be permanently outraged, and the present policy will in the end react most disastrously on the women themselves, for were it carried out to its logical conclusion and women pitted physically and mentally in a bitter contest with men there is little doubt as to the result. Women must not expect chivalry and respect to survive their repudiation of every need of sympathy and help.

The only hope lies in the recognition of the Christian teaching that "the man is not without the woman, nor the woman without the man." Man is not greater than woman nor woman than man, but they are each greater in different ways, and neither complete without the other. I am far from saying that women have had justice from men in the past, or that they have no right to claim fuller justice in the present, but the claim must be based on the rights of nature, not by going against nature, and by appeal to what is best in man rather than by violence and outrage.

MILITARY TRAINING.

I heartily welcome the enforcement by legislation of universal military training throughout Australia.

It is quite true that war is a very horrible thing, and that aggressive war is absolutely contrary to the Spirit of Christianity. It is quite true that Our Lord bade us turn the other cheek to the smiter—i.e., He forbade personal retaliation for personal injuries, but I nowhere find that He said, "If a man smite your wife or child on the cheek, give him facilities to smite their other cheek also." Non-resistance takes on quite another aspect when those whom we are bound to protect are concerned. To be forgiving to the uttermost of personal injury, to shame the enemy by gentleness, may be the highest wisdom as well as the truest Christianity, but to stand by and look on while the weak and innocent are wronged is neither wise nor Christian.

No voice would be sooner raised than mine against any war of aggression or oppression. I should regard with horror a war waged by Australia to acquire more territory or to satisfy the pride of racial jealousy; but if we were threatened by an unjust and unprovoked invasion, or were called upon to champion the cause of the weak and oppressed, I should as unhesitatingly say that we were cowards and unworthy of the Christian name if we failed to respond to the call of duty. If we are to so respond we must be able to respond effectively and intelligently, and that we can only do if we are trained, for an untrained mob is worse than useless for purposes of war. I have no patience with those who complain of the expense and inconvenience of defensive preparation, as though it were un-Christian. Is it not Christian to be prepared to defend what you believe to be the right, to be ready to champion the wronged and the oppressed, to face weariness and danger and death at the call of duty? Is there anything particularly Christian in disliking inconvenience and self-sacrifice, in trusting in good luck to escape your enemies, in trusting to money to buy yourselves out of danger? I cannot believe it.

Incidentally, I believe that the compulsory training is being of enormous service to our boys and youths. It is teaching them discipline and instilling into their minds a quite new idea of duty and of their responsibility for the good of the whole State. Many a wild and dangerous larrikin has been converted into a smart and enthusiastic non-commissioned officer, and I am told that in Sydney the notorious pushes have in many places disappeared since the advent of universal training. Many members of the universities have volunteered as cadet officers with the most satisfactory results. I can imagine no better work that a young educated man can do for the State than to devote his spare time to thus teaching lads the elements of discipline and devotion to duty. Personally I feel sure that the three years during which I served as a volunteer in the Old Country were of enormous value to me in many ways, and I am proud to still retain my connection with the military forces as an honorary chaplain.

BOARD OF MISSIONS.

At the commencement of this year some alarm was expressed lest the contributions to the Board of Missions should fall seriously short of last year, and in consequence of this I thought it right to offer to preach and speak for the Board of Missions during May in Sydney. Happily the fears of serious shortage were not realised, though the amount raised did not quite equal last year.

On the other hand, the report of A.B.M. presented to the annual meeting held on May 20th is full of hope and encouragement. The missionary interest is steadily growing, and a large number of dioceses have assessed themselves for missionary purposes. To us in this diocese it is a matter of special rejoicing that the new secretary of A.B.M. is Rev. J. Jones, for five years Vicar of the Cathedral at Thursday Island. Mr. Jones left for two years change of work and experience in England, with the expressed intention of returning to work in Australia, and his appointment as General Secretary has given him the opportunity of displaying his great gift of organisation and his unbounded missionary enthusiasm. Whenever he is able to pay a visit to the North he will be welcomed with delight by the whole diocese.

While we are devoutly thankful to Almighty God for the progress made by missionary zeal in Australia, we must be quite sure that we are building on safe and enduring foundations.

There are two points on which I feel that a change is necessary.

First, with regard to the constitution of the A.B.M. itself, it is surely an anomaly that the Board should be purely ex officio, and that the clergy and laity should be entirely unrepresented on it. There are other weak points in the constitution, but as I have been asked to read a paper on the subject at the Brisbane Church Congress, I will not enter into the matter here.

The other point is perhaps even more serious. We have hitherto entirely relied on chance for our missionary workers. Although we have on the whole been extremely fortunate, far more so than we deserved to be, the system cannot possibly last. We must have an Australian Missionary Training College to prepare our workers for their task, and to eliminate those who have no real missionary vocation before they actually proceed to the mission field. No matter in connection with missionary work is more urgently pressing than this, and I commend it to the earnest consideration of the Church.

MISSIONS TO THE EAST.

A recent visit to the East has impressed upon me very strongly the marvellous opportunity now awaiting Christian missions in China and Japan. In China the rapid increase of means of communication, the crowded population of the great towns, the neglect of the temples, the absence of anti-foreign feeling, the desire for Western knowledge, the wonderful request of the Government for the prayers of Christians, all combine to create a unique opportunity and a solemn call to missionary service which presents perhaps the greatest scope ever offered to man in helping to shape and guide the future of what is destined to be the largest and greatest nation upon earth. Nor is the door of opportunity yet closed in Japan. The opportunity is somewhat more advanced and may sooner be closed, but it is still there. Japan has not yet made up its mind, and we have the opportunity of helping it to higher ideals of life and work through the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I am deeply thankful that A.B.M. has resolved to undertake work in Japan, and I do not believe that our distinctively Australian missions will suffer from the extension of our sympathies to our brethren in the East.

NEGLECT OF RELIGION.

While we have to thank God for the extension of Christ's Kingdom abroad, we cannot shut our eyes to a very distinct falling-off in the number, though not, I think, in the quality, of professing and practising Christians at home.

Of late years the numbers of persons attending church have everywhere diminished, and large numbers everywhere do not even profess to be influenced by Christian motives or to acknowledge any obligations towards the Christian religion.

All this is very distressing, but we must not allow ourselves to be unduly depressed.

In the first place, we must remember that in every age the number of merely nominal Christians has been relatively very large, and that many of those who now neglect the observance of religion have only dropped what was merely a convention and a sham.

There is no sign that the number of those who are really in earnest in their religious life has diminished; on the contrary, it has probably considerably increased. Probably religious interest was never deeper or more widespread than at the present day, but the worldly have become more openly worldly, now that the fear of public opinion and the force of religious custom have been largely withdrawn.

Secondly, there has been no doubt a large amount of genuine religious unsettlement and bewilderment. Times of transition are always upsetting, and have been often accompanied by wild extravagances.

Our ideas of the Bible have undergone a complete revolution in the last fifty years, and though it is quite true that the Sacred Volume has emerged more living and more precious than ever, we cannot but wonder if the man in the street has thought that the Bible was being discredited by a criticism which was really only removing the false accretions and assumptions which had grown up round it.

A generation ago Science was for the most part aggressive and anti-religious, and though at the present day its tone is very different, we cannot wonder if many honest souls have come to think that Christianity is incompatible with scientific truth.

The teaching of Christ Himself has been analysed and criticised with a thorough-going completeness very different to the reverence of previous generations, and although we may thankfully believe that most of this criticism is based upon the genuine desire to get nearer to the true mind of Christ and find out what He Himself said and thought, and that it has done much to obtain its object, yet we cannot wonder if many people have thought that the very foundations of the Christian faith were being undermined by its own professed advocates. All this has been well set forth by Rev. N. S. Talbot in his essay in "Foundations," a book well worth your study.

I would ask you not to despair because congregations are small at the present time. You must not hastily conclude that all those who absent themselves from church are alienated from the Christian faith.

It is I admit a dangerous condition especially with reference to the future, but personally I do not believe that it will last. There are not a few indications of returning stability and I believe the time will again come when the trouble will be not that so few profess religion, but that while so many profess so few worthily practice it. In the meantime we must be patient and hopeful; for it is just when things look dark that Christian faith and hopefulness are most needed and are most effective in winning converts to the faith.

THE NEXUS.

It is not necessary for me to do more than briefly refer to the subject of the Legal Nexus with the Church of England. As you know I feel strongly that the present legal tie is hampering and dangerous, and I should be most thankful to get rid of it. At the same time I have no wish to sever any spiritual tie which binds us to the Mother Church nor do I desire that any one diocese or province should take action by itself to sever the legal tie, much as I dislike it. But when some of our friends in other dioceses tell us that we ought to do nothing and make no agitation because they love their fetters I must protest that because they like to be bound we need not have no wish to be free, and say that we shall continue to use every lawful means to free both ourselves and them. When they are free they will probably be grateful, and in the meantime we must be satisfied with the consciousness that we are trying to do what we believe to be right.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion let me say this. We have looked to our little life in this numerically small and unimportant diocese and we have looked out on the greater life of the world and the Church, but for one and the other there is but one inspiration and one hope. Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and for ever. It is in Him and Him alone that we can find the solution of the problems which confront and bewilder us, and the way in which we can best help both ourselves and the world is by quietly striving to make our Christian creed a reality in our own lives. So shall we best live and best teach the world.

Presidential Address

BY THE BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA AT THE DIOCESAN CONFERENCE, COOKTOWN, AUGUST 20.

My Lord Bishop, my brethren of the clergy and laity—I bid you heartily welcome in the name of the Holy Trinity to this sixth Conference of the Diocese of Carpentaria held for the first time at Cooktown.

The Conference should have been held last year, but was postponed because of the difficulty we always experience in this diocese in getting our clergy together, owing to the great distances and the uncertainty of boats. The postponement, however, has given us the great pleasure of the presence and assistance of the new Bishop of North Queensland, who has most kindly agreed to my request to be present and to conduct a Devotional day for the clergy.

In the name of us all, I wish you, my Lord Bishop, a most hearty welcome to the Diocese of Carpentaria and to this Conference, and I thank you sincerely for coming.

CLERGY.

Next, my brethren of the clergy, I bid you welcome. I know that those of you who have come have done so at great personal inconvenience and difficulty, because you wish to share in the corporate life of the diocese. I deeply regret that so many of you are necessarily absent from our gathering. Among those who have begged to be excused owing to the very great loss of time which would have been incurred are Rev. W. Wilkinson, who is absent on one of his immense journeys, this time to the southern parts of the N. Territory; Rev. P. T. Lane, who in the absence of the Superintendent cannot leave the Mitchell River Mission, Rev. H. R. Longmore, B.A., who has just come to Croydon; and Revs. W. A. Fletcher, J. Tweedie, B.A., H. Birch, and H. E. D. Warren, all of the Northern Territory.

I welcome you, too, my brethren of the laity, those of you who have been able to be present. Unfortunately distance prevents most of our laity from coming to Cooktown.

Among the subjects for discussion are the Boundaries of the Diocese, The advisability of forming a Synod; Missionary Organisation; Ecclesiastical Fire Insurance; Sunday Schools; Religious Instruction; Incomes of Clergy and Diocesan Accounts. The whole of Friday and also Saturday morning will be devoted to a Devotional Day conducted by the Bishop of North Queensland.

NEW BISHOPS.

Since our last Conference three new bishops have been elected to Australian sees: Bishop Sharp to the arduous work of the Missionary Diocese of New Guinea; Bishop Long to Bathurst; and Bishop Feetham to North Queensland. We rejoice that Bishop Sharp has recovered from his painful and dangerous illness, and we look forward to great things being done for the Church by the new bishops of the two Continental sees.

THE DIOCESE.

Two years ago I invited the Archbishop of Brisbane, without prejudice to any question of precedent or inherent metropolitan powers, to hold an informal visitation of the diocese as Archbishop, and to send visitation questions to the clergy through the Bishop. The Archbishop kindly undertook the task, and his report, which was published at the time in the "Carpentarian," is extremely interesting.

He terms the work of the diocese a gallant attempt to cope with very great and almost paralysing difficulties, owing to the steady depopulation with its consequences of financial strain and isolation of the clergy.

The Archbishop speaks of the energy and self-devotion of the clergy in terms of praise which I believe to be fully justified by the facts. "They are", as he says, "doing a noble work in the face of quite exceptional difficulties—a work which ought to stir the energies and command the sympathy of the whole Church."

PAN-ANGLICAN GRANT.

It was in very large degree by the help and sympathy of the Archbishop that this diocese had the good fortune to receive since last Conference a sum of £2,500 from the Pan-Anglican Fund for the increase of the Bishoprick Endowment, and a sum of £500 towards the formation of a Clergy Sustentation Fund. By this means the income of the See has been raised to £394 16s., leaving only £25 4s. to be contributed by the diocese.

DIOCESAN FINANCE.

During the last three years our Diocesan receipts have been as follows:—

1910	...	£1617	8	10
1911	...	1749	0	8
1912	...	1602	3	7

and our expenditure—

1910	...	£1660	14	7
1911	...	1791	10	3
1912	...	1518	15	8

Our receipts were made up as follows:—

	ENGLISH GRANTS	ENGLISH SUBS.	AUSTRALIAN SUBS., ETC.
1910	299 16 0	290 0 0	1029 12 10
1911	242 7 4	694 7 4	1055 13 4
1912	395 0 6	400 0 0	807 3 1

I desire to express my most grateful thanks on behalf of the diocese to those generous donors in England and Australia, and to the S.P.G., the C.C.C. Society, and the Carpenterian Association, who have made the work of the diocese possible, and lifted an immense load of financial anxiety from my shoulders.

Our expenditure has been as follows:—

	GRANTS TO PARISHES	MISSIONS	VARIOUS
1910	284 14 4	856 19 3	519 1 0
1911	531 18 4	782 11 6	476 15 5
1912	368 10 0	585 11 6	936 4 2

The details will be found in the audited accounts for 1910, 1911, and 1912, which are laid upon the table and have been published year by year in the "Carpentarian."

I have to express special thanks to Mr. R. Christison who, in accordance with the promise I announced last Conference, gave £600 in 1910 for the assistance of white mission work in the diocese. We have been enabled to give greater assistance in consequence to the parishes during the last two years, and £900 of this fund is still in hand.

PAROCHIAL WORK.

Parochial work goes on steadily in spite of the difficulties created by an ever-dwindling population in almost all parishes of the diocese. This diminution will be seen from the statistics, which I subjoin, for the last year, 1912, compared with the average of the three previous years.

	1912.	AVERAGE OF THREE PREVIOUS YEARS
Baptisms	130	172
Marriages	52	36
Confirmees	22	62
Burials	27	59
Communicants	447	443
S.S. Teachers	43	45
S.S. Scholars	515	574

It will be seen that in almost every instance the numbers are below the average of the previous year, the only exceptions being the number of marriages which is much above the average, and the number of communicants which has slightly increased. Turning to finance, the sum raised last year in the parishes was £2303, as compared with an average for the previous three years of £1904, so that in spite of bad times the parishes have been doing their best. In this connection attention must be called to the splendid effort made at Croydon, which resulted in the complete paying-off of the long-standing debt of over £400 on the Church and Rectory. We congratulate the late Rector, to whose faith and energy the result was mainly due.

At the present time the total indebtedness of the whole diocese only amounts to £46, which is offset by parochial credit balances £41, exclusive of Sunday School and Building Fund balances. Thus we may say that neither diocese nor parishes have any debts at all. I trust it may long be so.

CLERGY.

This result has been, however, only attained by the personal sacrifices of the clergy. I feel quite ashamed of my own income, although it is none too large, when I think of the utterly inadequate incomes on which the clergy of this diocese are doing their devoted work. There are only two parishes in the diocese which pay £200, or over, while the average below which the incomes of some of the clergy fall considerably is only £170, even when supplemented by diocesan grants. I feel that considering the cost of living in the north no priest should receive less than £200. I am not blaming the laity, who are doing their utmost. Our Church population does not exceed 3000, and is raising £2000 a year for Church purposes. This is a high percentage for a poor population, but the difficulty remains that the clergy are not adequately or nearly adequately paid for their work. They have never complained to me, but I know that the stress is often very great.

CHANGES.

During the last three years there have been changes. We have lost temporarily Rev. H. H. Ayscough who, after a year at Moore College, has gone to England to take his B.A. degree at Durham; and Rev. W. E. Godson, who has also gone to England on leave and who hopes to do some work for the diocese there. Both these gentlemen hope to return to the North, and both will be more than welcome. Rev. J. Prankerd has also returned to England, and Rev. J. H. Brown has left for the South. On the other hand, our diocesan staff has been increased by Rev. L. Ayscough, whom we welcome as our host in Cooktown; Rev. W. A. Fletcher, Rector of Darwin; Rev. J. Tweedie, B.A., who has opened up new work at Pine Creek; and Rev. H. R. Longmore, B.A., who has succeeded Rev. L. Ayscough at Croydon; and Rev. H. E. D. Warren, missionary at the Roper River.

During the past three years I have visited Cooktown, and St. Paul's, Moa Island, five times; Normanton and Croydon four times; Georgetown, Mossman, and the Mitchell River three times; Darwin and the Northern Territory twice; and Burketown, Coen, and the Roper River once.

DIOCESAN COUNCIL.

The changes in our Diocesan Council reflect our changing conditions of life. We have lost by death Mr. H. Milman, a true and faithful friend of the Church, whose welfare lay very close to his heart; by removal Mr. A. S. L. Wells, also an old and tried friend of the Church; and Mr. P. Eggers, and Mr. H. Allen; while we have the assistance of two valued new members, Mr. W. Lee Bryce and Mr. K. O. Mackenzie. The Council has held regular meetings and given me the greatest assistance in the conduct of diocesan business.

CHURCH BUILDING.

The Cathedral has been greatly improved by the erection of the Douglas Memorial Chapel at a cost, including furniture, of over £250. An effort is being made by the members of the Mothers' Union to complete the other aisle, when the building will be complete so far as it goes. A beautiful window given by the Torres Straits Islanders recalls to us with exact faithfulness the much-loved features of our old friend, Hon. John Douglas.

House and land have been bought for a Rectory at Darwin, and a new Church erected at Pine Creek. At Port Douglas the Church and Rectory destroyed by the cyclone have been re-erected and a beginning has been made for a stone Church at Mossman. Unfortunately the cost of foundations, necessarily very massive owing to the liability to flood, has been so great that we have so far been unable to proceed with the Church itself.

MISSIONS.

During the last three years the diocese has expended an average of £750 a year on missionary work including St. Paul's Mission, Moa, the Mitchell River Mission, and work among the South Sea Islanders. The Mission to Moa is entirely a diocesan mission, and the work so splendidly begun by Deaconess Buchanan has been carried on faithfully by Mr. B. S. Cole. We have this year allowed the men the use of the Banzai for fishing on condition that they run the mail thus effecting a considerable saving to the diocese and also helping the islanders very materially. The new Church is in the process of erection and will I hope be opened before long.

The Mitchell River Mission has made steady and remarkable progress during the last three years. One of the great needs of the Mission is a substantial increase in our small herd of cattle, and Mr. Hopkins who kindly volunteered to stay at the mission during the four months of Mr. Matthews' furlough has promised to report fully on the matter with regard to which he has expert knowledge. We deeply regret that Mrs. Matthews is suffering greatly from a serious affection of the eye and wish her a speedy recovery from the trouble brought on we fear by her over exertions at the Mission. It is impossible to over estimate the benefit the Mission has received from the presence of a chaplain, and Rev. F. T. Lane has shown a rare devotion to duty in that office. The Mission has recently received an energetic recruit in the person of Mr. A. West.

The Roper River Mission has been strengthened by the arrival of Rev. H. E. D. Warren, and Mr. W. G. Vizard. A pumping plant has been erected which will we hope irrigate the whole of the immediate neighbourhood of the Mission Station.

DIOCESAN BOUNDARIES.

At the last session of the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland the Bishop suggested that a rearrangement of boundaries should take place by which Cairns and the railway to Forsyth should be included in this diocese. The Diocesan Council approved of this suggestion but could not see their way to agreeing to the proposed exclusion of Mareeba from this arrangement. Much conference has taken place on the subject, and I met the representatives of North Queensland at Townsville on June 7th. As no agreement could be arrived at, the committee appointed by the diocese of North Queensland to report on the matter unanimously agreed to advise their Synod to refer the matter to the Archbishop of Brisbane for arbitration, a suggestion with which I and subsequently the Diocesan Council gladly agreed. The Synod of the diocese of North Queensland met in July and decided not to refer the matter to the Archbishop. I prefer at present not to comment on this action. I desire however to express my thanks to the Bishop of North Queensland for the fair and friendly attitude that he has personally taken in this matter.

On the late vacancy of the See of North Queensland I repeated my protest against the use by that diocese of the title "North Queensland" as misleading and incorrect, inasmuch as the diocese does not include the North of Queensland which is part of this diocese. The Queensland Bishops, excluding the two concerned, considered the question and passed the following resolution:—"We are of the opinion that there is no authority capable of effecting a change in the name of the diocese of North Queensland except the diocese of North Queensland itself."

"We recognise that there would be technical difficulties in the way of any change of name involving considerable trouble to the diocese of North Queensland. We are however of the opinion that the present name is highly unsatisfactory, and that if the Diocesan authorities could see their way to an alteration they would be acting in the best interests of the Church."

In connection with this subject we think it may be well to suggest that in view of the growth of population and development of the railway system of the State it might be desirable for representatives of the two dioceses to confer about the desirableness or otherwise of some alteration in the boundaries as at present defined."

This matter was also discussed at the meeting on June 7th to which I have referred and the committee resolved to make a similar recommendation to that on the subject of boundaries.

This recommendation was also thrown out by the North Queensland Synod. As the Bishops point out might is entirely on their side, so that it seems useless now to discuss the question. I think we ought to acknowledge gratefully the stand which the Archdeacon of North Queensland took in the matter.

DEACONESS BUCHANAN.

There is one matter to which I must refer before turning to other subjects. Deaconess Buchanan has regretfully come to the conclusion that her health will not allow her to work longer in the North where constant walking is practically a necessity and proper attendance unobtainable.

I do not like to contemplate the greatness of the loss to this diocese. Deaconess Buchanan had been already working in Thursday Island for some years when the diocese was formed, and although not actually in it at that time she at once returned at my request.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the greatness of the work she has accomplished during her years of labour in the North. By her deep piety, her quick humour, her unflinching sympathy, her wise teaching, her boundless charity, she has won and touched hearts that others could not reach. The roughest sailors love and respect her, the Mission at Moa owes its spiritual life to her fostering care. With an absolute devotion, with unflinching patience, without any earthly reward or compensation she has devoted life and means to the service of her fellow men, while at the same time herself in such constant pain and suffering that almost any other person would have been resigned to become an invalid waited upon instead of waiting upon others. Her life and work have been a constant inspiration to us all, and wherever she is or may be working Deaconess Buchanan will be followed by the prayers and blessings of the diocese with which her name has to its honour been so closely associated.

Before concluding I wish now to turn to some subjects of wider and more general interest to the Church at large.

SCIENCE AND MATTER.

The progress of science cannot but have a profound influence on religious ideas, because science in so far as it is true is but another chapter of God's self-revelation to men, but it is only by slow degrees that new scientific ideas become assimilated and become part of our habitual convictions. For a long while though we may hold them formally they fail to affect those settled ideas which were accepted and became part of our mental equipment before the new truths were enunciated. So it is with regard to the new conclusions of science as to matter, or the ultimate substance of things.

We read in text books of the conclusions on which the scientific world is practically agreed, but we do not realise how fundamental and how revolutionary they are; and we go on holding our old beliefs side by side with conclusions which we admit but do not practically realise.

Perhaps there is no discovery of modern science which will ultimately so largely affect our beliefs as its conclusions on the ultimate constitution of matter, and they have a special interest because of their bearing on one of the central doctrines of the Christian faith—the Resurrection of the Body. It had long been suspected that matter was composed of minute atoms, and modern science alone has shown us how very minute the atoms are; but we now learn that the atoms themselves are composite bodies, being built up of electrons which are relatively so small that if an atom were magnified to the size of Thursday Island the electron would not be bigger than a man running round it. But if we want to be more exact we must substitute for the man a small whirlwind, for the point of the whole matter is that the electron is not a substance at all, but a centre of electric force moving in a circle with such intense velocity as to give to the atom the appearance and properties of reality.

If, then, we ask: of what are things made? "What is the ultimate reality behind all phenomena?" the answer is "Force." What we call matter is in the last resort nothing but a form of force. Yet it is obvious that mere force could never turn earth, air, and water into the roots, stem, leaves, flower, and fruit of a plant, or develop an egg into a chicken. Everywhere we find that force is directed and informed by intelligence, and the whole of science is based on the conviction that nothing comes by chance, but that every effect is produced in accordance with a universal and all-pervading intelligent law.

It is obvious that this new scientific conception of matter, if it be true (and we are so often asked to accept off-hand the results of scientific inquiry which are supposed to be antagonistic that we may be pardoned if we claim the same right to accept what is favourable to Christian belief), vastly simplifies many difficulties, and especially our ideas of the resurrection of the body. The body is not simply a living substance which ceases to be when the breath is withdrawn from it. The body is a collection of forces which at death do not cease but are directed into other channels, where they exercise equal and sometimes even greater energy and motion. So when in the early ages of the world the luxurious growth of the tropical swamp died and was buried, it seemed to come to an end; but the coal into which it was transformed was a thing laden with even greater force than the plant, and was capable of yet more wonderful transformations in the future. We must remember, however, that we are not merely composed of physical forces. Spiritual forces such as the will and conscience are as real and practical as material forces, just as the immaterial flash of lightning, or the concussion of an explosion which knocks you down, is as real and practical as a bar of iron lying on the ground. When the material body was regarded as something absolutely different in kind to the immaterial part of man it was certainly difficult to conceive of a spiritual body, or to understand how the soul could survive the loss of the body with which it was so closely entwined; but when we understand that it is simply a case of one force replacing another force, then we can picture to ourselves how it is that spiritual forces may replace material forces in the building up of a spiritual body. Death is not so much the destruction of the forces which constitute the body as the introduction of a new relation and a subordination of the material to the spiritual.

The new science destroys the idea of a material world which was the only reality, and show us that the spiritual is not a phantom evolved from matter, but that it is the spiritual that gives life and reality to the material.

FAMILY LIFE.

All national greatness and all national security is ultimately based upon family life. As even the worldly Horace saw long ago, it was the break-up of family life that sealed the doom of the great Roman Empire, and there is danger of a similar break-up to-day to be followed as surely by a similar fate unless the warning is heeded in time.

When family life decays not only are there not enough men to defend and extend the life of the community, but children deprived of the natural education of family life grow up selfish and neglectful of duty, unwilling to accept for themselves family ties and responsibilities, and the race degenerates and dies.

Two great causes tend to disintegrate family life in the present day. The first of these is the insatiable love of pleasure which is such a prominent characteristic of the present day. Time was when men were content to regard pleasure as an occasional sweetener of toil, whereas to-day toil is regarded as an unpleasant necessity which must be undergone in order to attain the one object of life—pleasure. Nations have risen and prospered while men lived and worked for their country, for their homes, for duty, for their faith; but no nation ever prospered, or can prosper, where men live for pleasure.

No doubt this love of pleasure is largely responsible both among men and women for the modern unwillingness to be burdened with the responsibilities of a family, and the successful efforts to escape from these responsibilities by every perversion and debasement of married life. But there is another and perhaps not less potent cause. There have been times when the love of pleasure was perhaps as great as it is to-day, but when its consequences were less disastrous, because the majority of women had not rejected, as so many do to-day, the ideal of a home life as a woman's greatest ideal and fullest joy.

To-day we are face to face with a widespread revolt of woman against the conditions of nature, a claim not only to be on an equality with man but to be able to prove that women can form a separate social unit, independent of man, leaving men free to pursue their own ends while they themselves are free from all domestic and family responsibilities. It is this spirit which in England has manifested itself in the extravagant violence of the suffragettes. The withholding of the vote is rather the occasion than the reason of their action, and there is no reason to suppose that the granting of it, which is desired by many who have no sympathy with violence, would put an end to their policy, which is the product of a much wider ambition.

The Christian Church has always been the champion of women's rights, and can never oppose the claims of women to equal justice and equal treatment with men; but the modern woman's claim is something very different to this, and is destructive of all family life and all social peace in that it is based on a theory of the relative injustice and wickedness of man as compared with woman, which is neither charitable nor just. The truth is that the life of men and women is inextricably bound up together, and the modern feminist doctrine of setting men against women is as radically false as the Socialist's policy of setting class against class. Nature will not be permanently outraged, and the present policy will in the end react most disastrously on the women themselves, for were it carried out to its logical conclusion and women pitted physically and mentally in a bitter contest with men there is little doubt as to the result. Women must not expect chivalry and respect to survive their repudiation of every need of sympathy and help.

The only hope lies in the recognition of the Christian teaching that "the man is not without the woman, nor the woman without the man." Man is not greater than woman nor woman than man, but they are each greater in different ways, and neither complete without the other. I am far from saying that women have had justice from men in the past, or that they have no right to claim fuller justice in the present, but the claim must be based on the rights of nature, not by going against nature, and by appeal to what is best in man rather than by violence and outrage.

MILITARY TRAINING.

I heartily welcome the enforcement by legislation of universal military training throughout Australia.

It is quite true that war is a very horrible thing, and that aggressive war is absolutely contrary to the Spirit of Christianity. It is quite true that Our Lord bade us turn the other cheek to the smiter—i.e., He forbade personal retaliation for personal injuries, but I nowhere find that He said, "If a man smite your wife or child on the cheek, give him facilities to smite their other cheek also." Non-resistance takes on quite another aspect when those whom we are bound to protect are concerned. To be forgiving to the uttermost of personal injury, to shame the enemy by gentleness, may be the highest wisdom as well as the truest Christianity, but to stand by and look on while the weak and innocent are wronged is neither wise nor Christian.

No voice would be sooner raised than mine against any war of aggression or oppression. I should regard with horror a war waged by Australia to acquire more territory or to satisfy the pride of racial jealousy; but if we were threatened by an unjust and unprovoked invasion, or were called upon to champion the cause of the weak and oppressed, I should as unhesitatingly say that we were cowards and unworthy of the Christian name if we failed to respond to the call of duty. If we are to so respond we must be able to respond effectively and intelligently, and that we can only do if we are trained, for an untrained mob is worse than useless for purposes of war. I have no patience with those who complain of the expense and inconvenience of defensive preparation, as though it were un-Christian. Is it not Christian to be prepared to defend what you believe to be the right, to be ready to champion the wronged and the oppressed, to face weariness and danger and death at the call of duty? Is there anything particularly Christian in disliking inconvenience and self-sacrifice, in trusting in good luck to escape your enemies, in trusting to money to buy yourselves out of danger? I cannot believe it.

Incidentally, I believe that the compulsory training is being of enormous service to our boys and youths. It is teaching them discipline and instilling into their minds a quite new idea of duty and of their responsibility for the good of the whole State. Many a wild and dangerous larrikin has been converted into a smart and enthusiastic non-commissioned officer, and I am told that in Sydney the notorious pushes have in many places disappeared since the advent of universal training. Many members of the universities have volunteered as cadet officers with the most satisfactory results. I can imagine no better work that a young educated man can do for the State than to devote his spare time to thus teaching lads the elements of discipline and devotion to duty. Personally I feel sure that the three years during which I served as a volunteer in the Old Country were of enormous value to me in many ways, and I am proud to still retain my connection with the military forces as an honorary chaplain.

BOARD OF MISSIONS.

At the commencement of this year some alarm was expressed lest the contributions to the Board of Missions should fall seriously short of last year, and in consequence of this I thought it right to offer to preach and speak for the Board of Missions during May in Sydney. Happily the fears of serious shortage were not realised, though the amount raised did not quite equal last year.

On the other hand, the report of A.B.M. presented to the annual meeting held on May 20th is full of hope and encouragement. The missionary interest is steadily growing, and a large number of dioceses have assessed themselves for missionary purposes. To us in this diocese it is a matter of special rejoicing that the new secretary of A.B.M. is Rev. J. Jones, for five years Vicar of the Cathedral at Thursday Island. Mr. Jones left for two years change of work and experience in England, with the expressed intention of returning to work in Australia, and his appointment as General Secretary has given him the opportunity of displaying his great gift of organisation and his unbounded missionary enthusiasm. Whenever he is able to pay a visit to the North he will be welcomed with delight by the whole diocese.

While we are devoutly thankful to Almighty God for the progress made by missionary zeal in Australia, we must be quite sure that we are building on safe and enduring foundations.

There are two points on which I feel that a change is necessary.

First, with regard to the constitution of the A.B.M. itself, it is surely an anomaly that the Board should be purely ex officio, and that the clergy and laity should be entirely unrepresented on it. There are other weak points in the constitution, but as I have been asked to read a paper on the subject at the Brisbane Church Congress, I will not enter into the matter here.

The other point is perhaps even more serious. We have hitherto entirely relied on chance for our missionary workers. Although we have on the whole been extremely fortunate, far more so than we deserved to be, the system cannot possibly last. We must have an Australian Missionary Training College to prepare our workers for their task, and to eliminate those who have no real missionary vocation before they actually proceed to the mission field. No matter in connection with missionary work is more urgently pressing than this, and I commend it to the earnest consideration of the Church.

MISSIONS TO THE EAST.

A recent visit to the East has impressed upon me very strongly the marvellous opportunity now awaiting Christian missions in China and Japan. In China the rapid increase of means of communication, the crowded population of the great towns, the neglect of the temples, the absence of anti-foreign feeling, the desire for Western knowledge, the wonderful request of the Government for the prayers of Christians, all combine to create a unique opportunity and a solemn call to missionary service which presents perhaps the greatest scope ever offered to man in helping to shape and guide the future of what is destined to be the largest and greatest nation upon earth. Nor is the door of opportunity yet closed in Japan. The opportunity is somewhat more advanced and may sooner be closed, but it is still there. Japan has not yet made up its mind, and we have the opportunity of helping it to higher ideals of life and work through the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I am deeply thankful that A.B.M. has resolved to undertake work in Japan, and I do not believe that our distinctively Australian missions will suffer from the extension of our sympathies to our brethren in the East.

NEGLECT OF RELIGION.

While we have to thank God for the extension of Christ's Kingdom abroad, we cannot shut our eyes to a very distinct falling-off in the number, though not, I think, in the quality, of professing and practising Christians at home.

Of late years the numbers of persons attending church have everywhere diminished, and large numbers everywhere do not even profess to be influenced by Christian motives or to acknowledge any obligations towards the Christian religion.

All this is very distressing, but we must not allow ourselves to be unduly depressed.

In the first place, we must remember that in every age the number of merely nominal Christians has been relatively very large, and that many of those who now neglect the observance of religion have only dropped what was merely a convention and a sham.

There is no sign that the number of those who are really in earnest in their religious life has diminished; on the contrary, it has probably considerably increased. Probably religious interest was never deeper or more widespread than at the present day, but the worldly have become more openly worldly, now that the fear of public opinion and the force of religious custom have been largely withdrawn.

Secondly, there has been no doubt a large amount of genuine religious unsettlement and bewilderment. Times of transition are always upsetting, and have been often accompanied by wild extravagances.

Our ideas of the Bible have undergone a complete revolution in the last fifty years, and though it is quite true that the Sacred Volume has emerged more living and more precious than ever, we cannot but wonder if the man in the street has thought that the Bible was being discredited by a criticism which was really only removing the false accretions and assumptions which had grown up round it.

A generation ago Science was for the most part aggressive and anti-religious, and though at the present day its tone is very different, we cannot wonder if many honest souls have come to think that Christianity is incompatible with scientific truth.

The teaching of Christ Himself has been analysed and criticised with a thorough-going completeness very different to the reverence of previous generations, and although we may thankfully believe that most of this criticism is based upon the genuine desire to get nearer to the true mind of Christ and find out what He Himself said and thought, and that it has done much to obtain its object, yet we cannot wonder if many people have thought that the very foundations of the Christian faith were being undermined by its own professed advocates. All this has been well set forth by Rev. N. S. Talbot in his essay in "Foundations," a book well worth your study.

I would ask you not to despair because congregations are small at the present time. You must not hastily conclude that all those who absent themselves from church are alienated from the Christian faith.

It is I admit a dangerous condition especially with reference to the future, but personally I do not believe that it will last. There are not a few indications of returning stability and I believe the time will again come when the trouble will be not that so few profess religion, but that while so many profess so few worthily practice it. In the meantime we must be patient and hopeful; for it is just when things look dark that Christian faith and hopefulness are most needed and are most effective in winning converts to the faith.

THE NEXUS.

It is not necessary for me to do more than briefly refer to the subject of the Legal Nexus with the Church of England. As you know I feel strongly that the present legal tie is hampering and dangerous, and I should be most thankful to get rid of it. At the same time I have no wish to sever any spiritual tie which binds us to the Mother Church nor do I desire that any one diocese or province should take action by itself to sever the legal tie, much as I dislike it. But when some of our friends in other dioceses tell us that we ought to do nothing and make no agitation because they love their fetters I must protest that because they like to be bound we need not have no wish to be free, and say that we shall continue to use every lawful means to free both ourselves and them. When they are free they will probably be grateful, and in the meantime we must be satisfied with the consciousness that we are trying to do what we believe to be right.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion let me say this. We have looked to our little life in this numerically small and unimportant diocese and we have looked out on the greater life of the world and the Church, but for one and the other there is but one inspiration and one hope. Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and for ever. It is in Him and Him alone that we can find the solution of the problems which confront and bewilder us, and the way in which we can best help both ourselves and the world is by quietly striving to make our Christian creed a reality in our own lives. So shall we best live and best teach the world.

Diocesan Conference.

The sixth Conference of the clergy and laity of the Diocese of Carpentaria met at Cooktown on Wednesday, August 20th. The Conference was opened by a Celebration of Holy Communion in the parish church at 11 a.m., at which the Bishop, assisted by the Bishop of North Queensland, was the celebrant. The sermon was preached by the rector of Cooktown, Rev. L. Ayscough, Th. L., and was as follows.

Romans VIII., 31—"If God be for us, who can be against us?"

We of the Diocese of Carpentaria do not number more than a handful of priests. We do not meet with a strength of eighty or a hundred for conference and intercourse. Our lot is not cast amidst surroundings of amazing prosperity, but rather amidst intense depression and diminishing populations. We have to live in places which have been, but are not now, prosperous. We hear on all sides that which tends to make us feel depressed. We feel that we want to cry out, "Can these dry bones live?" And it is because of this that we should carry into our deliberations and meditations of the next few days the conviction that if God is with us, no other power can stand against us. Although we are so few, we have to lead religious thought in the far North of Queensland and the Northern Territory. God and His Holy Church have placed upon us great responsibilities. We have to apply the principles of Christianity to the needs of this vast territory. We have to bring cheerfulness and hopefulness to bear upon lives lived under difficulty and hardship. We have to express to those amongst whom we live, the mind of the Christian Church. On the other hand, we need to show to the Church at large our interest in and sympathy with her movements in other parts. We cannot be self-centred. Anything which concerns the Church in other parts concerns us.

First and foremost, we must assure ourselves that God is with us. And so we commence by meeting together at the Lord's own service. Here we are assured at once of the real presence of Christ, and of the living union which exists between us and all saints. Here we know that our Blessed Lord Jesus Christ will feed us with Himself. Here we plead for the guidance of the Holy Spirit that He may lead us into all truth.

Having got so far, the next thing will be for us to be convinced that, because of what we stand for and because God is with us, our work must be successful. Let us be bold. Let us set out to do big things. Let fear have no place with us. We shall be watched, perhaps criticised. What of that? Let us show no hesitation in what we do. Let us launch out into the deep as St. Peter did at the bidding of His Master and ours.

In this attitude, strengthened by faith and trust in our Heavenly Father, absolutely certain of the result of our work for Him, will lie, not only the success of our deliberations, but also the spiritual strength of the parishes to which we shall return. Do we not need to be continually enlarging our knowledge of life in these large empty tropical regions? Again and again we meet men who have seen better days. They have a home. They have a wife and family dependent on them. In most places living is dear, with but little variety of food. They must stay, as it is too expensive to travel the great distances to other places, only to be faced again with the same dull prospects. The young people are growing up with no opportunities of settling in any form of trade or profession. They find themselves with an over-abundance of spare time, sharing the depression which surrounds them. The climate is such as to produce early physical development, and we find many of them naturally precocious. Surrounded by these conditions, sins of varying degrees of seriousness become easily part of the lives of young and old alike. Truly the work of a priest is at all times beset with difficulties, and more acutely so in some parts of this diocese, especially since distance prevents intercourse with a brother priest; but if God be for us, who can be against us? What power on earth can stand against the power of Almighty God? Our message is so powerful, so hopeful, so full of appeal, that men must listen to it. They cannot resist it. If God be for us, who can be against us?

We need a large-hearted sympathy with all phases of life as they are revealed to us. St. Paul tells us to suffer fools gladly. "His one's peculiarities must not bore us. That one is in want, another in trouble, another in sickness, all are in temptation. Everyone has a soul. And it is our business to love the soul and to sympathise with a whole-hearted sympathy with it in the difficulties, dependencies, and disheartenments which surround it.

Our sympathy must be personal. Real sympathy will bring the influence of God through our personality to bear on the person of another. Our soul should be in living touch with the soul of the other. Our mind should have a strengthening effect on the other's mind.

Our sympathy must be thorough. The good Samaritan not only attended to the immediate needs of the unfortunate man who fell among thieves, but he also left money with the innkeeper and promised more if necessary. Our sympathy is only thorough if it leaves behind it a permanent impression. The way to make sure of permanency is to feel convinced of the Power of God working with us.

We ourselves need above everything a sense of sin. It is so easy to be continually talking about the sins of the world; and to overlook the fact that we have a share in them. We need to recognise that we are sinners too, and that we need the forgiveness of God as much as others do. God is not with us if we do not feel the need of Him. We are looking forward at present to the time that we shall spend together. It is our opportunity. We should make the best of our time for our own spiritual improvement, for making sure, by our determined self-emptying, that we have God really with us. Then, and then only, can we separate, feeling that we have with us the only Power that can really help us, a Power which must advance, and which nothing can oppose, a powerful message which men listen to. "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

The first session of the Conference was held in the Oddfellows Hall at 8 p.m. After prayers the Rev. L. Ayscough was elected clerical and Mr G. Roberts lay secretary. The roll was then called and the following clergy responded. Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., Subdean, Rev. L. Ayscough, Rev. A. McD. Hassell. Apologies for absence were received on behalf of Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, Rev. W. A. Fletcher, Rev. J. Tweedie B.A., Rev. Birch, Rev. F. T. Lane, Rev. H. R. Longmore B.A., who were prevented by distance from attending. The following lay members were present: Mr. G. Roberts, Mr. T. Thomas, Mr. R. Roberts, Mr. Cordis, Mr. Tudor. The Bishop then read the letter just received from Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, which we publish in this issue, and then delivered his presidential address. Various reports and statements of accounts were read and laid on the table. A scheme of Ecclesiastical Fire Insurance proposed by the diocese of Rockhampton was then read and discussed and the debate adjourned. The following diocesan assessments were then made. Thursday Island and Darwin £4 4s. each. Mossman, Cooktown, Normanton, Croydon, Georgetown, Pine Creek £2 2s. each. The Conference then adjourned until the following afternoon, when it opened at 4 p.m. The Reports of the Carpentarian, Douglas Memorial Chapel Fund, Mothers Union, G.F.S. and Book Depot were considered and adopted. Hearty votes of thanks were passed to S.P.G., S.P.C.K., C.C.C., Lord Beauchamp, Miss Gascoigne, Miss Paige, Preb. Ponsomby, Canon Peck, Rev. J. Ashton and Rev. J. Jones, the Bishops Commissaries. The subject of Religious Instruction in State Schools was introduced by Mr. Ayscough and all the clergy present bore emphatic witness to the smooth and satisfactory working of the new Act, to the friendliness and courtesy of the head teachers, and to the real progress made by the children in religious knowledge and the popularity of the lessons. The subject of Universal Training and Easter Camps was considered and a resolution passed that while the Conference approved of universal military training as conducive to the national welfare to helpful discipline it expressed strong conviction that camp training ought to be fixed for some other time than Easter.

On Thursday evening a Retreat for the Clergy began conducted by the Bishop of North Queensland and was continued until 1 p.m. on Saturday. The Bishop's earnest and thoughtful addresses were most helpful and stimulating and the diocese owes him a debt of gratitude. On Saturday evening the Mayor of Cooktown welcomed the members of the Conference at a Conversazione in the Hall. The Bishop responded and there was a very large attendance. On Sunday the services were very bright and hearty. The Subdean was the preacher in the morning and the Bishop of North Queensland in the evening. Conference was resumed on Monday evening when the Diocesan accounts and the reports on Landed Property and Capital Funds were adopted.

The debate on the Ecclesiastical Fire Insurance scheme was continued and a motion proposed by Rev. E. Taffs "that it was not desirable to amend the constitution of Provincial Synod in the direction of providing for Fire Insurance, as the area of Queensland is too small" was carried.

The Subdean, Rev. E. Taffs, and Rev. L. Ayscough were elected clerical, and Messrs. W. Lee Bryce, A. Sullivan and K. O. Mackenzie lay members of the Diocesan Council.

The subject of the boundaries of the diocese was introduced by the Bishop who gave a detailed account of the negotiations with North Queensland. A resolution proposing a further appeal to the diocese of North Queensland was proposed but found no second.

Rev. A. McD. Hassell moved that in the opinion of the Conference the combined districts of Kidston, Einasliegh, Forsayth, and Georgetown ought to be worked either by the diocese of Carpentaria or North Queensland. This was carried.

The Bishop introduced the subject of the nomenclature of the diocese of North Queensland and stated what had occurred with regard to it, saying that he had withdrawn his protest on the understanding that the North Queensland Synod would give the matter full and fair consideration. As far as he could gather, however, the proposal of the committee to refer the matter to the Metropolitan's arbitration had been rejected practically without debate.

The Conference reassembled at 4 p.m. on Tuesday. A resolution was passed on the motion of Rev. A. McD. Hassell asking the Bishop to appoint the Sunday before Rogation days, as a day of parochial intercession. Resolutions were passed expressing the Conference's great appreciation of Deaconess Buchanan's services to the diocese and advocating the establishment of the C.E.M.S. in parishes.

Rev. L. Ayscough moved on behalf of the parish of Croydon a motion in favour of a Mission of Help for isolated parishes. At the evening session the following motion was moved by the Subdean and carried. "That this Conference, believing with the Bishops of the Province that if the Diocese of North Queensland could see its way to change its 'present highly unsatisfactory name' it would be acting in the best interests of the Church, regrets very much that the recent Synod of that diocese rejected with apparently little or no discussion the proposal of its own committee to refer the question to the Metropolitan for arbitration, and that this conference emphatically repeats the protest already made against the use of the title of North Queensland.

It was resolved to assess the parishes at £50 for missionary purposes in addition to the diocesan contributions to missions.

It was proposed by Rev. E. Taffs and carried. "That this Conference believes that the time is approaching when it may be practicable and desirable to form a Diocesan Synod and that the Bishop in Council be requested to draw up and submit to the next conference a draft constitution for the Diocese. That if such draft constitution should be approved by the next conference it shall nevertheless not come into force until it has been confirmed by a conference called for the purpose after an interval of not less than twelve months."

Votes of thanks were proposed to the President, the Bishop of North Queensland, the Secretary and others; and after the Te Deum had been said and the Blessing pronounced the conference came to an end, most of the visitors leaving next day by the S.S. Flinders, thus bringing to a conclusion one of the best conferences held in the diocese.

Douglas Memorial Chapel.

The looked for day of the opening of the Douglas Memorial Chapel, St. Peter's Day, June 29th, opened bright and fine and a considerable number of communicants both white and coloured gathered at 7.30 a.m. for the opening Celebration in the Chapel which looked very beautiful in the morning light. The Bishop celebrated assisted by the Subdean and used a special commemorative collect with the Epistle and Gospel for St. Peter's Day.

At 10 a.m. the Church was filled from end to end for the formal dedication of the Chapel. In addition to the members of the Torres Straits Lodge and representatives of the District Grand Lodge of North Queensland the Mayor and Aldermen, and the officers of the R.A.A., there were over 100 representatives of almost every island in the Straits. It was indeed with difficulty that they were restrained from coming in en masse, as it was difficult to find room for the chosen representatives. The Bishop wearing his cope proceeded to the sanctuary attended by Rev. H. E. Longmore, B.A., and the Subdean said the Litany with special suffrages. The sermon was preached by the Bishop who after speaking of Mr. Douglas' life and character said: "Friends and relatives have contributed to the Building Fund from far and near. The Altar has been given by the Wyber Lodge and the Cross by the Torres Straits Lodge of Thursday Island, the Prayer Desk by the District Grand Lodge of North Queensland, the Lectern by the State Public servants of Thursday Island, and the credence table, altar desk, and cases by private donors. The credence is made from the wheel case of the Quetta. On the wall hangs the last Union Jack flown from the Fort before it was superseded by the Commonwealth flag. It is a symbol of a great change. Australia has been well and loyally served in the past by men who like John Douglas were born in the old country, and educated in the public schools and universities of the motherland, but that day is inevitably passing away. Australia is becoming a nation, and she is looking and must look to her own sons to do her service. Thank God it is by no violent disruption, and with nothing but memories of friendship and common service that the change is coming. If we are setting up our own home we still look with love and gratitude to the old motherland and it is fitting that the old flag should rest in honour as a worthy memory of the old Rugby boy, descendant of a race of warriors, who gave a long life to the service of Queensland and lived and died beneath the Union Jack. The sermon concluded with an exhortation to the Torres Straits Islanders to live as their old friend had always tried to persuade them to live. After the sermon the Bishop and clergy proceeded to the Chapel during the singing of Psalm 24 the Bishop carrying his pastoral staff. The Bishop blessed the various gifts and then unveiled the beautiful window given by the Torres Straits Islanders. The window which is an extraordinarily good likeness of Mr. Douglas, represents St. John with white hair in old age at Patmos and is very beautiful. It was made by Kayll and Reed of Leeds.

The Chapel was then dedicated and the Te Deum was sung. The offertory was devoted to the Building Fund. The whole service was very beautiful and inspiring. The Mothers Union have determined to try and collect the funds to complete the other aisle thus finishing the Cathedral except for the Tower and Vestries at the West end.

The Bishop received the following telegram from Deaconess Buchanan, "My kindest thought and special remembrances at your service to-morrow. II Chronicles VI. 20."

Letter from Rev. Mr. Wilkinson.

July 26th. 1918.

My dear Bishop—
So far on the way—not getting along as quickly as expected. I am delayed here a week awaiting the return of the manager (only the Chinaman cook at home) as I have to purchase one or two horses. I had the misfortune to lose one of my most reliable pack horses last week and the team was rather short before. The horse died from snakebite. All being well will get on the road again next week and should beat Boorooloolo about the 14th. From Westmoreland I went off the track to a new copper mining field about thirty miles out from the station where the Irvinbank Mining Company have ten employees prospecting, some very promising looking country. The prospects are very encouraging, but the lode at present seems to be but a narrow seam rich in quality but too small to be in any way profitable at present. The disturbed condition of the country indicates "floaters" rather than shows a permanent lode. Should other people be successful in their search there is little doubt that the field will attract a large body of workers. Have had interesting camp with bushmen, fencers, and miners, and the new field has had its first service a limited gathering of six. Have gathered a lot of useful information by the way, the bushmen I meet with now know the Territory more or less. It is pretty well decided that my route will be from Boorooloolo to the Elsie, calling at the Roper Mission from Hodgson Downs (a distance of 40 miles) then from the Elsie to Katharine to load up supplies. From the Katharine to Victoria Downs, Victoria Depot, Wave Hill, then direct the course south, I am informed that water is plentiful on that track. I hope to get the western portion visited by January and back on to the line (O.T.L.) so as to follow it South during the rainy season months, returning from the South to Powells Creek about April then taking the country to the left. Of course all plans are subject to alteration as occasion demands or the way opens up. Will be able to indicate more positively by the way.

Am thinking this will reach you about the time of the Assembling for Conference, am praying God may direct the proceedings with His grace, wisdom and understanding and that the occasion may prove a season of refreshing. My word to the conference is contained in Joel II, 23 to 27, none need be discouraged but take heart and go forward. With prayerful good wishes, Yours obediently,

W. M. WILKINSON.

Bishop's Movements.

On October 9th, the Bishop left for Darwin by the s.s. Mataram, arriving on October 12th. On the evening of the 14th a most pleasant and largely attended gathering of churchpeople was held in the Town Hall to welcome the Bishop. Addresses of welcome were made by the Rector Rev. W. A. Fletcher, Messrs Roberts and Barnes. The Bishop in his reply referred to the fact that religion no longer occupied the central place in national thought and feeling, as it did at the greatest periods of our national history. The time might come, and come soon, when we must let it again assert its old supremacy or perish. In view of the great renaissance of the East, we could no longer depend on our superior intelligence or superior efficiency. Our sole remaining asset was character, the result of the teaching of centuries. Character, however, depended vitally on religion. The Bishop said that he thought that the present wave of religious carelessness was temporary rather than permanent in its character; and that he was himself hopeful as to the future, if only churchpeople could be brought to realise their responsibilities and do their duty.

On Saturday, October 18th, the Bishop visited the aboriginal reserve with the Chief Protector. On Sunday, October 19th, he held a confirmation at Christ Church. There was a large congregation, and five adult men and two women, two boys and one girl were confirmed. It was especially pleasing to see the large proportion of men at this service. Next day the Bishop left for Pine Creek, where he was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Tamblin at the Battery, about one and a half miles from Pine Creek. The Church property at Pine Creek has been greatly improved since Rev. J. Tweedie's arrival. A "post-cutting" bee was held and about sixty posts cut in one day. These have now been erected with cyclone wire round the Church land. A small room has been built, and also a bathroom and stable, and a useful sulky and horse acquired for the Church. Unfortunately, there has been a considerable falling off of population instead of the expected increase, and it is difficult to keep the Parish going. The Bishop preached morning and evening on Sunday, October 26th, besides giving a lecture on October 22nd. He returned to Darwin on October 28th.

On the following day the Bishop was present at the opening of the Government school for half-caste children at Darwin, the event having been postponed for a week to enable him to be present. The Bishop said that he thoroughly sympathised with the effort being made to teach the half-caste children, but he hoped that they would receive religious as well as secular training. He was glad to understand that the matter would shortly be dealt with. He then addressed the children, urging them to diligence and perseverance.

On the same day Mr and Mrs Birch arrived from the Roper River. On Saturday Mrs Gilruth invited a number of residents to meet the Bishop at lunch at Government House.

On Sunday the Bishop preached at all services, and the following morning he left by train for Batchelor Demonstration Farm, where the Government are prepared to show settlers how to farm in the North. It cannot be said that very much has been demonstrated so far, but, as with many things in the Northern Territory, "the expectation of things not seen" is an important factor.

The Bishop was hospitably entertained by the manager, who has only recently taken charge; and in the evening he held service which was well attended by the men working on the farm. Next day he returned to Darwin, and on Wednesday conducted a Devotional Day for the Parish, returning to Thursday Island by the steamer Mataram on the following Tuesday.

The Bishop expressed the great pleasure that he had had in visiting Darwin, and his appreciation of the good work which is being carried on there by the Church.

It cannot be said that things are satisfactory in the Northern Territory. In spite of the host of officials prepared to deal with a great population when it comes, in spite of the expenditure of over a quarter of a million a year by the Government, settlers do not arrive, or if they do, leave again by an early boat. The point to be proved is one that we are all united in desiring to see demonstrated, namely, that white settlers can make a living by agriculture in the Territory. It may be so, but the point is not yet answered clearly in the affirmative. In the meanwhile, the constant going and coming and general unsettlement put many difficulties in the way of the work of the Church.

We regret that the name of Rev. E. Taffs was accidentally omitted from the list of Clergy present at the Diocesan Conference at Cooktown.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held on Tuesday, November 18th, at the Bishop's house. Present;—The Bishop, the Subdean, Messrs. Lee Bryce, Mackenzie and Sullivan. Mr. Mackenzie reported that the subscriptions to the Cathedral North Aisle Building Fund amounted to £98; about £80 more was still needed.

A resolution of sympathy with Deaconess Buchanan in her illness was unanimously agreed to. It was resolved to paint the Bishop's house. The Bishop said that Rev. Walker of Badu had kindly lent the Goodwill to take visitors out to Moa for the opening of the Church. A proposal from the A.B.M. Secretary relative to the Board's taking over the Moa Island Mission was considered, but it was resolved that if the Board take over Moa it must take over the other missionary responsibilities of the diocese at the same time.

International Medical Congress.

The International Medical Congress lately held in London was attended by 1,500 of the most prominent medical men in the world. One of the most remarkable results of the congress was the practically unanimous agreement of those foremost representatives of medical science that the system of State regulation of vice, so often advocated as scientific and necessary in spite of its brutalizing and soul-destroying consequences, is utterly useless and futile, and should be abandoned. To our disgrace, this system, repudiated over thirty years ago by England, still prevails in parts of Queensland, and we have been told that efforts are being made to introduce it into the Northern Territory. Perhaps those who pay no regard to religious protests will pay some attention to the opinion of the foremost representatives of medicine.

Memorial to Mr. Milman.

A mural brass tablet in memory of the late Mr. Hugh Milman was unveiled by the Bishop in the Cathedral at evensong on Tuesday, October 7th; about forty persons were present. The Bishop, in a short address, dwelt on Mr Milman's deep affection for the Church, his wide interests, his kindness of heart, and his strong sense of public duty. The inscription is as follows,

IN MEMORY OF HUGH MILMAN.

Government Resident at Thursday Island. Who served Queensland faithfully for thirty years. He was kind of heart, true to his friends, And an earnest supporter of this Church, Which he served as Parochial councillor and Churchwarden. He died September 23rd 1911.

Draft of Determination.

The following is the corrected draft of the proposed Determination which will be submitted to the next session of the General Synod. The Bishop will be glad of any criticisms or suggestions before the final draft is sent in to the Standing Committee of General Synod who have already received notice that the Determination will be moved by the Bishop of Carpentaria.

Each Diocese shall elect through its Synod a Diocesan Corresponding Committee of the Board to assist the Board, unless a province shall by its provincial Synod substitute a Provincial Corresponding Committee through which the Diocesan Committees shall work. The members of the Provincial or Diocesan Corresponding Committees need not be members of Provincial or Diocesan Synods.

10. It shall be a part of the duty of the Board to estimate carefully the amount that each Diocese should raise for Missionary work. This estimate shall take into consideration the population, communicants, and amount raised for parochial purposes. Each Diocese shall be apportioned its just percentage of the whole sum needed for Missionary purposes, and the estimate shall take into consideration all moneys raised by Auxiliaries and Missions recognised by the Board in addition to the direct work of the Board. It is not intended that this apportionment should be legally enforceable.

11. The Board may recognise Missions or Missionary Societies as Auxiliaries to its work. Funds contributed in a Diocese to such Missions shall pass through the Diocesan accounts, and be published by the Board, but the Board shall not have any right to dispose of or administer such funds, unless asked to do so by the Mission concerned, or to interfere with the internal affairs of such Missions unless invited to do so. Such Auxiliaries shall recognise the authority of the Diocesan Committee in the arrangements of Missionary campaigns, and the initiation of commercial undertakings in connection with Missionary work. All missionaries shall hold the license of the Bishop in whose Diocese they work.

12. Any Auxiliary which raises annually an average sum of over £5,000 in Australia, shall be entitled to elect one clerical and one lay representative on the Board, one raising over £10,000 one clerical and one lay representative, and one over £20,000 three representatives of whom one shall be a layman.

13. All appeals for money shall be authorised by the Board, which shall notify to the sub-committee through the Chairman the amount available for any particular Mission. This shall not be held to apply to Auxiliaries recognised by the Board, but in these cases all appeals shall be authorised by the governing body of such Auxiliary.

14. General Synod shall set apart one clear day during the first week of Synod for the consideration of the Missionary work of the Church. The Chairman of the Board shall be present at such session of the Synod, and shall have the right to speak but not to vote unless a member of Synod.

15. Determination IX Session 1905 is hereby repealed but such repeal shall not revive any determination heretofore repealed.

Report on Northern Territory Aborigines.

Professor Spencer, the late Chief Protector of Aborigines for the Northern Territory, has issued a Preliminary Report. The Professor recommends the establishment of Government reserves. Each reserve is to have a married superintendent receiving £350 and rations; a teacher at £250 and rations; and two assistants at £200 and rations. Reckoning rations for five persons at £125 only, and interest on the erection of their quarters (in Darwin these cost £1200 each, and the cost would be much greater) at only £125, we find that the staff alone would cost £1250 a year. For other expenses the Professor allows £1000, which is much too low an estimate if we are to be guided by the cost of other Government experiments in the Northern Territory. Hence, each station would cost at least £2,250 a year, or £15,750 for the seven stations proposed to be established. Our own impression is that on the Professor's basis the cost would be at the very least £20,000.

Now, we are not in any way cavilling at this expenditure. We owe the aborigines a heavy debt, and ought not to grumble at our efforts to repay some of it. What we do object to is the fact that the Professor practically ignores the work of missions as a solution, or part solution, of the difficulty. The Government as it subsidises the mission station to the amount of about £250 a year, and the existing reserves are managed by voluntary workers without any additional cost to Government, either for staff or buildings. Seven mission reserves would cost £1750 instead of £15,750 a year, to say nothing of the cost of erection of Government buildings, fencing, and a host of incidental expenses. Now, there may be good reason why the Government should spend £15,750 for what it can get done for £1750. It may be that Government management is so enormously more efficient and productive of good results as to justify the expenditure; but if this is the case, we hold that the Professor should have said openly that this was his opinion, and should have supported it by some arguments. Personally, we feel that there is not so much sympathy with the aborigines as to justify the adoption of a costly scheme if the less costly one is fairly efficient.

especially as there is as yet no proof whatever of the superior efficiency of Government reserves. The Protector does indeed condemn the Hermannsburg Mission in the Macdonald Ranges, which represents a small and foreign community, but has no criticism either of the Roper River or the Bathurst Island missions. We believe that the work can be better done by missions than it can be by the Government; certainly the missions never lack the healthy light of criticism. We suggest the Government should double the present grants to missions, when they would still only cost a fifth of a Government station, and insist on what conditions of efficiency they think good. Missions do not resent the visits of Government officials. Their only complaint is that, as a rule, they so very seldom indeed are helped and encouraged by such visits.

Letter from Miss Robson.

Our readers will be interested in the following extracts from a letter received by the Bishop from Miss Robson, who is now working for the New Guinea Mission:—

(Address—Dogura, Papua.)

"Ganuganua,

"St. Matthew's Day. 1913.

"My dear Lord Bishop,—Thank you very much for sending me the picture of the opening of the Memorial Chapel. We can't make out who the men in the belts are; they don't look like soldiers. The window looks beautiful; I showed it to the Dogura people this morning.

"I am doing fairly well with the Wedau dialect. It is as picturesque and full of idioms as Greek. The native Eucharist on Sunday mornings is a wonderful sight. The people attend from the outlying villages in their native dress, the women rustling and swishing their airepas (grass petticoats) as they rise or sit. The men are fine-looking bronze figures. My work is only among the half-castes, which prevents me picking up the language quickly. We only speak English here. Some of the boys and girls are wonderfully intelligent. Indeed I mean to ask the Bishop can I begin Latin with two boys and prepare them for Th.L. before long.

"We have staying with us a young widow of three days' standing. She is a Malay half-caste; her husband a well-to-do white man on the Trobriands. They were coming into Samarai last week on their launch and the benzine caught fire. The husband and his two native boys were killed, and the wife, who was singed, jumped into the sea and was the only one saved. Mr. Newton brought her here as she was a former pupil; she will be here until the Bishop, who is a trustee, makes arrangements. No doubt she will soon be rushed by suitors. The Bishop has her brother—Charlie Dollar—with him in Brisbane.

"I am going to service at Wedau this afternoon. I am a little shy at going to the villages, as I can't talk much. Still it is the only way to learn.

"I am looking forward to the account of the Brisbane Church Congress.

"Government guards the interests of the natives here carefully.

"Life is not so hard here for the natives. They have fine gardens and a fine system of irrigation, and are altogether more sleek and independent than our natives.

"I must now start off to Wedau. I never saw such tracks to walk on as we have here. No wonder the Governor wears hob-nailed boots. I shall have to do the same. We are either walking on pebbles or over stream-beds, or down perpendicular hill-sides, and ordinary walking shoes are very short-lived."

Mr. Wilkinson's Northern Territory Trip.

"Borooloola, August 29th,

"My dear Bishop—

"No serious difficulties since my last. One horse got back to Woollagarang Station, 45 miles, which caused nearly a week's delay. On arrival here I found the Royal Commission taking evidence for their report on the overland railway. They had arrived a day or two before by steamer from Darwin, with all equipment except horses which travelled overland. I held a service on Sunday when all the community including the commissioners attended. Next week I propose starting for Elsie, calling first at McArthur Station on the Anthony's Lagoon road and from there across country on to the Western road. From Hodson Downs I propose going to the Roper, and to follow the river up from the Mission Station. I shall have to go to the Katherine for supplies. I am due there about October 25th. I do not think that I shall have time to visit Pine Creek and Darwin. I have been greatly surprised at the good pastoral country traversed since leaving Woolloogarang. There are stretches of heavy sand and dense scrub but 75 per cent of the country is good cattle grazing country well watered and could be greatly improved by periodical burning off. The Calvert and Robinson Rivers are very fine streams of water, tidal to the crossing places but I am told that there is good water above the tidal flow. I did not see any natives away from the stations but plenty of evidence of their presence in the neighbourhood. I had my boys dressed in white braided khaki uniforms which I think made the natives afraid. I am having a very interesting journey and am led to expect that it will be more so as I proceed. The one great cry is Population as an echoing and re-echoing voice. I trust that all went well at the Conference. I had you all daily in remembrance—With all good wishes, yours obediently, W. M. WILKINSON." I am camped four miles below the town and on the opposite side of the river for grass and water.

The Francis Pritt.

While the Francis Pritt was preparing to cross the bar for her last voyage for the year to Thursday Island a violent westerly gale sprang up, and drove her ashore at high water. She was left high and dry with a bank of sand and shingle between her and the water. Tom Solomon summoned all the surrounding natives, and after days of strenuous labour dug a trench five feet deep and lined with branches of trees to keep back the sand. After a week's unceasing toil the boat was at last got back into the water. Meanwhile Mr. Lane had sent a telegram overland to Normanton, telling us that it was doubtful if the boat would be able to come up at all. We at once set to work to get another boat to take down the stores for the wet season, but it was a difficult task and we should probably have been unsuccessful had not the Wyben Company most kindly lent us the Venture, though they needed her themselves. With much difficulty, as it was the busiest season of the year, a crew was got together and the boat left with Nurse Grimes, who had volunteered to go to the mission for six months, as a passenger. She had hardly left with the tide when Mr. Hockings towed in the Francis Pritt from the boat passage. He completed his kindness by going after the Venture and bringing her back from Booby Island. The cargo was immediately transferred, and next day, December 6th, the Francis Pritt left with Nurse Grimes and Mr. West, who had come up to consult the doctor about a strain from lifting an over-heavy weight. Nurse Grimes had another patient in Peter Bendigo, who was seriously ill with pleurisy. Great credit is due to Tom, his crew, and the coast natives for the strenuous way in which they worked to get the boat off the shore, and to bring her up to Thursday Island as quickly as they did.

Australian Religion.

"In Australia we are in the midst of general religious decay." We were rather startled by these words of a learned professor until we discovered that he was referring to the aborigines of Australia and not to white Christianity. "We are," he continues, "not witnessing the birth of religion, nor in the presence of a pre-religious period. The worship of the gods who figure in the myths has ceased, but their names live on; the names of the beings worshipped in the first-fruits ceremonies have disappeared, though the ceremonies are elaborate, solemn, reverent, complicated, and prolonged." (Professor Jevons, "Idea of God in Early Religions," page 87.)

We were told by Comte, and the doctrine is still very popular, that the theological is the lowest stage in the evolution of the human mind. Now, here we have a people who are so enlightened that they have passed completely through the first stage of Comte's evolutionary progress, and so might be supposed to be superior to their, nominally at least, religious white neighbours, but we doubt whether the most ardent Comtist would be inclined to claim the aborigines as a happy illustration of his theories.

We have always held that the aborigines were a deteriorated and not a primitive race, and it is interesting to have the theory confirmed. It is incredible that the elaborate rites and ceremonies of the natives should not at one time have had a meaning and a purpose.

Volume XIV. - No. 53. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1914

British Association.

The British Association met this year on September 10th at Birmingham, when the President, Sir Oliver Lodge, delivered an important address on the subject of "Continuity." He pointed out that in spite of the emphasis laid on discontinuity in the present day in view of the atomic theory of matter, it was equally impossible to ignore the existence of continuous aether behind all the phenomena of the universe. It was necessary for physical science to recognise its limitations. "I hold that science is incompetent to make comprehensive denials, even about the aether, and that it goes wrong when it makes the attempt. Science should not deal in negations; it is strong in affirmations, but nothing based on abstraction ought to presume to deny outside its own region. It often happens that things abstracted from and ignored by one branch of science may be taken into consideration by another."

With regard to the laws of chemistry and physics,—“The business of science is to trace out their mode of action everywhere, as far and as fully as possible; and it is a true instinct which resents the medieval practice of freely introducing spiritual and unknown causes into working science. In science an appeal to occult qualities must be illegitimate, and be a barrier to experiment and research generally; as, when anything is called an act of God—and when no more is said. The occurrence is left unexplained. As an ultimate statement such a phrase may be not only true but universal in its application. But there are always proximate explanations which may be looked for and discovered with patience. So, lightning, earthquakes, and other portents are reduced to natural causes. No ultimate explanation is ever attained by science: proximate explanations only. They are what it exists for; and it is the business of scientific men to seek them. To attribute the rise of sap to vital force would be absurd, it would be giving up the problem and stating nothing at all. The way in which osmosis acts to produce the remarkable and surprising effect is discoverable and has been discovered.”

In all life there was a supraphysical element which must be taken into account. “The behaviour of a ship firing shot and shell is explicable in terms of energy, but the discrimination which it exercises between friend and foe is not so explicable. There is plenty of physics and chemistry and mechanics about every vital action, but for a complete understanding of it something beyond physics and chemistry is needed, and life introduces an incalculable element. The vagaries of a fire or a cyclone could all be predicted by Laplace's calculator, given the initial positions, velocities, and the law of acceleration of the molecules; but no mathematician could calculate the orbit of a common house-fly.”

In all natural objects there was a deeper meaning than the mere surface one. “The mechanism whereby existence entrenches itself is manifest, or at least has been to a large extent discovered. Natural selection is a vera causa, so far as it goes; but if so much beauty is necessary for insects, what about the beauty of a landscape or of clouds? What utilitarian object do those subserve? Beauty in general is not taken into account by science. Very well, that may be all right, but it exists nevertheless. It is not my function to discuss it. No; but it is my function to remind you and myself that our studies do not exhaust the universe, and that if we dogmatize in a negative direction, and say that we can reduce everything to physics and chemistry, we gibbet ourselves as ludicrously narrow pedants, and are falling far short of the richness and fulness of our human birthright.”

The address concluded with the following words: “Many scientific men still feel in pugnacious mood towards theology, because of the exaggerated dogmatism which our predecessors encountered and overcame in the past. They had to struggle for freedom to find truth in their own way: but the struggle was a miserable necessity and has left some evil effects. And one of them is this lack of sympathy, this occasional hostility, to other more spiritual forms of truth. We cannot really and seriously suppose that truth began to arrive on this planet a few centuries ago. The pre-scientific insight of genius—of poets and prophets and saints—was of supreme value, and the access of those inspired seers to the heart of the universe was profound. But the camp followers, the Scribes and Pharisees, by whatever name they may be called, had no such insight, only a vicious or a foolish obstinacy; and the prophets of a new era were stoned.”

“Now at last we of the new era have been victorious, and the stones are in our hands; but for us to imitate the old ecclesiastical attitude would be folly. Let us not fall into the old mistake of thinking that ours is the only way of exploring the multifarious depths of the universe and that all others are worthless and mistaken. The universe is a larger thing than we have any conception of, and no one method of search will exhaust its treasures. Men and brethren, we are trustees of the truth of the physical universe as scientifically explored; let us be faithful to our trust.”

“Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things. It is not surprising that by our methods we fail to grasp it; the actions of the Deity make no appeal to any special sense, only a universal appeal, and our methods are, as we know, incompetent to detect complete uniformity. There is a principle of relativity here, and unless we encounter flaw or jar or change, nothing in us responds; we are deaf and blind, therefore, to the immanent grandeur around us, unless we have insight enough to recognise in the woven fabric of existence, flowing steadily from the loom in an infinite progress towards perfection, the ever-growning garment of a transcendent God.”

Mrs. Matthews has lingered on in great pain and without hope of recovery. She has shown great patience and courage, and repeatedly urged Mr. Matthews to leave her and return to his work, but the Board of Missions and the Bishop alike felt that in her weak condition they had no right to accept such self-sacrifice.

The Church Congress.

The Brisbane Church Congress was an unqualified success. The attendance was good, the services were impressive, and the papers almost all on a high level of ability. Much interest was aroused by the visiting Bishops from overseas, and the missionary exhibitions and missionary addresses kept the cause of missions well to the front. The presidential address by the Archbishop of Brisbane was a most noteworthy utterance, especially on the subject of the renaissance in Asia and the Labour movement. We quote the concluding paragraphs of the addresses on the latter subject in the hope that our readers will read the whole address for themselves. We have no hesitation in saying that there are few men in Australia who could have treated the subject with such a combination of true sympathy and yet such fearless discrimination.

“Truly, this movement is mighty in possibilities and the hope is great. But if our hopes are to be realised, there are weighty questions to be decided first. It is natural of course that the first object of the Labour Movement should be to secure for itself that measure of material well-being which is necessary for the development of the higher kinds of life. Everyone will concede the justice of this claim. But if anything like the development I have pictured is to follow, we must even now look below the surface and estimate the real aspirations of the people. Leisure and easy circumstances do not greatly benefit a man unless he knows how to use them well. Good wages and short hours are good things in themselves, but they are not by themselves going to be the salvation of society. There must be intellectual interests, there must be a development of the spiritual side of life. Here is the question of questions. Is the Labour Movement going to be Christian? Is the strong young life surging up around us going to rise above the materialism which threatens to blight its promise? Will the young man develop that reverence and self-control which befits noble manhood, or will there be revolt and wreckage as his strength develops? I confess that the immediate outlook in Australia is not reassuring. But again our thoughts recur to history and the Roman Empire. The strong young Gothic nations filled the Roman Empire as the new wine fills the old bottles. The Empire was not able to contain them and collapsed; but the Church rose to the occasion, and taught by her the Goths learnt their great task and became the fathers of modern Europe. Will history repeat itself? Can the Church play her part again and inspire the new movement in the midst of its human strength with a hunger for things unseen? To doubt it would be to deny Him whose presence is daily manifested in her life and work. The Church of the 20th century is the same body as the Church of the Roman Empire, and what she has done once she can do again. But nevertheless, to-day she is on her trial. If she has not the vision to see whither this great movement is tending; if she fails to welcome and foster all that is good in it, she will alienate many of her noblest sons, and will without doubt herself suffer irretrievable loss. No doubt with sympathy there must be discrimination, and true sympathy and earnest co-operation with the movement in its wider aspect does not necessarily involve subscription to its present political creed. But sympathy and co-operation there must be. Let us have faith in the Church's message. Let us make sure that the Church reflects the spirit of Christ in society and we shall see—nay, we do already see from day to day—that the necessary economic changes, whatever they be, will come without convulsion as the fruit grows on a tree."

Among the speakers were several old friends of this diocese—Mr. and Mrs. Jones and Deaconess Buchanan. A full record of the papers and discussions can be obtained from the Brisbane Church Book Depot, price 2.6.

Deaconess Buchanan.

Universal grief has been caused throughout the diocese by the news of the serious illness of Deaconess Buchanan. She was present at the Brisbane Church Congress and read a paper, also giving an address to the meeting for girls. After the Congress she went down to stay with her brother and afterwards with Mrs Milman at Southport, but being in great and constant pain, she came up to Brisbane and underwent an operation in St Helen's Hospital on Monday, October 6th. She continued in great pain, and it was decided to have a further operation on October 24th. Canon Pattinson administered the Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m. on that day. It is needless to say that she showed the most wonderful power of patient endurance. The doctors found on examination, however, that no operation was possible, and held out no hope of recovery or of life for more than a few days. It was at this stage that the Deaconess's illness became generally known, and excited everywhere, but especially at Thursday Island and Darwin, the deepest sympathy and anxiety for further news. The Deaconess, who in addition to the hospital staff, was watched constantly by her two brothers and Mrs Pattinson, was unconscious for another week, but at the end of the month there was a decided change for the better, and she finally recovered consciousness. There is now a very slow improvement in the Deaconess's condition. Her brother, Mr Nigel Buchanan, writes:—

"We scarcely expected her to live for more than a day or two after the operation, but since that she has rallied in the most wonderful manner, as much to the astonishment of the doctors and nurses as anyone; and at the present time it is hard to say what will happen. She suffers dreadfully at times, and I am much afraid this is going to wear her out, though she is struggling bravely and shows a wonderful amount of vitality. She is not able to read anything except a very short note."

Under the most favourable circumstances it is not expected that the Deaconess will be able to leave the hospital before the new year.

Opening of the new Church at St Paul's, Moa.

(BY A LADY VISITOR.)

With a view of assisting a little in the preparations for the many visitors expected, Mrs. Nash, Mr. Culverwell and I accompanied Mrs Cole to Moa on the 26th November. The Bauzai brought us over very well, as the wind was fair, and we did the trip in just over four and a half hours. On Friday afternoon a contingent from Badu arrived, including Mrs. Walker and her children, Mrs. Zahel, Miss Brown and Mr. Kemp. The village was filling up steadily with coloured visitors from the other islands. Four large booths or sheds of plaited cocoanut branches had been erected and allotted for their entertainment. In each shed some of the chief men and women of Moa prepared and served the food for their visitors. We watched one batch of men squatting on cocoanut mats before two long rows of plates and pannikins ready for a repast of yams, rice, bread and butter and I don't know what else. Some pigs had been caught on Hammond Island and a large quantity of turtle kept ready in captivity, besides large quantities of flour, sugar, fruit &c. The white folk each brought some supplies, chiefly tinned, and we were supplied from the village with turtle, roast pig, &c. We had meals in the school hall as soon as our party grew too large for Mrs Cole's verandah, and for sleeping some of us used the school verandah and the rest of us had tents. Mrs. Nash and I shared a commodious edifice with side walls of grass, end wall of cocoanut branches, a tent fly for a roof, and a thick layer of grass for a carpet. The bathing off the beach was glorious, especially when some dozens of native girls joined us and devoted much energy to seeing that we did not drown. On Saturday soon after midday the Bishop and the rest of the Thursday Island visitors arrived in the "Goodwill," kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. Walker of Badu, and Mr. K. O. Mackenzie most kindly taking charge of her. A large number of people had hoped to avail themselves of the opportunity for a visit to Moa, but various causes, among which might perhaps be reckoned a very boisterous wind on the preceding day, and the prospect of the 7 a.m. start, had thinned down the number of passengers to 10, Miss McKaé and Miss Mills representing the lady visitors. The "Goodwill" is fitted with steam auxiliary power, but unfortunately the engines refused to play their part. The wind was contrary at starting, but Mr. R. Hockings kindly came to the rescue with his motor launch and towed the Goodwill out as far as Tuesday Island. After that all went well except for the trouble that the Bishop was the only passenger not prostrated by seasickness. On Saturday evening at 7.30 a short service was held outside the school house. Some hymns were sung very sweetly in native dialect by rows and rows of dark figures squatting in the sand. Mr Cole then gave notice of the Sunday services and, in the name of the community generally, welcomed all visitors, white and coloured. The Bishop then gave a short address telling the folks of St Paul's what pleasure it gave him to be present at Moa for the opening of their Church. He proceeded to remind them that gladness and rejoicing were acceptable to God, but that they must be careful that these never degenerated into over-excitement, and licence, and that they should also remember that gaiety and pleasure were given us as a refreshment, that after them we might return with renewed vigour to our daily work.

As a rule dancing is severely discouraged on Saturday nights, but this being an exceptional occasion notice was given that dancing would be allowed till 10 p.m. when all the village must be quiet. We went to see a little of the dancing. Any one in search of good movements for physical culture drill might well take notes on the Torres Straits islanders' dances. They consist of one set of movements repeated over and over again to a spirited but rather monotonous chant, and each island has its own particular songs and dances. The men's voices are sweet and deep but the women's are apt to be shrill. On Sunday morning the whole village assembled outside the school hall to be marshalled for the procession. First came the processional cross borne by the head boy of the mission school. Then all the mission school boys in clean white singlets and red and white striped lava lavas. Following them came the school girls and then the women. There were all dressed alike in white dresses with a bow of dark red ribbon on their hair and the effect was excellent. The men of St Paul's came next and after them followed the Bishop in his cope preceded by Mr Cole bearing the pastoral staff. The native visitors formed up and lined the route to be taken by the procession and the white visitors took their places in the Church. At 9.30 all were ready and the procession moved forward singing, unaccompanied, "Onward Christian Soldiers." It was very picturesque to see the gaily clad islanders with their eager dark faces moving solemnly along. They walked in procession all round the Church and then, still singing, filed up the aisle and took their places. The Church just held the white visitors and the St Paul's folk and then all the others came up close to the open doors along each side of the Church to hear the service. The Bishop proceeded with the Dedication and Consecration Service followed by a celebration of the Holy Communion. The singing throughout was beautiful and displayed the clear enunciation of the English language which is one of the excellencies of the Moa teaching. The congregation were very reverent and attentive. The Bishop in his sermon congratulated the people of St Paul's on having collected out of their own money the entire cost of their Church with the exception of two small grants from English societies; and on having built it entirely themselves without having to employ any hired labour. He pointed out to them that the need of a community for a building set apart and consecrated as a Church might be compared with the need of a sea-port town of a jetty. It represented the spot on which they met to offer their prayers and praises just as the jetty was the place where all the produce of a country was collected together and then loaded on the vessels and sent forth across to sea. Also they met in the Church to receive the blessings of God, just as the jetty was the place where all the imports to a country were discharged by the ships which brought them from abroad. His Lordship also made a touching reference to Deaconess Buchanan, now laying dangerously ill in Brisbane, and reminded his hearers how much the Mission owed to her devotion and love. He hoped that their new Church would be a great blessing to them and to their children after them, and that gradually the sacred memories associated with a place where we have prayed and praised in joy and sorrow might cling to their Church and make it to each one of them the dearest spot upon their island. After the sermon the head man of the visitors from Mobuiag took his place just below the Sanctuary holding an offertory bag and the stalwart Mobuiag men and women filed up the aisle, dropped their offerings into the bag and passed out through the Chancel door. When Mobuiag had filed through Badu followed and then successively the Yam, York, Adam and Cocanut Island representatives filed up the Church and dropped their offerings into the bags held by their respective head men. Some of the children had been grasping threepenny and sixpenny bits so firmly in their hot little fists that determined efforts were needed on the part of the mothers to shake them off into the bags. Hymns were sung while the offerings were being made and then a collection was taken up among those inside the Church. The whole offertory amounted to over £52. Besides the white visitors there were a large number of native communicants. The Church is of fibro cement and is painted a greyish blue inside with dark benches and a soft pink outside. It holds about 200 people and is seated with very good home-made benches. Three doors opening down each side as well as the doors at each end make plenty of ventilation and the building is well put together. It has cost so far £160 for material, all labour being given free, and is free of debt. An Altar has been given and a Lectern and Prayer Desk are on their way. A credence table and brass Altar Desk are promised. A Font and several other things still remain to be provided. The brass compass bowl from the "Volga" wreck was lent from the Quetta Memorial Cathedral for the occasion and in the afternoon the Bishop baptised three babies, Gaysha Alfred, Nappio and El-ie. At 7.30 we had evensong and the Bishop gave an Advent Sermon on the words "Thy Kingdom Come." The village slept in peace until about 1 a.m. on Monday when dancing was begun very vigorously and kept up till 5.30 a.m. It would probably be resumed at short intervals all Monday and Tuesday by day and night until all the supplies ran out and the 500 visitors would then disperse to their various islands and the people of Moa resume their usual work-a-day life. At 7 a.m. on Monday our party from Thursday Island were on board the Goodwill for the return journey. We had a splendid trip and landed safely about 3 p.m. having all thoroughly enjoyed the share we took in the opening of St. Paul's Church at Moa.

Notes.

The Archbishop of Brisbane left Brisbane on November 11th for England, whither he travels by the steamer Otranto. Archdeacon Le Fanu will act as Administrator of the Diocese of Brisbane, and the Bishop of Carpentaria becomes Acting Metropolitan. The Archbishop will return in September 1914. The Archbishop is a tremendous worker, and the Church Congress has entailed on him much extra labour. No one will grudge him a thorough holiday. We only hope that his Grace will really take a holiday, and not as is often the case with Bishops on a so-called holiday, work a little harder than usual.

An article by the Bishop of Carpentaria appears in the October number of the Commonwealth Military Journal. It is entitled "The Doctrine of Non-Resistance," and contends that those who oppose universal military training in Australia, in the supposed interests of religious conviction, are labouring under a mistake as to the Christian teaching and hold for the most part an irrational and half-way position. The horrors of war are most obvious, and an aggressive war is a crime wholly contrary to the spirit of Christianity, but there is a redeeming side even to war, and it is a duty to be ready even at personal self-sacrifice to protect the weak and to prevent wrong and injustice.

The two small Mitchell River boys taken South by Mr. Matthews seem to have thoroughly enjoyed themselves, and returned by the Nikko Maru on October 9th. The following letter from the younger boy to the Bishop is given verbatim. It was written without influence or correction:—

Nikko Maru
7th October, 1913.

Dear Bishop White

I am very glad to right to you (and Mrs. Nash told me) about what I saw in Sydney a lot of anamel in the Zouse. I saw the rhinoceros and I saw the tiger and the lion, elephant stork, bear, duck, emu, Monkey, ostrich (and I ride on the elephant) cammul, possum and parrot. The Boy gave the football and Mr. Jone the great bat.

From Tommy.

Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins and Miss Sharp returned from the Mitchell on October 22nd, en route for Sydney. They rendered much willing service during their stay on the Mission. They had an alarming experience on their voyage up in the Francis Pritt. The ship was struck by an extra heavy squall and heeled over so greatly that a quantity of water came into the cabin before she could be got up into the wind.

The following letter is of interest:—
"Tighnault, Aberfeldy, October 8th, 1913—My dear Lord Bishop—I received the post cards [of the Douglas Memorial Window] and have distributed them according to your wish. The window is a very delightful memorial to Mr. John Douglas; the likeness is very good. I have been much interested in reading the account of the opening of the Chapel. I hope it will not be long before the other aisle is also finished. With kind regards to Miss White, I remain, yours sincerely, H. CHARLOTTE DOUGLAS."

Copies of the poem "Australia" given in this issue can be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot, price 1d.

Rev. H. H. Ayscough writes to the Bishop from "South View, Bearpark, Durham—I arrived in England on the 15th ultimo, after an exceedingly pleasant trip. I spent one week in London and then came on here. I have now commenced work with the Vicar of Bearpark as his assistant Priest. The work is such as to enable me to keep terms. As my leave lasts till the close of 1915, I have promised him only two years. The first term at the University commences on the 17th instant, and closes on the 16th December. I like London but I cannot say that I care for Durham. I am sure that I shall never care for these dull grey days, and I am dreading the approach of winter. However, I mean to try and endure the two years. I have taken rooms at the above address and have settled down, so I expect that will be my address while in England. I was glad to hear from my brother of all the preparations for the Conference, from which he expects great things. So far it has not been at all cold. I have bought all sorts of warm things for it when it does come. I am hoping that it will be a mild winter as they say the last was. I think I shall be happy in this parish as the standard of service is about the same as throughout Carpentaria. I do not think I would be happy where they went to extremes. I shall write again later to say how I am getting on at the University, so that you may be aware of my progress. I am delighted to hear of the progress that is being made at Darwin and throughout the Diocese. I remember the work constantly in my prayers, and at this distance I expect that is the utmost I can do."

St Peter's Church, Normanton

Several improvements have been made in the Church lately; the east window has been painted pale green to obviate the glare of the sun, and the Sanctuary floor is being stained. A faculty has been obtained for the removal of the present unsightly altar rails, and the substitution of more suitable ones. An oak Sanctuary chair and silver mounted baptismal shell are being sent from England by Miss Lillie of Eastbourne. New globes are needed for the gas brackets. Mr Cant, an old resident of Normanton, has presented a quantity of gas piping which has enabled the gas to be laid on to the Rectory. Mr. Schipke and Mr. Bolles did the work of laying the pipes and fixing the brackets after their working hours. Rev. A. McD. Hassell has recently paid a visit to Burketown, driving over from Normanton.

Croydon.

Arrangements have been made with the Diocese of North Queensland by which George-town and Forsayth will for the present be worked by the Bush Brotherhood of North Queensland, with which they are in close touch by railway.

A Sunday Morning.

It was sunrise in a tropical township. Not a breath of air stirred. The leaves hung motionless on the trees and behind them lay a dull leaden sea, motionless also. No voice of bird or joyous insect saluted the dawn. The long hot night was passing into the fiercer heat of day, and nature was, as it were, silently bracing itself to endure. Man seemed to find small place in the pitiless immobility. Was that long, dreary, desolate coastline a fit home for him? Was this breathless heat an environment in which he could do aught but suffer? Was it not a reflex of life? All the conditions given with small regard to man's tastes and wishes; circumstances which held him in an iron grip, sufferings from which he could never win free, failure which ever dogged his efforts at self-realisation.

As I waited and thought there came a soft, singing sound, the leaves began to stir and rustle, a cool breeze touched my brow, the sea began to wrinkle and reflect a thousand points of light, there was a flash of blue and green wings, a hum of insects and a stir of life. Then I remembered that it was Sunday morning and that the parish priest would soon be celebrating the Holy Eucharist in the little Church; and a shame came over me for my momentary faithlessness.

It was true that in nature there was a universal givenness of conditions, this inevitableness of sequence? Surely in order to make life possible, life abounding and exulting in a thousand shapes by sea and land in bird and beast, in flower and tree. It was true that man finds himself surrounded and shut in by a thousand facts and conditions, hampered by his physical, mental, social, and often his moral environment straining and fretting because he does not understand, because he cannot do as he would. But why, again? Surely that there may be life, spiritual life, life triumphing and exulting and rising up to God Himself. I thought of the serene faith of St Paul. "I am confident that he who hath begun a good work in you will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ." The conditions of our life are indeed given with strange inequality of incidence and often with strange inevitableness and sternness, but behind it all are two great transcending facts, the love of God and the power of God. It is because of these things that the spiritual life is a blessed reality and that the man who has faith can face with equal calm the rages of nature, the fury of unreasonable men, and the subtle assaults of the enemy of souls. The bell calls to the Eucharist, in which God assures us, unworthy though we be, to gather up the crumbs under His table, that he has for us not only a continual support and refreshment by the way, but an ultimate purpose of life and regeneration beyond our present capacity to conceive.

Roman Catholic.

It would be well if the suggestion contained in the following notice which has been issued in India by the Indian Government could be more generally put into practice:—"It has been recently brought to the notice of the Government of India that the term 'Catholic' has been used in an official communication as being synonymous with 'Roman Catholic.' As the claim of the Church of Rome to exclusive catholicity and to the exclusive right to be styled 'The Catholic Church' is disputed on historical and other grounds by other Churches, the Governor-in-Council desires that such loose phraseology may be carefully avoided in future, and that in all official communications the Roman Communion and its authorities may be addressed and described as 'Roman Catholic.'"

"Australia."

The following poem appeared in the in the Sydney Morning Herald of May 17th last, and we re-print it as the subject is one of deep importance to all of us, who have it in our hands to make or mar our country.

AUSTRALIA.

O land of the good grass plains,
Where wander the countless kine,
Fair land of the swelling downs,
That are fat with corn and wine,

Whose capes for ten thousand miles
Shock full to the surging tide,
And girdle the far-flung hills,
Where the gold and silver hide.

Where slowly the vaster winds
Than blow in the older world,
Are wafting from south to north
Thy banner of peace unfurled.

O land where the whitening dawn
Turns ever a smiling face,
Where nature is kind of heart,
Fit home for a goodly race.

O land that our fathers gained,
Through hunger and thirst and toil,
Uprooting the matted scrub,
And ploughing the world-old soil.

They scorched on the fiery plains,
And gasped on the desert sand,
They tramped out the white man's trail,
And sighted the promised land.

They waited and worked and won,
Strong men of the ancient stock,
As true to their friends as steel,
In trouble and danger rock.

Their sons, by their toiling, heirs
To leisure and wealth and ease,
Give thanks to their gods that they Have only themselves to please.

O men of a race too small
To handle your fathers' spade,
To shoulder the ringing axe
And level the forest glade.

Ye crowd to the reeking town,
And swarm in the stifling street,
But shrink from the calling land,
Too rough for your dainty feet.

Ye measure and dole your work,
Give least for the greatest pay,
Work not for the honour of work,
But only for means to play.

Your wives have a barren womb,
Your stock fill the empty wild,
Your paddocks are filled with lambs,
Your homes with a single child.

Endowed with a land set free
From hunger, disease, and war,
You gather your easy gold,
And hug to yourselves your store.

"O pleasure, be thou our god,"
Comes ever your restless cry;
"To-day let us eat and drink,
To-morrow, perchance, we die."

O people that honour well
Your prophets that flatter your pride,
Grown used to resent alarms,
And turn on the other side.

Ye sneer at the faithful friends
Who care for your honest name,
Condemning as traitors vile
The sons who bewail your shame.

Who count you as souls asleep,
Not dead to the nobler strife,
Who bid you arise and stand,
And strive even yet for life.

By all the good gifts of God,
By all the fair hopes for man,
Awake from the sleep of death,
And fight while as yet ye can.

By all that have died for men,
By Christ who endured the cross,
Count nothing but honour gain,
Count all that is selfish loss.

Take up with a loyal heart
The burden upon you laid;
Who fights on the side of God
Needs never to be afraid.

Be true to the great good land,
And rear 'neath the southern sun
A race that shall hold its own,
And last till the world be done.

O land that we love so well,
Awake and redeem thy fate,
Arise ere the watchers cry—
"O land of lost hopes—too late."

Bishop's Trip to the Gulf.

The Bishop left Thursday Island by the Suva on Tuesday December 16th for the Gulf and arrived at Normanton at 2 a.m. on Friday December 19th, staying at the Rectory. On Saturday the Sunday School children met at the Rectory at 3 p.m. for games, and at 5 p.m. the Bishop distributed the Sunday School prizes after a short address. On Sunday the Bishop preached at Matins, and on Tuesday met the Parochial Council. During the week he visited a number of the parishioners. Great preparations were made in the way of decorating the Church for the Holy Communion at 9 a.m. on Christmas Day and a large gathering was expected, but he rain which had held off all the week and all night selected from 6 to 7 a.m. to come down in a perfect deluge converting all the flats round the church into a series of waterholes. The expected congregation dwindled down to a faithful dozen who ventured to brave the storm. It was a grievous disappointment after all the preparations for a united communion of the people. There was, however, a good attendance at Evensong at which the Bishop preached. On the day after Christmas Day the Bishop went by train to Croydon where he stayed with Rev. H. R. Longmore at the Rectory, and gave an address on Saturday afternoon to the members of the G.F.S., and celebrated and preached on Sunday.

Normanton appeared nearly deserted, but Croydon in proportion to its size is in an even worse condition. At the Bishop's last visit, six months ago, it seemed as if it could hardly become less prosperous than it was, but since then a number of old residents have left and the emptiness of streets and houses is pitiable. The question of the possibility of maintaining religious ministrations in these places is becoming a serious question, and through no fault of the people themselves, who have done all they can to make good the great loss that the Church has suffered.

During the week the Bishop visited a number of churchpeople in Croydon and Golden Gate, and also drove out to the new tin mines, returning by the Richmond.

On Sunday he confirmed two girls at Golden Gate, gave an address to men on Sunday afternoon at Croydon, and at Evensong instituted Rev. H. R. Longmore as Rector of Croydon and preached. On the following day he returned to Normanton and completed his visitation of the parishioners. On Wednesday a meeting of communicants was held to meet the Bishop. The Bishop gave an address, and a number of fresh workers volunteered for service in the parish. He left for Thursday Island on January 9th.

The Bishop.

The Bishop left Thursday Island on February 2nd, intending to take a month's holiday in Brisbane before taking confirmations for the Archbishop in March. He was to return on March 28th, and visit Mount Carbine on April 5th, to spend Holy week and Easter at Mossman; and the following week at Cooktown, returning to Thursday Island on April 21st. On May 10th, he hopes to leave for Darwin and drive overland from Pine Creek to the Roper River Mission, returning to Darwin about the third week in June, and to Thursday Island about the end of the month or the beginning of July.

St. Paul's, Moa.

Our readers have had an account of the opening of the new church from the pen of a white visitor, but we feel sure that they will read with interest the following account of the same event written by one of the Moa schoolboys, Andai.

"THE CHURCH DEDICATION FESTIVAL"

"When the notice was given out to all the Island that the Church of St. Paul, Moa, was to be opened on the thirtieth of November all the cutters came from all the islands on 28th of November and there were houses made for all the people. There were four houses made, one for the South Sea people and the other three for the tribes of Mabiag and Badu, but when the people came from the other islands they were divided into three, and some gentlemen came on the Goodwill and there was great feasting.

"When the bell went on Sunday morning for to open the Church all the strangers from all the islands made a line from Mr. Cole's house and right round the Church in two lines, but there was a space in the middle and the people of St. Paul's went through the middle. All the boys wore the same kind of lavlavas and singlets and the women and girls wore white dresses. They had red ribbon on their head and we, St. Paul's people, sang a hymn 391 Onward Christian Soldiers, marching as to war with the cross of Jesus going on before, and our big boy wore a white dress like a quire, and he bore the cross before us. His name is Gayai. and when we went in, then the Bishop and our Missionary Mr. Cole went in, and there were hymns sung and the Bible read, and in the end we sang hymns and the collection was made. A head man from every island comes and stands near the Bishop and Mr. Cole. He has a little basket in his hand. The people put their money in the basket and go out on the other door, and when all the people from the other islands had finished then we had some more prayers made and then we childrens came out and the Bishop gave the ladies and gentlemen and the men and women of St. Paul's the Holy Communion and after that the service ended.

"On the next morning, on Monday morning, there was a great play in the village. We danced on the very hot day and were very happy and there was capamoury made of turtle and flour about five or six turtle, and in the night we danced and there were paper lamps hanged all around. The Yam Island boys their play was about spears. The Cocanot Islanders their play was about shovels. The Mabiag boys their play was about a parrot. Their hats were made like a parrot's head, and when they moved the heads it looked like a parrot's head moved, and in the next morning they sailed away to their own places and the yams that left behind the councillors shared it out for them, and only the Mabiag people stopped, and then they went away on the next morning and we were very sorry to see our friends go away.

"ANDAI."

Memorial to Deaconess Buchanan.

A meeting was held at the Vicarage on Tuesday, January 27th, to consider the question of a memorial to the late Deaconess Buchanan. It was resolved to put a stained glass window in the west wall of the Cathedral at a cost of about £37 and to devote all other money received to the erection of a memorial hospital at St. Paul's Mission, Moa. Mr. K. O. Mackenzie kindly undertook to act as hon. treasurer for the fund, and it was resolved to issue an appeal for subscriptions to the memorial. About £100 is needed for the hospital in addition to the window.

The Bishop's poem on Australia which was reproduced in our last number has been repeated in "The Outlook," which is one of the most widely read of the higher class American magazines.

Mr. Wilkinson's Journey.

After leaving Borooloola Mr. Wilkinson headed for the Roper River. He says that water was fairly plentiful and there was abundance of dry grass but without substance or nourishment, and the horses got very poor and weak. So poor was the grass that though it was abundant one station visited had lost over 1,000 head of cattle. At McMinnis Bar one of Mr. Wilkinson's horses was drowned in the river. From Borooloola he went to the McArthur Station, and from there across country to Bohinea Downs on the valley of the Limmen, owned by Mr. S., who took stock to the Cape York Peninsula fifty years ago. Thence to Tarumbernie, where there is a married manager with a wife and one child, a lonely spot 140 miles from Borooloola. At the next station, Neilwood Downs, there is also a married manager and family, and a married son with his family. From here on to Hodgson Downs, and thence to a survey camp at the Leichart Bar on the Roper. From here to Paddy's Lagoon where he was welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Rogers; and so on to the Mission Station. Mr. Wilkinson considers the site a very good one, and the land far better than any of the mission stations in Queensland; but comments on the hindrance caused by constant changes of superintendent. He stayed four days and was much pleased with his visit. At the Roper, one of his blackboys deserted, but he was able to get another as far as the Katherine. From the mission he travelled up the Roper to the Elsie Station, and then on to Bitter Springs, where he saw without enthusiasm the beginning of an attempt at Government sheep-farming. From here he went on to the Marrenboy tinfield. The prospects seemed favourable, but little or nothing is being done in view of the promise of the Government to erect a battery. Thence he went on to the Katherine and so down to Pine Creek for supplies. From Pine Creek he went with Mr. Tweedie to visit the Daly River, the expedition taking about a month. Mr. Wilkinson says: "The place is very disappointing. There is nothing phenomenal about the land. The coast district contains far better land and facilities for agriculture. The demonstration farm is only a name as yet." On December 29th Mr. Wilkinson left Katherine for Willeroo, Victoria Downs, and Wave Hill, and Tanami goldfield. From there he hopes to return to within 30 miles of Victoria Downs, and then strike across country (a distance of 300 miles) to Newcastle Waters. He hopes to get to Powell's Creek in April, and from there to travel down the telegraph line to Alice Springs. He says: "The horses have improved in condition, but leave much to be desired; the flies give them a restless time. I have now but one blackboy and miss the extra pair of hands. I am desirous of getting across as many rivers as possible before they are swollen by the wet, and get across the dry stretch to the overland telegraph line before the waters dry up again." Later news has been received that Mr. Wilkinson was safe at Willeroo Station during the heavy fall of rain early in January. It will probably be some time before any further news is received of him.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson writes as follows, under date February 8th, from Wave Hill, Victoria River, Northern Territory:—

"The above address indicates the progress of the journey. To-morrow I hope to start out for Tanamai, the end of the tour in this direction. From there I return here to pick up the track for Newcastle Waters on the overland telegraph line, where I hope to be before the end of April. I had a very interesting trip with Mr. Tweedie to Daly River. I hurried away from Pine Creek to get to the south side of the Katherine River; it was well I did so, as twenty-four hours after crossing water commenced to come down, and since I left they have experienced the highest flood on record. I am thankful to say that I have come through without any great trials and difficulties so common in the wet season. Heavy downpours have followed me, but I have found myself comfortably housed when they caught me. Thus I was delayed a week at Willeroo, and nearly a fortnight at Victoria Downs station. Strange to say, they have had very little rain out here, and everything points to the fact that I could not have got through earlier; there would have been miles and miles without grass. It is quite an innovation for the people to have a priest visit them. Since leaving Burketown, at quite 90 per cent of the places, I have been told, "No minister has been this way before." They all seem to appreciate the opportunity of meeting together for worship. The congregation varies from one or two to ten. One man who came to a service said he was glad of the opportunity, as he had not attended a service for twenty-seven years. It is a great problem how these people are to be ministered unto, so few, so far apart. The difficulties in getting to them—weather conditions, state of the country, and many other stern facts have to be considered, which do not occur to the man of ordinary experience. I don't think the populating of the Territory will be at all rapid: they have neither the land nor the climate . . . that Queensland and the southern States have to offer settlers. To all intents and purposes it is a pastoralists' country, and will be for many years.

My address until the beginning of June will be Powell's Creek, via Darwin."

A Revised Prayer Book.

Bishop Gore has done the whole Church a service by suggesting the issue of a Specimen Revised Prayer Book to serve as a basis of discussion on the subject of Revision. He states in his preface that he hopes that we shall be in no hurry to take any action, but in the meantime it is well to consider the lines on which Revision might run when it becomes possible. The Lectionary Psalter and Epistles and Gospels are for the present not considered, and no change is made in the Ornaments Rubric. Some interesting additions are made to the saints commemorated in the Calendar, such as Caedmon, George Herbert, Ken, William Law, Raymond Lull, St. Catherine of Genoa, Bonaventure and Nicholas Ferrar. Mattins and Evensong are shortened but Prime and Compline added as services which may be used after the former. The difficulty of the Athanasian Creed is got over by placing it in the office of Prime. Services are provided for rogation, missions, times of trouble, thanksgiving, etc.

In the Holy Communion the Scottish and American offices are followed more closely than our present office, especially in the Invocation of the Holy Spirit, otherwise there is little change. The full form of administration need only be used once after which the shortened words are allowed. In the marriage office the woman's vow is the same as that of the man and the references to the old Testament are omitted.

There is a new office for the visitation of the sick and the burial service is enlarged, offices being provided for the burial of a child and for cases where the Prayer Book office may not be used, and for the commemoration of the departed.

On the whole the book is very wisely conservative and there is nothing to which real exception can be taken on doctrinal grounds, though no doubt there are those who would prefer other lines of revision. We hope that other suggestions will be made and the whole subject well talked out before any steps are taken either here or in the old country.

Unselfishness.

It is possible to be selfishly unselfish, and this kind of selfishness is none the less harmful that we often find it difficult to give it such a hard name. It is far more common in women than in men. The mother who allows her big daughter to sit on the veranda with a novel while she is toiling at the washtub over the same daughter's clothes is really selfish. She is gratifying her maternal instinct for self-sacrifice at the cost of her daughter's real welfare and happiness. The wife who insists on blacking her husband's boots is selfishly feeding her desire for service at the cost of her husband's manliness and self-respect. Not all self-negation is good, it is only good when it subserves the highest good of others. Some women toil for others from morning to night and only succeed in thoroughly spoiling husband and children, besides incidentally ruining their own health.

As a rule this kind of self-negation is not welcomed at first by the recipient, who only after a time comes to expect it as his due. Such a woman, often after years of self-negation, poses as a mild martyr, but the reply is obvious, "Why did you do it? Your husband and children would have been much better off if you had allowed them to do and seen that they did their own proper work and duty instead of doing it for them, and you yourself would be fresh and interesting instead of being unnecessarily worn and faded."

On the other hand, real unselfishness is the noblest thing in life and if women are preeminent in spurious unselfishness it must also in fairness be admitted that they are preeminent also in the highest and truest unselfishness.

True unselfishness means being willing to be thought at times to be hard, unkind or unsympathetic. It is often far easier to do a thing than to refuse to do it, to smile than to frown. Unselfishness is by no means to be compared with softness. It means doing what is for the highest good of your neighbour however unpleasant it may be to yourself and however unpleasant it may be to them. It often requires the highest courage, and a willingness at times to risk being considered even selfish because you will not do what you feel cannot do real good in the end.

Our Blessed Lord is the highest type of unselfishness yet we find him constantly allowing himself to be ministered to, because he saw that it was for others good that they should to serve him, while we find no trace of that unreal and false unselfishness which with its foolish sentimentality disfigures so much of modern life in which people have almost forgotten the ideals of duty and of discipline.

The Adventure.

Once on the slope of the ice-ridge,
In the roar of the falling snow;
Once in the pause of the fever,
When the light of the lamp sank low;

Once when the waterbag wilted,
In the midst of the Deadman's Plain;
Once when the whizz of the arrows
Smote the camp in the dawn like rain;

Twice in the green, tumbling water,
With a sob of the bubbling breath;
Once from the heels of my horses,
I have look'd on the face of death.

Burden'd with age and its weakness,
Of the savour of life bereft,
Ever I strive to prepare me
For the one great adventure left.

Whither at last will it lead me?
And in what shall my trav'ling end?
Question all questions transcending,
Whence all hoping and fear depend!

Death, irresistibly final,
Bids the curtain of darkness fall:
What, if relentlessly silent,
He should be but the end of all!

Will, paradoxical always,
In the future the past appear,
Dogging and shaping our living
Till we murmur "No change is here"?

Passing the portals of darkness
Shall I waken to nameless fears,
Hopeless and terrified groaning,
And the gnashing of teeth, and tears?

Trembling and half-understanding,
Shall I waken to cleansing fires,
Feeling their keenness no torment
In the purging my soul desires?

Finally, what if as children
After terror of night's alarms
Wake in a measureless wonder
To the dawn and their mother's arms,

So should I wake from death's darkness,
With amaze at the road I trod,
Joyous and filled beyond measure
With the fathomless peace of God!

Firmly, as bent on adventure,
I will strive to my latest breath,
Then yet again without trembling
I may look on the face of death.

Pompeii.

Mr. E. J. Sewell in a lecture at the Victoria Institute gives some very interesting details as to life in Pompeii in the year A.D. 79. The people were very keen about municipal elections and many hundreds of notices are painted on the walls such as "Vote for Publius Furius. He is a good man"; or of another candidate, "He will keep an eye on the expenditure." Sometimes a candidate was put forward by a trade guild as, "The goldsmiths all recommend Crispus Pansa for the aedileship." Sometimes a man's enemies make sarcastic recommendation—e.g., "The thieves beg for the election of Katia," and, "The hard drinkers and sleepy heads are voting for Vatia"; or, again, "It is Claudius' sweetheart (Animula) who is winning his election for him." Other notices deal with ordinary business affairs—the finding of a strayed mare, a reward for the recovery of a stolen copper pot, and an additional reward for the capture of the thief; and advertisements of particular brands of wine, olives, fish-sauce, &c. Gladiatorial shows occupied the most prominent place in the thoughts of the people, and the walls are covered with countless references to them, advertisements and backing of favourites—e.g., "Twenty pairs of gladiators, provided by G. M. Rufus, will fight at Nola on May 1st, 2nd, and 3rd. There will be a killing of wild beasts. Awnings provided." None of the programmes, which were sold in advance, have survived, but in one case a spectator has copied the programme on the wall with notes as to the result; "V" means "won"; "P", "killed"; "M", "let off", as when the audience was in a good humour they turned up their thumbs to signify that the defeated man was not to be killed. The numbers after the name indicate the number of times the gladiator has fought before. Nero College was a gladiatorial school. A part of the programme was as follows:—

Thracian and Mirmillo

V. Pugnae. Nero College (3).

P. Murranus Nero College (3).

Heavy-armed and Thracian.

V. Cynus. Julian College (9).

M. Atticus. Julian College (14).

War Chariots.

M. P. Ostorius (51).

V. Scylax. Julian College (26).

It is a strange glimpse of the old heathen world when men gazed on public murder, for the gladiators were usually slaves and had no choice in the matter, as calmly as we look at a footrace or a jumping contest. It is a measure of what the faith of Christ has done for the world.

Some Books.

V.V's EYES.—By H. S. Harrison (Constable, London), is a remarkable and inspiring book. It tells the story of a young American doctor who devoted himself with absolute unselfishness to the service of the people. The indirect effect of his example on the life of a selfish young society lady is described with extraordinary cleverness, and though the theology is very nebulous the book is most stimulating and inspiring. A religious background of motive is apparently assumed, but it is nowhere expressed.

THE KINGDOM.—By Harold Goad (Heinemann). This is a very beautiful book, giving the spiritual experiences of a modern Franciscan at the convent of San Damiano, near Assisi, his early life, his spiritual struggles his final triumph. The author has so completely identified himself with Italian conditions that it is difficult to believe that it is not an Italian who is writing. The style is exquisite and the whole tone of the book delightful in these days, when so few novelists care to make a good, and so many only, a paying book.

VICTORIAN AGE IN LITERATURE.—By G. K. Chesterton, (Williams and Norgate, Home University Library 1s). This is a small but most delightful book. Mr Chesterton is of course paradoxical but generally sound. "The free-thinker who found himself outside the Victorian city, found himself in the fork of two very different naturalistic paths. One of them went up through a tangled but living forest to lonely but healthy hills; the other went down to a swamp. Hardy went down to botanise in the swamp while Meredith climbed towards the sun. Meredith became, at his best, a sort of daintily dressed Walt Whitman. Hardy became a sort of village atheist, brooding and blaspheming over the village idiot. It is largely because the free-thinkers as a school cannot make up their minds whether they want to be more optimist or more pessimist than Christianity that their small but sincere movement has failed." Of Mrs. Browning "Her real inferiority to him (Robert Browning) in literature is that he was consciously while she was unconsciously absurd." "It may be fun though it is not poetry to try rhyming to ranunculus; but even the fun presupposes that you do rhyme to it, and I will affirm and hold under persecution that "Tommy-make-room-for-your-uncle-us" does not rhyme to it." We advise all our readers to expend one shilling on this book.

MISSIONS.—By Mrs. Creighton. This is an excellent little book in the same series, and at the same cost as the previous book. There are interesting chapters on methods of mission work, women's work, the Moslem problem, the civilising work of missions, and the present opportunity. Mrs. Creighton is the widow of the late Bishop of London, and a recognised authority on social subjects.

VISIONS.—By Bishop Montgomery. S.P.C.K., 1/6. This little book is a continuation of the "Scripture Messages" published by the Bishop in 1906 and the first series of "Visions" published some three years ago; and it consists of papers which appeared in the "Mission Field." They show no diminution of power, although the Bishop has been writing them monthly for eleven years; and are direct pointed, and spiritually helpful.

Loss of Workers.

We have lost by death two most faithful missionary workers in this diocese.

On December 14th Mrs. Matthews died in Sydney after a long and painful illness extending over six months. Coming to the Mitchell River Mission as Miss Pick in September 1909, she worked devotedly both before and after her marriage to Mr. Matthews on September 14th, 1910, devoting herself especially to teaching and to the care of the young children. The work was often hard but she never complained. It had been arranged that she and Mr. Matthews should go for their furlough at the end of 1912, but at their own suggestion the furlough was postponed for a year, and before the time was up Mrs. Matthews became seriously ill that she had to come up to Thursday Island Hospital, and finally to go on to Sydney where she passed away after months of great pain borne with great patience and faith on Sunday December 14th. On the following day a service was held at Christ Church and was largely attended by many who had known and esteemed her. The Mitchell River Mission has suffered heavily from the loss of two such faithful workers as Mr. T. Woodd and Mrs. Matthews within a comparatively short space of time.

Deaconess Florence Griffiths Buchanan was known to a wider circle of friends and fellow workers. She had worked in the diocese for 18 years and was universally beloved. We have attempted some estimate of her life and character on another page, and will only say here that she has left a permanent mark on the diocese which will last as long as the generation that knew her wonderful unselfishness and her saintly labours. We are indeed privileged to have had such an one lent to us even for a time. She died in St. Helen's Hospital, Brisbane, after a most painful illness of three months, borne with her accustomed cheerfulness and patience on December 30th, a fortnight after Mrs. Matthews, and after a service at St. John's Cathedral was buried in Toowong cemetery, in the grave formerly occupied by the body of the late Bishop of Brisbane, Dr. Webber, whose remains were afterwards transferred to the Cathedral. The workers pass but the work goes on, and we who remain should be stimulated and strengthened by the noble examples of faithfulness unto death which have been set before us.

The Samaritan Pentateuch.

An interesting paper was read by Rev. J. Ivorach Munro at a late meeting of the Victoria Institute on the Samaritan Pentateuch.

It is clear from examination of the documents that the Samaritan Pentateuch was received by the Samaritan colonists in or about the time of Hezekiah. From this fact arise various noteworthy results. In the first place it is written in ancient Hebrew characters exactly like those of the Moabite Stone; in the second place, it has clearly undergone a drastic revision, and it was also translated into the Samaritan dialect. The great Hebrew scholar Gesenius has proved that the Samaritan Pentateuch has been thoroughly revised grammatically, and the Hebrew to which it is brought up is the Hebrew of the time of Hezekiah. These facts agree with the reception by the Samaritan Colonists of this copy of the Law when the priest was sent from the exiles to Samaria to teach them "The manner of the God of the land." There is no assignable reason for the Samaritans revising their Pentateuch if they had received it after the return of the Jews from exile in B.C. 527. If they did revise it, why should they have revised it to the Hebrew of Hezekiah's time 200 years before?

The real and adequate reason for the revision lies in the appeal of the Samaritan Colonists to the Assyrian King. We may be sure that before appealing to him every effort had been made to secure the appeasement of the God of the land. We know that the Pentateuch existed in the northern kingdom, and the Samaritans were able to procure a copy, but to their mind it was not authentic or good enough, because the lions were as bad as ever, and the revised copy, brought up to date in its Hebrew grammar, was the result. The lions did disappear, and no doubt the new version was given much of the credit and became in the opinion of the Samaritans far better than the old and authentic version which it supplanted. The translation into the Samaritan dialect is also very interesting since a study of it shows that its date was very early. If these facts are correct they give a serious blow to the theory of the "higher" critics, that the Pentateuch was composed in post-exilic times, for we find it in common use and being revised and translated 200 years before the first of the exiles returned from captivity.

We propose to give in this and following numbers a brief history of the Diocese from 1900-1910, as events of real interest soon become forgotten.

The Diocese owes its existence to the efforts of Bishop Barlow, the present Bishop of Goulburn, and at that time Bishop of North Queensland. He collected chiefly in England a sum of £10,000 which produced an income of £300. This was all the income of the diocese until a few years ago when gifts from the Pan-Anglican Committee and other sources raised it to slightly over £400. When we remember that all the Bishop's travelling expenses have to be met out of this sum it cannot be said to be excessive.

The present Bishop of Carpentaria was at the time, and had been for many years, Archdeacon of North Queensland, and in November, 1899, he was nominated by the Primate as Bishop of the new see. Soon after and before the nomination was made public it was discovered that the primate had not the power to nominate until it was formally conferred on him by the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland. This meant considerable delay, as the Synod did not meet until August 2nd; when a canon was passed constituting the Diocese and placing the nomination of the first Bishop in the hands of the Primate. The consecration of the Bishop followed almost immediately on St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24th, at the great Missionary Jubilee gathering in Sydney, and 19 Bishops took part in the service. The Bishop spent September and October in appealing for funds, for the new Diocese lost all grants and endowments which it had enjoyed as part of the Diocese of North Queensland, and especially in appealing for means to start a Diocese Training College for clergy, as it was obvious that the supply of clergy would be one of the great difficulties of the new Diocese.

The Bishop was installed on Sunday, November 18th by Ven. Archdeacon Pritt, M.A., representing the Bishop of North Queensland. The Bishop of New Guinea, Lord Beauchamp, and Mr. Le Hunte, Governor, were to have been present, but unfortunately their boat was not signalled until after the service had begun.

Before the installation a public meeting of parishioners was held and an agreement come to as to the parochial and diocesan sides of work in Thursday Island. It was resolved that the Quetta Memorial Church should become the Cathedral and that the Bishop should be Dean and appoint a subdean to have parochial charge.

Immediately after the installation Lord Beauchamp made the proposed college for training clergy a practical possibility by generously contributing £150 a year for three years for the purpose, and subsequently renewing his gift from time to time. The college lasted for seven years and did good work, but when a Parochial Training College was founded at Nundah it seemed more loyal to the province and better for the men themselves to transfer the students to the new and larger institution.

At the time of the Bishop's installation there were four clergy working in the Diocese, namely: Rev. R. W. Thomas at Thursday Island, Rev. H. L. Curtis at Croydon, Rev. F. Barton at Mossman, and Rev. E. E. Grabham at Cooktown. All these with the single exception of Mr. Curtis were under engagement to leave immediately for the Diocese of North Queensland; so that work began with practically but one priest. A Church School was started at Thursday Island under a capable teacher, Miss Smith, but it did not receive sufficient support to make it possible to carry it on. The effort was repeated six years later but again failed from the same cause. The Bishop appointed as the first Subdean Rev. W. P. Glover, Diocesan Registrar for the Diocese of Grafton and Armidale, and now rector of Warwick. Mr. Glover arrived at Thursday Island early in April, 1901.

Early in the year the Bishop visited Port Darwin, when no services of our Church had been held for twelve years. The people immediately organised lay services and continued them for twelve months until it was possible to send a priest.

Herald's Book.

We have received a copy of the "Heralds of the King Book of Prayer and Praise" for use at children's missionary services and meetings. It contains a good selection of hymns besides services of admission and special litany, Missionary Service and Service of Thanksgiving and intercession. We heartily commend this little book.

Deaconess Buchanan.

AN APPRECIATION OF THE BISHOP OF CARPENTARIA.

The outward facts of the life of Florence Griffiths Buchanan are soon told. She was born at Canterbury on September 16th, 1861, and was the youngest child of Captain Buchanan of the 93rd Highlanders. In 1882 she came out to her brother in Bundaberg and became interested in the work done among the South Sea Islanders by Miss Young of Fairymead. She returned to England in the following year, but finding the climate too cold resided at Malta and in Egypt. She returned to Bundaberg in 1887 and at once resumed her work among the islanders on her brother's plantation and elsewhere. Here a terrible riding accident left her maimed and crippled, and subject to the most terrible pains and headaches for the rest of her life.

She left Bundaberg after the great flood of 1893 when she was rescued from her cottage when it was nearly submerged, and came up to Thursday Island and began her work here among the South Sea Islanders in 1894. Her work was not confined to the islanders, but she was always ready to help in every good work that was going on in the parish, and from this time to her death, 19 years later, she devoted herself entirely at her own cost to the service of the church in the far north, except for short intervals occasioned by sickness. On the creation of the Diocese of Carpentaria she withdrew from a punctilious fear of forcing her services on the new Bishop, but immediately returned at his request and resumed her work.

On January 5th, 1908, she was ordained Deaconess by the Bishop of Carpentaria, and later in the same year she undertook at the request of the Administrator, during the Bishop's absence in England, the charge of the new mission at Moa, where she did most splendid work both as teacher and superintendent. Three years later, the Bishop, feeling that the work was beyond her strength, asked her to resign it, and lent her for some months to the Diocese of Singapore which was in great straits for a temporary helper. On her return she worked at Darwin, winning the hearts of all, until during a visit to Brisbane for the Church Congress the last fatal illness came upon her, and she died in her 53rd year after a lingering illness of some months in which terrible pain was borne with extraordinary courage and patience.

It so happened that when the telegram about her illness reached me with its unexpected and overwhelming news I had just laid down Baron Von Hugel's great study of St. Catherine of Genoa, and the coincidence deepened in my mind the impression formed many years ago that the Deaconess was in very many ways to be compared with the great women saints of the mediaeval church. She had a psycho-physical nature and outward appearance rare at the present day, and her character was as uncommon as it was stimulating and inspiring.

There are not a few striking points of likeness to St. Catherine. There was the same frail body compelled to obedience by the imperious soul but revenging itself by occasional fits of utter prostration; there was the same life of constant unremitting service of the sick and suffering whether in body or soul, the same consecrated life independent of any community or religious order, and the same sturdy independence of character which made Catherine dispense with a spiritual director for the greater part of her life, the same extraordinary influence on those who surrounded her, the same teaching by conversation and example rather than by any formal address or written statement.

When we reflect on this life of singular beauty and extraordinary usefulness we are struck by the following characteristics:

1. The well nigh absolute mastery of the soul over the small and fragile body marred and crushed by her terrible accident. She suffered from tubercular disease of the foot and walking was always pain and not seldom agony, and she was ever on foot, walking long distances to visit those who needed her help. Her headaches would at times grow so acute that any movement or any word was im-supported by who knows what power from on high.

3. Perhaps the most obvious feature of her character was her wonderful sympathy and thoughtfulness for others, and the winning magnetic force which sprang from the forgetfulness of self.

All who came within reach of her influence became her devoted servants; ready and willing to do anything for her. It mattered not who they were, pilots and seamen, wharf labourers and draymen; high officials, and heedless girls, overburdened and sometimes short tempered mothers, children of all ages, Japanese, South Sea Islanders and men of every nationality, all found in her someone to trust and love, someone who seemed in each individual case to regard them with special care and affection, someone who always remembered and marked the special occasions and anniversary of their lives. It was this particular and individual care that gave her such a wide-reaching personal influence.

4. This affection for all who needed her care in no way blinded her to their faults and failings. She had a robust intellectual keenness which saw through all attempts at fraud or imposition, and enabled her to form cool and independent judgments. While she had an invincible optimism of heart and of hope she had none of the blind zeal which overlooks difficulties that ought to be faced, and trust to good fortune instead of to prudent preparation. Every detail of a proposed scheme was studied, and every possibility carefully considered. She had tremendous faith but her insight into men and things was too keen to allow of false hopes or rash experiments.

5. One of her most delightful characteristics was her keen and unquenchable sense of humour. Humour is a most blessed gift of God and she had it in full measure. She could smile without a trace of malice, or of bitterness at the exasperating weaknesses and follies of those among whom she worked, and at her own pains and sufferings, as with St. Francis the eager soul would deride the slowness and incapacity of "brother body" and then smile at itself for its impatience. There was never the least touch of sarcasm or wounding in her bright humour, but her ever ready smile and playful jest will ever remain one of the happiest memories of her friends.

6. She had a rare and most remarkable talent for teaching. It was probably as a teacher that her best work was done, and it was by a true instinct that the Moa people gave her at once the title of "Teusher." Whether during the many years during which she conducted South Sea Island classes, during the years at Moa with its regular school duties, or teaching her little school of white children at Darwin she was pre-eminently gifted with the power of attracting and holding the attention of her hearers, and of conveying the truth to them in language so simple, so clear, so full of homely yet piquant illustrations that the impression made was seldom if ever effaced. To hear her give a lesson was to hear the art of teaching carried to a point of well nigh

7. No doubt the marvellous winningness and personal magnetism had something to do with her success as a teacher. It was impossible to be in her company without being drawn to her. The mobile pain-drawn face, the great spiritual eyes, the frail little body dressed always in the plainest uniform, were but some of the outward marks of the tremendous energy, the unconquerable will and the ever-present purpose behind all that one saw. Few indeed could resist the appeal of a personality so fitted to soar to the loftiest heights and so cruelly bound to a feeble frame.

8. It was impossible not to feel that her life was dominated by a supreme purpose, a purpose which forbade her to avail herself of that personal ease and comfort which were within her reach and ever drove her forth into new fields of active and laborious service. Her personal path was simple and evangelical, her great purpose in life, like that of her Master, was to seek and to save those that were lost and to lead the young into the way of life. She allowed herself little if any rest or recreation. "Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business?" was the unexpressed but silently determined response to every effort to induce her to spare herself; a thought so dominant that every other consideration gave way before it. Duty towards God, duty towards her neighbour, these two thoughts were supreme. It was not that she did not feel the loneliness and the weariness, the pain and exhaustion of her work. She did feel these very keenly, at times almost overwhelmingly, but her resolution and courage were so great that they were never allowed to deflect her from her purpose.

9. It is almost needless to add that such a soul as this was distinguished by an innate clearness and purity and by a close and constant communion with God. One may picture the smile with which, her painful illness borne to the end with her accustomed patience. ("It is good to suffer" she said during her last illness), she entered at last into the land of the divine presence.

By one of those associations which we scarcely care to call coincidences, the following words formed part of the second lesson for the day on which God called her to himself, "God will dwell with them and they shall be his people, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away."

The world is the richer that she has lived in it, but we, O, so much the poorer that she is gone from it!

Her memory will ever live among those who loved her as that of the tenderest and most beautiful spirit imprisoned for a time in the body, but ever eager to seek its true home in the presence-chamber of God.

Students Ordained.

At the last examination for the Th.L. degree Mr. Cyril Massey, Carpentaria Diocesan student, obtained a first class and Mr. John P. Parker a pass. In St. John's Cathedral, Brisbane, on Advent Sunday Rev. C. Hall, one of our late students, was ordained priest and licensed as assistant curate to St. John's, Dalby, until he comes to his work in this Diocese. Mr. Cyril Massey was ordained deacon on the same day and licensed as assistant curate to St. Luke's, Toowoomba, and Mr. J. P. Parker was ordained deacon and licensed as assistant at St. Thomas', Toowoong. These two gentlemen will receive two years' further training in the Brisbane Diocese before coming North.

The Mitchell River Mission.

The Francis Pritt which left Thursday Island on December 6th, had a quick though somewhat rough passage down to the Mitchell, and landed Miss Grimes and Mr. West safely on December 11th. Miss Grimes writes most cheerfully of her work and of the mission, and the other members of the staff write of the great help and relief afforded by Miss Grimes' arrival. The overland mail has been for the present discontinued as the Government can find no one to carry it for the absurdly small sum allowed.

Mr. Lane writes: The boat arrived at Ebenezer, (the landing three miles from the mission), about 3 p.m. on December 12th, and all the available mission folk, buggy and dray, met her and carried cargo and stores. Next day, supplemented by 75 bush natives, we made two trips and left only a dray and buggy load of stores for Monday morning. Our thankfulness for the help of Miss Grimes may be imagined. Bendigo seems better, and suffers no pain. The transition between the dry weather and the beginning of the wet tried us a good deal. Miss Matthews is better again, John Savo has not been well but is coming round. The common-room building has been roofed with iron, also the school and boys' dormitory. Most of the married people's houses have been rethatched with cabbage tree palm. We hope to finish this in a fortnight. A fair amount of ploughing has been done, but we must get in vegetable seeds, cassava cuttings and sweet potatoes as soon as possible. There is a chance of selling some bullocks and unproductive cows while the market price is good, and we are strongly advised to do this.

Miss Grimes writes: "On the whole we had a good voyage. On Tuesday it was very rough and a high wind and very heavy storm at night. Tom and Jack were greatly relieved next morning that we had got through it all right. I like being here very much and already feel quite at home, and as if I had been here quite a long time instead of only five days. The weather is not exactly comfortable, but I suppose I shall get used to that. Every morning after breakfast I see to the patients until 10 o'clock, and again at 5 p.m. if necessary until church time. Last Sunday as there were so many heathen round here Mr. Lane sent word round to them to ask them to come to the service to be held outside the Church at 6 p.m. It was so nice to see such a large number. There must have been over 300 present including the Christians, and one of the men interpreted for Mr. Lane."

It will probably be the end of March before we get any further news. Mr. Matthews has gone to Victoria to see his mother and for a rest after his trying experiences. He hopes to arrive at Thursday Island on March 17th on his way back to the mission.

Jim.

In every direction stretched the bare down with its covering of pale, dry grass; near the brown earth showed through the tussocks, far off all was one sheet of yellow away to the horizon, where the mirage showed broad sheets of water and lines of shady trees. The road was hidden in clouds of dust from the feet of the 20,000 travelling sheep that spread out far over the grass. The sheep were not feeding but travelling restlessly. They had had no water the previous day, and they had already gone far in the hot sun. The sheep did not know what the drovers did—that there was a waterhole three miles ahead. There were only three men, one on horseback and two on foot, and they were tired and jaded. As they tramped silently and sullenly along in the blazing sun, Jim—Karundera Jim—he had no other name that anyone knew, was reflecting bitterly on what life had brought him. He had been "knocking about" the district all his life. He had never known any motive strong enough to induce him to save, and had squandered his earnings as openhandedly as they came. His religious training had been nil. He had read the sermons in a weekly southern paper when every other item of news had been exhausted. He had attended one or two services, when a clergyman had visited a station or shearing shed. He had occasionally stood outside for half-an-hour on a similar occasion in a little bush township. He had some considerable experience of men—not always the best men—and their ways; and had formed such a creed as he had been able. It would have run somewhat as follows, had it ever been put in words or even consciously thought out: "I believe in a God somewhere or other who favours good rather than evil, and I don't believe he will be very hard on a poor chap that knows very little. I believe all religions are alike and mostly humbug, though there are some real good religious people here and there. I believe in helping your fellow-men all you can unless they are Chinamen or aliens, and they are all poison. I don't believe there is any harm in a bit of a spree, but men who live only for drink and women are fools, and some I know are beasts too. I believe that when I have been trusted with a piece of work to do I ought to do it at all costs, but I am very glad when it is over." His creed had somehow not brought him much satisfaction in life, but he did not blame his creed. It is doubtful whether he knew that he had one, though if you asked him his religion I believe he would answer "Church of England," because he had heard his mother speak of the old church at home.

Suddenly his attention was arrested. The foremost sheep had come to a dry creek and maddened by thirst had commenced to run down it. Jim shouted to the man on the horse but it was too late, sheep after sheep joined in and soon the whole 20,000 were they found Jim, fallen forward on his face, dead. I do not know his real name, but whenever I think of Jim I remember those old words, "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." Men will be judged with a just judgment and we cannot believe that Jim's faithfulness will be forgotten in the day when men will be judged, not according to the opportunities they have not had, but according to those which they have had. Far away under the Western sun he lies forgotten and unknown, but his deed lives among the many heroisms of the bush that never find a chronicle.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop left Thursday Island by the Suva on February 2nd, on a visit to the south of Queensland, partly for the purpose of holiday and partly to fulfil a promise to take confirmations etc. for the Archbishop of Brisbane.

On arrival at Brisbane after a short visit to Canon Pattinson he went out to Esk and spent a week Mr. Nigel Buchanan, the brother of the late Deaconess Buchanan. On his return to Brisbane he went for a fortnight's holiday to the Tambourine Mountain and much enjoyed the beautiful scenery, fresh air and numerous rare and beautiful birds that abound in the scrubs. Returning to Brisbane he stayed for a week with Archdeacon Le Fanu, taking some confirmations and presiding at the profession of a new sister of the community of the Sacred Advent. On March 14th he went to Rockhampton to visit the Bishop, and addressed a large missionary meeting on work among the aborigines on Tuesday 17th, and on Sunday 22nd he preached at North Rockhampton and in the evening at the Cathedral. On Sunday afternoon he addressed the girls at the Church Hostel, and on Tuesday afternoon the girls at the Girls' Grammar School. On the following day he left for Townsville by the s.s. Bombala, and on Sunday he preached at St. James Cathedral, in the morning and St. Peter's Church in the afternoon and evening. On the next day he left by the Musgrave and travelled to Cairns where he was met by the Yarrabah launch, and paid a visit to the mission, returning to Cairns next day and travelling overland to Mount Carbine, where he arrived on April 3rd. Services were held at Mount Carbine on Sunday and at Mount Molloy on Tuesday. On Wednesday he drove down the range to Mossman, where he held a confirmation of 8 male and 8 female candidates, five of the male and three of the female candidates being adults. The little temporary Church was crowded and the service most hearty. On Good Friday the Bishop preached at Morning and at Evening Prayer. The services were much better attended than in previous years, the large proportion of men being noteworthy, and the singing excellent. On Easter Eve the Bishop conducted a service of Preparation. Easter Day began with a very bright and happy celebration of Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m. The singing was excellent, and there were 41 communicants of whom nearly half were adult men. The Church was filled again for the second celebration at 10 a.m. at which several were present from the country farms. The rector should be greatly encouraged at the response to his long and faithful labours among his people. The Bishop preached at the Morning and Evening Services and left on Monday for Port Douglas where he preached at Evensong and celebrated Holy Communion next morning leaving at 10 a.m. for Cooktown.

On Thursday evening he held a Confirmation at Cooktown at which 12 male and 8 female candidates were presented by Rev. L. Ayscough. The service was very hearty, and there was a good congregation in spite of the threatening weather. After the service the Bishop met the members of the Parochial Council at the Rectory. Rev. L. Ayscough announced that the period of three years service with the diocese was up at the end of the year, but, that with the Bishop's approval he had decided to stay on for the present. The members of the Council expressed their satisfaction. On Friday evening the Bishop took a Service of Preparation for Holy Communion and on Sunday morning celebrated and preached, leaving at night by the Aramac for Thursday Island.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishops House on Thursday, April 30th at 5 p.m. Present: The Bishop in the chair, Rev. the Subdean, Messrs. Lee Bryce, Mackenzie and Sullivan.

Mr. Mackenzie reported that £120 6s. 11d. had been contributed towards the funds for the second aisle of the Cathedral and £74 3s. 1d. towards the Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Fund. Plans were considered for a superintendent's house at Moa in place of the grass house at present in use and it was estimated that the materials would come to about £180 exclusive of the cost of erection. It was resolved to contribute £100 from the diocese towards the cost of the house.

It was resolved to obtain a tender for the completion of the aisle of the Cathedral and that the diocese contribute £50 towards the work. Messrs. Lee Bryce and Mackenzie were appointed a building sub-committee.

It was resolved to proceed with the matter of the Deaconess Buchanan Memorial window as soon as the plans arrived from England; and to hold over the matter of the hospital until the subscription list had been completed. It was stated that of the money received, £45, was without special direction, £2 10s. for the window and £26 for the hospital. After deducting the probable cost of the window about £40 would remain towards the hospital, the cost of which would be at least £140. Mr. Lee Bryce was authorised to sign diocesan cheques in place of the Bishop during his absence. The meeting then terminated.

New Window.

A number of officers of the Bank of New South Wales have asked permission to erect a window in the Quetta Memorial Cathedral to the memory of Mr. Archer, who was inspector of the bank, and who was lost in the Quetta. It is probable that a window will be erected to match that to be erected to the memory of Deaconess Buchanan at the west end of the Cathedral.

Giving.

The Archbishop of the West Indies writing lately of the coloured churchpeople of Jamaica, says:

"As regards ordinary parochial work, and maintenance of the clergy, the Jamaica Church is mainly self-supporting. With the exception of the very poor, and persons out of employment who are specially exempt, the rule of the Church is that men and women contribute 3d. weekly, and this rule is very generally complied with, even though the cash weekly earnings of Church-members frequently amounts to no more than 10s., from which all family expenses must be met. In the case of women earning a small wage it is considered sufficient if they contribute 6d. a month. This is in addition to what may be given in the weekly Church collections."

This (with the exception of the amount which ought to be at least four times as great, as the wages are more than four times as large), is precisely the scheme which the Bishop of this diocese has been urging in vain on the Churchwardens for the last twelve years. It is the only method of sound finance, and it is very humiliating to find the despised negro willing to make sacrifices and show method and regularity in his support of his Church, when the superior Australian will not even hear of anything that imposes the slightest restraint or implies any acknowledgement of duty.

War.

We have received a pamphlet from an excellent member of the Society of Friends containing an attack on the Australian system of National Training for Defence. As usual, however, no practical suggestions are made as to the way in which aggression is to be met. We realise the horrors of war, we hate the very thought of an aggressive war, a war of hate and revenge, a war of greed and ambition, as strongly as any Quaker can do, but what is to be done if your neighbour wantonly attacks you?

"It ought to be easy to settle all international questions by arbitration." No doubt it should, and it is being increasingly done, but though the dog may arbitrate with the wolf, it is not easy for the lamb to arbitrate with either.

You may arbitrate with a burglar; you may agree with him that if he leaves your property alone you will put no hindrances in the way of his speedy retreat from your home, but you can only arbitrate with any prospect or success if you have an effective weapon in your hand. If the burglar happens to have a revolver and you have none the odds are that your goods will go with him in spite of your well-meant efforts at arbitration, and it is quite possible that you will be left unconscious of your loss—or anything else.

The suffragette war in England is an example of the policy of non-resistance. The people of England, or at least the Government of England, which is not quite the same thing, has apparently decided that a woman who commits criminal acts for a political purpose is not to be punished, or if punished at all that she is to be liberated after a few days imprisonment of the least rigorous kind. Are the suffragettes grateful for this leniency? Do they cease their attacks on the property, or cease to risk the lives of innocent persons? Not at all. Their bitterness and recklessness grows until we are told that last year they caused fire which did £250,000 worth of damage.

Nor would it help matters to grant their particular demands, which may or may not be right. There is no security that these women will stop methods of violence when they have gained the suffrage. The method will be applied to the next thing that they choose to demand and so on until either everything must be yielded to mob violence, or else the community is driven to protect itself by returning war for war.

No doubt the ever-growing armaments are an almost intolerable burden, though it is not clear that they tend to encourage war, for there has been no war between two great European nations for nearly fifty years. What is clear is that the larger nations fear to go to war unless they are sure that they are stronger than their opponents. It ought not to be impossible to limit armaments by mutual understandings. Great Britain has tried more than once to do so, and may yet succeed, but it is at least arguable that to allow yourself to become much weaker than an ambitious neighbour is the way to precipitate, not to avoid, war.

As Christians we are bound to avoid war by every honourable means in our power, but until someone explains to us how we are to act towards the wantonly aggressive invader, not in vague generalities but in a detailed practical manner, we shall do well to stick to our Defence Act.

It is a hard fact, but if we throw down our arms we lose the power to arbitrate. It is possible that we ought literally to carry out Christ's command to turn the other cheek, and to give up our very clothes to the invader or marauder, possible though not at all probable, and it is possible that if we had the faith to do it we should not suffer, but can we honestly say that we are prepared to do this, to accept a conquering force, to live as slaves under a foreign despotism, to give our wives and children to the enemy's pleasure. If we are not prepared to take this course and trust absolutely to the divine protection to rescue us, then we must learn to protect ourselves, and if we are to protect ourselves in God's name let us do it thoroughly or we shall rue it.

A Mute Inglorious Milton.

He was a journeyman baker. He went to work at 5 p.m., and it sometimes happened that he was lucky enough to get off at 5 a.m., more usually it was six, seven, or eight in the morning. When he came home he went to bed in the little room of the wooden shed in the boarding-house yard which he shared with a mate; a partition seven feet high separated it from the next room and above was the unlined roof. The noise was continuous. A slatternly maid carried on a conversation with the inmate of a room at the further end, drunken men woke up with many oaths, impatient horses rubbed against the veranda post shaking the whole place, aboriginal hewers of wood and drawers of water screamed at one another, the sun grew hotter and hotter until the room was like the oven he had just left. Flies and mosquitoes streamed in through the ragged net and nearly drove him wild. The whole place was inexpressibly sordid and miserable. He tossed through the heat of a tropical summer day, got a miserable meal of half-cold scraps from a sleepy maid, and went blinking back to work.

He had been following the same round since he had gone to work seven years before. On Friday night he worked eighteen hours, and was too tired to be thankful that he had one night a week in bed. He might have gone for a walk on Sunday but there was nowhere to go. The mining township was inexpressibly dreary. Every tree for miles round had been cut down for fuel. Heaps of stone, gaunt machinery and ridges of arsenical dust made up the views, so he went to the nearest hotel by the back door, the front being demurely closed, and spent the day with a few choice spirits, declaring against society, religion, capital, morals and everything else good, bad, or indifferent. He got good wages but had never anything to spare except for his needs. Yet the man was a poet. Unknown to even his room mate he wrote strange wild lyrics full of bad grammar and worse spelling, but instinct with natural power. His visits to the hotel grew less frequent. Sunday was spent in writing and re-writing his treasured verses. He compared them anxiously with the effusions in the poet's corner of the "Dustyville Digger" and they seemed to be altogether different. Was he a genius? he asked himself. Was it possible that he, a bakehouse drudge, was going to astonish the world, to triumph by his innate power over priests and bank managers, over capitalists and society, over that rank hypocrisy which was called religion? The longer he brooded the stronger grew his certainty, but how to obtain an independent verdict, how be sure he was not deceiving himself? He gathered together his papers, dressed with care, and repaired to the office of the great man of Dustyville, the editor of the "Dustyville Digger." He was sufficiently free from prejudices in favour of religion or morality, and he sold his paper by its vigorous abuse. And was he not a judge of poetry? Did he not admit or exclude it from his columns at will? The great man took the sheets and glancing at them burst into a roar of laughter. "You'd better take them round to Ah Gow the grocer. He may give you a penny for the lot and use them to wrap up the stinking fish he sells to his countrymen." The baker took the papers back, walked quietly home, opened a box, took out a cheap revolver and, pointing it at his breast, pulled the trigger.

When he recovered consciousness he was lying in bed in his room with a big bandage round his chest and a burly policeman sitting beside the bed; then the scene changed as if by magic. He stood on a great mountain peak in the early dawn, and saw the rosy light flush and spread in ever-growing glory. He swept like a disembodied spirit over the ocean, and watched it in all its moods as it shimmered pearly soft in the sun, or wantoned in the breeze, or growled and raged in the fury of the storm. He walked through enchanted forests where the ground was a carpet of flowers and the nightingale sang in the branches. He dived beneath the sea and walked through caves of coral where the crimson parrot fish darted like birds through the red and yellow trees of seaweed; then he passed through the cities of men and heard their talk and watched their ways, so it seemed, day after day; he read the works of the great men of old, and the outpourings of the modern poet's art; he trod unseen through crowded court and quiet village, and watched with eager eye the play of human life, the mystery and the pathos, till he felt his whole being swell with wonder and love, and he longed to pour out his soul in song. It seemed to be a lifetime since he had thought the complacent editor of a mining newspaper an infallible judge of poetry. His own verses seemed to him indeed unspeakably crude and narrow, but he knew now what poetry was, he knew that he had within himself a poet's power, and he said aloud, "I will write such a song of life and death as men have never heard before." "Not so," said a quiet voice. "God has given thee back the life thou wouldest have presumptuously taken. Go back and learn, and one day perchance thou mayest obtain."

Once more the narrow bed, the iron roof and the stolid policeman stifling a yawn. He slowly recovered health and escaped punishment on the ground of the sufferings he had gone through. He returned to the bakery quiet and subdued. His soul was filled with lofty thoughts which clothed themselves in his mind with magnificent language, but he could not write one line of poetry, or put into articulate words the dreams that surged within him. He went no more to the bar nor did he often leave the town. All his spare time was spent in watching with eager eyes the human life around him. He was strangely patient and sympathetic, and his wages were more sufficient than before, for they flowed in many a stream of unknown charity. He lived nearly five years with gradually declining strength, gently tended towards the end by one or two who loved him deeply—they hardly knew why. He scarcely ever spoke, and never of himself until shortly before his death, when he suddenly cried, "The fire is kindled. I can speak with my tongue." But he spoke no more and he died and was buried, and none the wiser; but in the other world they said "A new poet has entered upon the work of his life."

Some Books.

MARRIAGE.—By Mr. H. G. Wells. This is a remarkable book, and more remarkable as coming from Mr. Wells, whose views of marriage have not always had the inspiring note which distinguishes this book. It is also free from the coarseness which has disfigured some of Mr. Wells' later novels. The story is briefly this: Maror (ie, a young and beautiful woman, belonging to a large family in somewhat straitened circumstances, is on the point of marrying a wealthy suitor whom she does not love, when the ideal man, Trafford, a young professor of physics, appears dramatically on the scene. They marry and for a while are blissfully happy. Then Trafford discovers that his wife is extravagant in her tastes, and after two years of indecision he gives up for her the work of research to which he is devoted and in which he is brilliantly successful and turns to money making. They become wealthy and fashionable, but neither are happy, and after some years of luxury they go off together to spend a year in a lonely hut in the wilds of Labrador, in order that they may try to find out the true meaning of life and if it may be found God. In the privations and dangers of primitive life they are drawn together into a perfect sympathy which they never felt before, and go back to devote their lives to higher things in the service of man and if it may be of God. There is of course much to criticise. Mr. Wells does not look at things from a Christian point of view, and he indulges in a few cheap sneers, but he upholds a noble ideal of what married life ought to be, and he draws a scathing picture of modern life untouched by ideals of service and spiritual ends. There is much to be learnt from the book apart from its interest as a story and the clever touches which always mark Mr. Wells' work.

SCOTT'S LAST JOURNALS.—These have been so widely read and reviewed that we do not propose to comment on the noble story of strong purpose, patient endurance, and loyalty of man to man. They form a page of our national history which will never be forgotten, but it is worth noting that Scott, Wilson, Cherry, Gardard and others were firm believers in Divine guidance and providence. The will of God was with them an ever-constant thought and lent reality to the church services which were so regularly held during the expedition.

FATHER PAUL.—By Gerald O'Donovan, (Macmillans). This is a well written and striking book. It treats of the life and training of a modern Irish priest up to the point at which he finds himself driven out of the Church for the very mildest of modernist opinions. The writer who seems to be a sincere Roman Catholic, and who writes more in sorrow than in anger draws a terrible picture of the inefficiency and ignorance of Maynooth and still more the diocesan seminaries, and the priests appear in a very unfavourable light with certain exceptions which shine like stars out of the surrounding darkness. The Church is represented as sucking the life from the people, as allied closely with the publican and the gombeen man, or petty moneylender, as erecting huge buildings with ill-gotten money but as caring little for spiritual things. If one half of what this book says is true we do not wonder at the Ulster fear of Home Rule. The importance of the book is that it is not written from the outside Protestant point of view but from that of one who knows and loves the Church, and deplores its loss of its own ideals. By a curious blunder which seems inconsistent with the knowledge elsewhere displayed the author makes the father of Paul contemplate his marriage to his cousin. We cannot believe that the proportion of faithful priests is so small as this book assumes it to be, and the Bishop is surely too odious to be natural.

CHANCE.—By Joseph Conrad (Methuen's). Those who have read "Typhoon" will be prepared to believe in Mr. Conrad's extraordinary faculty for delineating character and motive, but he has never written anything to equal this amazingly clever book. The knight of the sea, Captain Anthony, the luckless Flora, the selfish old scoundrel De Barral, the frank sailors Powell and Franklin, the aloofly inquisitive Marlow, the ultra serious, well-meaning and hopelessly unattractive feminists Mr and Mrs Tynes, the vindictive governess, all stand out before us with a weird intensity that is almost terrifying. The story comes out in an odd disjointed impersonal kind of way just as stories emerge by degrees in real life. There is only one incident in the way of plot, but the attention is chained from beginning to end by the intensity of the psychological interest, and the subtle unfolding of motive.

CHILD OF THE DAWN.—By Arthur C. Benson. This book contains Mr. Arthur Benson's ideas on the subject of immortality. They are very wild indeed. He says that he is an earnest believer in God but he omits from his story all references to Christianity apparently from a needless fear of compromising it. There are passages of power and beauty and others of extreme bathos, and we fear we must say vulgarity. He bases all his ideas of heaven on the theory of the transmigration of souls, although he says in the preface that he does not believe in it literally. We prefer the wild flights of Monsignor Benson who has at least definite convictions and is supercilious only towards members of the Church to which he once belonged.

The Nationality of David.

Mr. Houston Chamberlain in his remarkable book "The Foundations of the Nineteenth Century" has some interesting remarks on the Nationality of David, and of our Lord. He points out that the purely Jewish race was a comparatively small body, centred in Jerusalem and much less numerous than the Jew by religion. The older inhabitants of Palestine were not exterminated by the Jews but lived on and were in part mingled with them, the Jews adopting the practice they still retain, of marrying their daughters freely to strangers, but never allowing their sons to marry any but a full-blooded Jewess. Among the most prominent of the older inhabitants were the Amorites, tall, fair, blue eyed men of a ruddy complexion from the north (the sons of Anak) and the Gittites who formed the best soldiers of David's body guard. Both these tribes were of European origin, and are represented on monuments with entirely European features. The district of Bethlehem was known to have been thickly populated by Amorites, and it is not impossible that David had an Amorite mother. His ruddy complexion and the peculiarities of his character, his daring spirit of adventure, his carelessness, his generosity and play of fancy, all seem to distinguish him from the genuine Jew. It is noteworthy that he was on good terms with the Philistines who were hated by the pure Jew. A portrait of a grandson of David's on one of the Egyptian monuments shows an Amorite type of face.

With regard to our Lord Mr. Chamberlain points out that the inhabitants of Galilee were only Jews by religion not by race. Indeed not long before one of the Maccabean leaders had gathered all the Jews by race out of Galilee and transplanted them to Jerusalem.

We do not know to what extent Mr. Chamberlain's positions are tenable (and from some of them we strongly dissent), but he supports them with a massive weight of learning and they are worthy of fuller investigation.

The above considerations are only incidental to the general argument of Mr. Chamberlain's book to which we shall refer in a later number.

Eternal Life.

Eternal life is just to know
The only truth on earth below,
The only hope in heaven above,
The only source of lasting love.

Eternal life makes values plain,
And turns to dross our earthly gain,
It unifies the heart's desire,
And fills the lukewarm soul with fire.

Eternal life is having here
The vision of the Godhead clear:
To him who sees the central Sun
The future and the past are one.

Eternal life is living so
That God is all we want to know,
And all we meet of good or ill
Is welcome just because His will.

Eternal life is knowing Christ,
And keeping with him deathless trust;
A dying day by day to "Mine,"
A living evermore to "Thine"

Eternal life is just to see
What was and is, and is to be;
To find in God eternal peace,
And in His love from self to cease.

Is a Revival Probable.

There are not a few signs that the present wave of religious indifference is in some directions at least beginning to spend its force, and there are grounds for hope that another ten or fifteen years may see a remarkable revival of faith and religious observance. It is somewhat remarkable that so far as our own Church is concerned a spiritual revival has taken place at or about the end of the first quarter of each of the last four centuries.

In 1520 Luther burnt the Pope's Bull, and a few years later there began in England that strange mixture of good and evil which we call the reformation.

One of the evil results was a reaction not only against the abuses of the old system but against all order and decency in worship, and a studied neglect of the externals of religion which was too often accompanied by an inner neglect of spiritual truth. Early in the seventeenth century the church had sunk into a very lamentable state. A large number of the clergy were openly Calvinist, and there was the grossest indecency in the celebration of divine service. Communion was made only the necessary three times a year and a majority of the churches were in a state of neglect.

In 1619 Lancelot Andrews was made Bishop of Winchester. His example till his death in 1625 was of enormous influence in raising the tone of church life, and his work was carried on by Laud, Bishop of London, 1628. Had it not been for the revival of church life and feeling from 1620-35 it would have been scarcely possible for the church to survive the troubles of the Civil War 1642, and the abolition of Episcopacy and the Prayer-Book 1645.

Again, at the beginning of the Eighteenth Century we find that apathy and carelessness had largely settled down on the Church. A cold deism was the popular creed. Never had the clergy been held in such contempt; many of them indeed were but hangers on to great families; parochial visiting was the exception; catechising had fallen into disuse. Formalism reigned and the bones of the Church were very dry.

In 1728 William Law published his "Serious Call," and in 1729 Charles Wesley formed the little society in Oxford which won for him and his friends the name of "Methodist." It was the beginning of a movement which affected the Church profoundly, and was the means of a great spiritual revival.

At the beginning of the Nineteenth Century the Church had again sunk into lethargy. The force of the evangelic movement had largely spent itself. Erastianism had largely become the creed of the Church. It was simply "The Establishment," and the heads of the Oxford Colleges who showed their utter incapacity to understand the "Tracts of the Times" were its fitting representatives.

Again, it was at the end of the first quarter of the century that life returned. In 1827 Keble published the "Christian Year," and in 1839 he preached the sermon on "National Apostasy" which was, Newman declared, the beginning of the Oxford movement, so rich in blessing to the Church.

We have again nearly reached the fateful time. Will 1925 see a new spiritual movement for the uplift of the Church? There is much reason to think that it may, for potent forces are at work and must bring forth their fruit. It is not safe to prophesy what form the movement, if there is to be such a movement, will take, but there are two lines along which it may possibly run.

(1) A great revival of intellectual faith in Christianity. The whole attitude of science is rapidly changing. The old material and mechanistic theories of the universe are being rapidly scrapped. Science is ever more and more acknowledging that the spiritual is behind the material, and that the material, so-called, is but one form of the manifestation of Spirit. The time may be rapidly approaching when it may be deemed as unscientific to disbelieve in God as to disbelieve in the earth's revolution round the sun.

(2) It may, however, be that the movement will run on the lines of a great impulse towards reunion. The desire for it is ever spreading, and the whole attitude of Christians is changing. Will it come with a great spiritual uplift? Who can say?

At least, we can note with hope the possibilities of the immediate future, and pray that God will direct and rule it according to His will and the purposes of His love.

The Kikuyu Conference.

The first dusty of controversies is settling down, and it becomes possible to consider the letter of the Bishop of Zanzibar and the pamphlet on the Kikuyu Conference by the Bishop of Uganda (Longmans, Green & Co., 6d each) with a certain amount of calmness and detachment.

In the first place it is evident that exaggerated and inaccurate accounts of the Conference were in the first instance circulated, and this may partly account for what strikes one as the somewhat overstrained and exaggerated tone of alarm in the Bishop of Zanzibar's letter. He has undoubtedly done the Church a great service in drawing attention to the serious nature of the Kikuyu proposals, but they are only proposals; the Bishops of Mombassa and Uganda neither propose nor desire to take any steps without the concurrence of the whole Church, and we consider it unwise to condemn without careful consideration proposals which, wise or unwise, are prompted by no personal or party motives, but by the statesmanlike desire to provide in good time for the future of the native Church.

The Bishop of Uganda's letter is courteous and temperate, a model of all that a letter on such a subject ought to be; but it does not follow that we either approve or think it probable that the Church at large will approve of all the suggestions of the Conference. It may be well to consider first the more unexceptionable points of the proposed scheme.

In the first place it must be noted that it is a Federation, not a Union, that is proposed. It is quite true that an ultimate union some day is thought of in the background, but the Bishop admits that so far as the Church of England is concerned, it is for the present out of the question. The Federation is for the purpose of opposing a more united front to Mohammedan aggression, preventing overlapping of work, securing some kind of uniformity in practice and discipline. We do not see how in principle this can be objected to. It does not necessarily imply the surrender of its convictions or principles by any religious body, and has in fact been already informally largely accepted in Australia when agreements have been made between various religious bodies as to spheres of work in New Guinea and among the aborigines, and common meetings held to consider and provide for the common interests of missions in their relation to Governmental action, and commercial interference. In Africa where an ever-growing Mohammedanism is ever competing with Christianity the need for a common understanding is infinitely greater than it is in Australia, and the details must be far more precise. Whether the Kikuyu proposals go beyond what is possible for the Church of England is another question, and we fear that that it must be reluctantly answered in the affirmative. While the proposed Federation contemplates no immediate alterations in our own Church teaching yet it ultimately contemplates a Union of all non-Roman native Christians on a basis which, as the Bishop of Zanzibar points out, contains no provision for Confirmation, Absolution, or Episcopacy, which has no rule of infant Baptism, and which provides that the Holy Communion shall be celebrated "normally" only by a minister. It must not be forgotten that the proposed Union also levels up, that it accepts the Nicene and Apostles' Creeds, and the two Sacraments, kneeling in prayer and a form of service practically on the lines of Morning and Evening Prayer, the use of the formula "In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost" in Baptism, the exclusion from Holy Communion of those who are not full members of the Church to which they belong, the admission of the episcopal jurisdiction of the Bishops over all members of their own communion. This is all to the good, but the omissions are so serious that in spite of the admission by the Bishop that Union is not at present within the sphere of practical politics we have to ask ourselves whether we have any right to accept an idea of Union in which they are not specifically mentioned.

Two things strike us as gratuitously useless errors of policy. The first is the proposal to allow interchange of preaching. This is one of those short cuts which assume unity where it does not exist. It is in no respect necessary and unduly weights the proposals. The other was the united communion which, as the Bishop says, stands apart from any general scheme of Federation, and which is again a needless and misleading short cut, which in the end will hinder rather than promote real reunion. It will be time enough for United Communion when we are really united in doctrine and discipline. To sum up we do not think that the Kikuyu proposals ought to be lightly rejected. They have been brought forward because of the urgent need of some such action if the cause of non-Roman Christianity is to survive in East Africa. We think that some kind of Federation, or mutual understanding is probably desirable, but we trust that the Church will deliberate very carefully before sanctioning the exact form recommended by the Kikuyu Conference.

Reunion.

We believe that the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States is on the right lines in the following resolution which is so important that we give it in full. It breathes the spirit which can alone lead to ultimate success.

"Your Committee is of one mind. We believe that the time has now arrived when representatives of the whole family of Christ led by the Holy Spirit, may be willing to come together for the consideration of questions of Faith and Order. We believe, further, that all Christian Communions are in accord with us in our desire to lay aside self-will, and to put on the mind which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. We would heed this call of the Spirit of God in all lowliness, and with singleness of purpose. We would place ourselves by the side of our fellow Christians, looking not only on our own things, but also on the things of others, convinced that our one hope of mutual understanding is in taking personal counsel together in the spirit of love and forbearance. It is our conviction that such a Conference for the purpose of study and discussion, without power to legislate or adopt resolutions, is the next step toward unity "With grief for our aloofness in the past, and for other faults of pride and self-sufficiency, which make for achism; with loyalty to the truth as we see it, and with respect for the convictions of those who differ from us; holding the belief that the beginnings of unity are to be found in the clear statement and the full consideration of other things in which we differ, as well as of those things in which we are at one, we respectively submit the following resolution:

"WHEREAS, There is to-day among all Christian people a growing desire for the fulfilment of Our Lord's prayer that all his disciples may be one; that the world may believe that God has sent Him:

"RESOLVED, The House of Bishops concurring; That a Joint Commission be appointed to bring about a Conference for the consideration of questions touching Faith and Order, and that all Christian Communions throughout the world which confess our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour be asked to unite with us in arranging for and conducting such a Conference"

On June 4th, 1901, the Bishop left Port Darwin on an overland journey to Adelaide in order to visit the remote southern parts of the diocese. The journey which took eleven weeks was made on horseback and by buggy. The Bishop went quite alone, but the people at the various telegraph stations showed the greatest kindness, coming out great distances to meet him and escorting him half way to the next office. This often meant a long journey as the offices are from 150 to 180 miles apart, with often little or no water available. No minister of religion had ever visited these parts before, and some of the men (there were no women) had not had an opportunity of attending Church for 30 years. When the Bishop reached the southern border of the diocese at Charlotte Waters he found that it would be much quicker in time to go on to Adelaide and return via Melbourne, Sydney and Brisbane than to travel back the 2,000 miles he had come from Thursday Island. This he accordingly did, reaching Adelaide on August 17th. His journey aroused so much interest in Australia that an enterprising Adelaide paper sent a reporter 500 miles to meet him and obtain the first interview. The Bishop delivered several lectures on his way home, visiting Tasmania and arriving at Thursday Island on November 11th, and leaving again the following day on a visit to the Gulf parishes. The new year 1902 opened hopefully. The "Carpentarian" of January 1st, 1902, says: "A year ago there was very little that could be called diocesan life at all. The permanent clerical staff was reduced to one, and the first student had just entered at Bishops College. Parishes were without clergy, and had been for several years without episcopal supervision, while the Northern Territory had been for 12 years unvisited by any clergyman of our Church.

"There is much to be thankful for in the past year. The clerical staff has increased to four, and two more are to arrive in a few weeks time. Bishops College has been erected and paid for, and four students are in residence. The Northern Territory has been visited three times and a Rector of Port Darwin has been appointed."

The first conference of clergy and laity of the diocese met at Thursday Island on February 25th, 1902. The clerical members were Revs. Glover, (subdean), Curtis, Smith, Gocher and Pitt, and the lay Hon. J. Douglas, Messrs Bennett, Hodder, Murray and Wilkinson, and Mr. A. Kashiwagi. His Excellency, Mr. E. Le Hunte, Governor of New Guinea, was present as a visitor.

It was resolved to start a Mission on the Mitchell River as soon as possible, a parochial assessment was fixed, and the Bishop was asked to hold property in trust for the diocese until a Synod was formed. The scheme of a Province for Queensland was approved, and raffles and all questionable means of raising Church funds were condemned, and diocesan regulations were approved.

Shortly after this the Rev. G. H. Frodsham, Commissary to the Bishop, was elected Bishop of North Queensland. Before his consecration the Bishop and Diocesan Council made a vain protest against the use of the title North Queensland for a diocese which does not include North Queensland.

In May the Bishop accompanied Dr. Roth on a trip down the Gulf in the Melbidir and landed at the Mitchell, hoping to meet Rev. E. Gribble, who was travelling overland to the same spot, but the parties did not meet.

The year 1902 closed with a Quiet Day at Croydon, conducted by the Bishop.

The Bishop left Thursday Island for the Roper River at the beginning of May. He hopes to be back at Thursday Island by the end of June.

Miss White returns to Thursday Island by the Nikko on June 18th. She has greatly benefitted by her stay in the south and is in excellent health.

The Evil the Good May Do.

We hear much of the evil done by bad people, but we do not always remember that the harm done by good people is often greater than that done by the bad.

When a bad man does evil, the world suffers of course from the evil that he does, but the average man is repelled rather than attracted. He serves as a warning rather than an encouragement to do evil for others.

When however a good man in a moment of weakness or carelessness does evil, the effect of that evil is tremendously greater than the evil wrought by the bad man. It seems as an excuse for wrongdoings to thousands, who argue "If so and so, who is a good man can do this thing, why should not I?" It is not too much to say that the better a man is the more harm is he capable of doing. It is this fact which justifies a certain abstention even from harmless things on the part of the good, and by the good I mean those who are definitely aiming at righteousness and doing God's will.

They know that the very fact of their having set their faces upward involves a certain responsibility. There are many things which they could justify to their own conscience, which they cannot feel to be wrong for them considered solely as individuals, but they are not solely individuals, they are members of society and they have to take care that their good be not evil spoken of, that they do not cause others to offend by their example however innocent in itself. They often refrain from innocent things because they know that others will take occasion by their example to make a use of them that is not innocent. This is often thrown in their teeth as puritanism and over-scrupulousness, but it ought rather to be credited to them as "love of the brethren," and a due sense of responsibility. They know what a tremendous thing it is to seek after God and to find Him, and how their responsibility grows with every fresh revelation.

It is when good people forget this that they work so much evil. They are tempted at times to say, "Why can I not have as much freedom as other people?" "Why should I consider what people may think? As long as my own conscience is satisfied what does it matter?"

Nearly all the slackness and lowering of the tone of public opinion comes from the fact that the good people do not keep their end up and fail by example and precept to show that there is such a thing as healthy public opinion in existence.

Even the bad pay the tribute of an unwilling admiration to the good, but when they see the good growing slack they go on their way untroubled. The power of even a few who have a high ideal and stick to it is still tremendous. We need to remember Abdiel who found himself unwittingly among the host of rebel angels and fearlessly proclaimed his loyalty.

"Among the faithless faithful only he,
Among innumerable false unmoved,
Unshaken, unseduced, unterrified,
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal;
Nor number nor example with him wrought
To swerve from truth, nor change his constant mind
Though single."

Mr. C. D. O'Brien.

Mr. C. D. O'Brien, Gold Warden at Croydon, has been appointed Federal Electoral Regi-trar at Rockhampton and we cannot allow him to depart from the Diocese without expressing our sense of his devoted service to the Church. In Normanton, Thursday Island and Croydon Mr. O'Brien has ever given the fullest and most ungrudging service as Parochial Councillor and Church Warden. However busy, he could always find time to be in his place in Church and at the Lord's Table and to give up his Sunday afternoons to the work of teaching in Sunday School. We wish him every blessing in his new sphere of work, and if we are the losers the Church in Rockhampton will be the gainer.

Notes.

Rev. E. J. Nash and Mrs. Nash will sail for the Mitchell River Mission on June 29th. Mr. Nash will inspect the Mission this year on behalf of the Bishop, who in consequence of his trip to the Roper will not pay his usual visit to the Mitchell.

Next year is the centenary of the first missionary visit to New Zealand of Rev. Samuel Marsden. A Church Congress will be held at Auckland on February 7th-10th, and will include a visit to the Bay of Islands and a service at Rangihoua, the spot where Marsden first preached the Gospel in New Zealand. The Bishop has received an invitation to be present, but does not yet know whether he will be able to do so.

The Bishop of Rockhampton has left for England for reasons of health and to obtain men for his diocese. The Bishop of North Queensland and New Guinea are expected to return shortly.

Mitchell River.

We were very glad that Mr. Matthews was able to return to the Mitchell by the Francis Pritt on April 14th, after his long absence. He was in excellent health and ready for work.

Miss Grimes has accepted a post in South Africa and to our great regret leaves the Mission in June. She has done excellent service. Rev. F. T. Lane has been ill with malaria fever and will soon go on furlough, when he is to be married to Miss Matthews.

Owing to the Bishop's visit to the Roper River, he has arranged not to visit the Mitchell this year for the first time since it started. Rev. E. J. Nash and Mrs. Nash will go in his place, and will leave Thursday Island on June 28th, returning on July 19th.

It is hoped that in accordance with a long-standing promise the Archbishop of Brisbane will visit the Mitchell River Mission next year.

Mr. Walter Cross, who died last November, was married to an aboriginal woman, and has left all his property valued at about £100 to the Tubanaman Mission. He appointed the Bishop executor, but described him as Bishop of North Queensland, thereby causing much confusion, another testimony if one were needed to the unsuitability of the name "North Queensland" for a diocese which does not include North Queensland. Had the money been left to the diocese, it would have lost it all through the confusion of name.

Angeram.

Our readers will be interested in the following letter from Jack Giebo, at one time caretaker of the South Sea Home, and now in charge of Angeram, an outstation of the Mitchell River Mission "The boys and girls" are the married couples of the settlement.

Trubanaman and Angeram Missions.

March 24, 1914.

"My Lord Bishop.—I am just to thank you very much indeed for your kind letter and the post card, and am just to let you know our work here in Angeram. We try our best work in this season and the boys and girls they try to work, and we all work together. They try their best planting potatoes and other things and I so pleased. The boys and girls they do all take notes very much about what I tell them to do. They do it alright. My wife she very good doing her best to help me work on our garden. We building our church last year but I hope we try to put some cabbage tree on this year and we try to finish. Soon we can do it. This season we had plenty rain. We hope we got some potatoes. The crews very well. So that all I let you know this time. So I say goodbye God be with you always and I remember in my prayers to you all, who are praying for us, and we pray for you our greater loving to us in all the mission works. Yours truly faithfully, J. Giebo.

Mossman Notes.

Having noticed the general absence in "The Carpentarian" of any news from Mossman, not the least of the parishes in the Diocese, a few notes on the recent Easter there may perhaps be of some interest to Church of England members who have left the district.

His Lordship the Bishop of Carpentaria after visiting Molloy and Mount Carbine, where he held services, arrived at Mossman on Wednesday, April 8th.

On Wednesday the Bishop held a confirmation service at which sixteen candidates were presented and confirmed by him. On Good Friday services were held at 10 a.m. and 7.30 p.m., the Bishop assisted by the Rev. Edward Taffs, Rector, officiating, the former preached interesting and instructive sermons at both services, which were well attended.

A communicants' meeting was held on Saturday at which the Bishop gave an earnest address.

Easter Sunday turned out a glorious day, showing off nicely the pretty floral decorations inside the Rev. E. Taffs's Parish hall, which since the cyclone in 1911 has been so kindly placed at the disposal of the parishioners for divine service.

Mrs. Taffs and her two daughters decorated and saw to it that the building was as clean and neat as it always is for Divine Service, the cedar seats had been re-varnished by the energy of the Rector and Councillor, F. G. Boswell, who has always been ready and willing to assist the Rector in work which might be required.

Services on Easter Sunday were Holy Communion 7.30 a.m. at which there were forty-one communicants. Mattins and Holy Communion at 10 a.m. at which fifteen partook of the Holy Sacrament. Evensong at 7.30 p.m.

The Bishop, assisted by the Rev. E. Taffs, officiated and preached at the two services.

The attendance of parishioners was extremely good, so much so that at the 10 a.m. service the seating accommodation of the building was taxed to the utmost capacity.

The singing of the choir heartily joined in by the congregation, was exceedingly good, and praise is due to the rector for his indefatigable efforts in this direction, as in many others, and he himself should, I think, be pleased at the result of his efforts.

The choir consists of the eight members of the Girls' Friendly Society and the ten members of the Church of England Men's Society, admirably guided and advised respectively by the Rector's wife and the Rector.

On Easter Monday the Bishop, accompanied by the Rector, left Mossman for Port Douglas to hold service there prior to the former leaving on Tuesday for Cooktown.

The Parishioners have had a pleasurable Easter and they hope the Bishop enjoyed his trip to Mossman and takes pleasant memories away with him.

At Mossman on the same day the members of the Church of England Men's Society gave their friends a very enjoyable picnic at the Mossman River heads; between twenty and thirty young people were present, games, boating etc. were indulged in, and after an alfresco tea on the beach the return home in a motor launch under a full moon and on a fine high tide, brought to an end at about 10.30 p.m. a very pleasant outing which all seemed to have thoroughly enjoyed.

Mossman,

17th April, 1914.

A Wet Journey.

The following experience of Rev. E. Taffs and Mrs. Taffs on their return from a visit to Mt. Carbine must show some of the difficulties of the country clergy. They are contained in a letter to the Bishop.

We had a most trying experience coming back from Brooklyn Station, near Mt. Carbine. It was thorough wet season weather and Rifle Creek was in flood and out over the country around. We started from Brooklyn on Thursday shortly before 12 noon; about an hour after starting we came into the rain, and at 3 p.m. we came to Sandy Creek, 3 miles from Mount Molloy. It was in flood, the water was dammed back from Rifle Creek. My horse got into it and swam across, thoroughly drenching me up to the chest. I had to go back because Mrs. Taffs's horse could not get across, and we went back to Brooklyn, where we arrived at 6 p.m. We rode through tropical rain, except near Brooklyn where they had no rain. On Friday we started again and got into Mt. Molloy at 5 p.m. being wet through nearly all day from rain and through fording creeks, and we remained wet, with renewed wettings, right on to Monday when we returned home. On arrival at Mt. Molloy we found that the mail coach, which got through Sandy Creek earlier in the day on Thursday, had to stay out all night and got into Mt. Molloy on Friday morning. On Saturday we got to Rifle Creek which was in flood and had to wait at Mrs. Green's house until 12 noon on Sunday, when the flood having subsided, an aboriginal led the way across the bridge; the rails on one side had gone, the flood was up to the top rail on the other side (the up-stream side) and came nearly to the seat of the saddle. We again got wet crossing Slaty Creek. The horse which I was riding on Sunday—Carbine—had a very bad back, so bad indeed that I walked all the way from Mt. Beel, not far from Rifle Creek, to the Mowbray, at the foot of the Range. Cassowary Creek was in flood, so we went to Port Douglas, which we reached at 8 p.m., and we came home on Monday by the tram, very glad to get into dry clean clothes. The horses are still at Port Douglas, one will not be fit to ride for about a month, and the other is thoroughly knocked up.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson has safely returned to the overland telegraph line, and is continuing his journey southwards. But some anxiety was felt about him as April passed and no news came. However, on May 11 a wire reported his safe arrival at Wave Hill Station. Another long silence ensued while Mr. Wilkinson was making his way to Powell's Creek, which he reached on May 16, having met with great difficulties owing to the dryness of the country. He has since reported all well at Tennant's Creek on June 5.

Incidents During the Wet at Trubanamam.

Before "the wet" actually commences the new chum on Trubanamam is rather glum at the prospect of being cut off from his friends and civilisation generally. He resigns himself to the inevitable, and is cheered by the thought that there will be no letters to answer and that he will have a good chance of clearing off arrears of correspondence during the wet days. Four months and no mail seems a long period to look forward to: but it slips away. Moreover, the "no mail" part of the business is not quite the truth; mail sometimes comes through unexpectedly by private messenger. Some belated cattle-man or station "boy" readily brings letters if he "happens along"—papers are left by mutual consent until the rivers are down and the road no longer a quagmire. At other times we have received a fragmentary mail by foot messengers who are not afraid of negotiating three or four miles of water, deep and shallow, running fast or slow, according to the lie of the country. Those of our black friends who volunteer for such a trip generally prefer it to hard manual labour, such as the agricultural work entails. "The wet" generally begins with storms which often travel rapidly and compactly. In consequence of this only a restricted area benefits from the downpour. It is a peculiar sensation to the new chum to see one storm to the north and another to the south and to participate in refreshment from neither, but on the contrary receive only a copious supply of dust and wind—especially dust. Before the storm comes, the grass country to north, south, east and west has been burnt by rushing, crackling bushfires; the roads and pathways well powdered. At this time of the year—i.e., the "dry time" before "the wet," whirlwinds are a trying feature when one's house (with windows and doors wide open) happens to lie in their track.

The staff is at lunch—flood waters at a high level. "Do you feel like giving us a haul on a rope this afternoon?" said the boss to the chaplain. Experience teaches one to be wary of requests so mildly put! It is just as well sometimes to indulge in a little inquisitive catechising, on such occasions, before eagerly replying to the affirmative. On this occasion no questions were asked—the lesson was yet to be learnt! "Yes, certainly," replied the chaplain. "You won't want much in the way of clothing," was the rejoinder, "Just a pair of 'shor's' and a pair of old shoes and a singlet if you like."

On rising from lunch—satisfied, the question was gingerly asked, "When do we start?" "As soon as you are ready." "Oh! all right." "Gee, whiz!" you say to yourself. (It is hot you know, and a good lunch just eaten.) Then out loud, "Are we to swim the lagoon?"—or a number of boys with sulus held aloft are already half across cracking jokes and laughing and yelling! "No" saith the boss, "Bernard is down there with the old punt," but you will probably have to swim coming back, as the punt will be used to pull the log down stream." "Oh! we are going for timber then?" "Yes, there is an alfarret log about half a mile away which must be hauled in somehow." "A big one?" "Oh, medium." "Must you bother about it to-day?" (Saturday, half-holiday.) "Well, the water may have subsided if we leave it till Monday; it is better to be sure than sorry; come on!" Dressed for the part, we stepped into our little flat-bottomed punt, and Bernard, a young dusky Apollo, who reckons life worth living, rapidly pulled us across the lagoon and some way up a reedy swamp and landed us in two feet of water, and then got out himself and pulled the punt with its cargo of rope, tackle, chains and axe over shallow water to the lagoon, higher up. This swamp for nine months out of the twelve is a dry—very dry—gully, but on this occasion a sluggish stream—an overflow from the main water. That afternoon was a memorable one. The rope was greasy, and not too thick! The log was heavy and cumbersome; the line of hauling not all down hill. The log would not roll; it would slowly rise to a point where it would poise, waiting for an extra pound or two before it would flop over with a thud and await further persuasion. The rope slipped; the rope broke; an iron hook on the chain broke; a stump was jumped; and a bloodwood tree which would not be jumped felled to earth; Bernard flattened his little finger in the block; sweat ran, hands and arms ached—but the log amid vociferous acclamation was at last floated. After the treatment received one could quite sympathise with the way it gaily rolled this way and that, turning over into the water those who made frantic efforts to bestride it and get a cheap ride. For some time Bernard had been nursing his throbbing finger, but the triumph of towing that prize down with a four-knot current was too much for him, and he took the oars again. We took a short cut home, swam the lagoon and arrived tired, bedraggled, wiser, but satisfied and hungry boys and men. Bernard and the log forced the pace coming down the straight and sailed majestically past the slips. However, a few shouts, a rope thrown ashore, and they hauled it back again.

Trust in God.

We ought to cultivate quiet trust and confidence in God under all circumstances whatever.

Let us take the most desperate ill-fortune that can befall us. Let death by fire or water, by hunger or thirst, by the violence of man or nature, stare us suddenly in the face while we are free from that sickness of body which so often takes away the fear of death. What can it mean at most, at worst, but a short suffering and the entrance upon a life where we believe that pain and suffering have no place, and where at the very last we shall be in far closer and more intimate relation with our Heavenly Father than is possible on earth?

Shall we not be foolish if we dread that passage of the river which brings us more quickly to the promised land? Shall we not say rather in such a case, "I thank Thee, O God, that Thou hast deemed me worthy already to finish my time of probation and to enter on the fullness of life"? Should not our last earthly words be no cry of suffering but a heartfelt thanksgiving to God?

And if it be so with the extremest danger into which it is possible for us to fall, should we not trust God equally in smaller and less final crises? We believe of God that "He never willingly afflicteth or grieveth the children of men." Probably we shall see some day that it is the means and the only means to a higher good, but if God lets us suffer He does not let us suffer blindly and carelessly. He knows just what He is doing. He watches our case just like a doctor watches his patient. He will not let us be tried "above that we are able to bear." In the extremest case He will grant insensibility or death, but in the great majority of cases He gives relief and escape when we have learnt our lesson of faith or patience.

When once we have learnt to trust God our lives will be filled with inexpressible peace, for nothing can come amiss to us in life or death.

THURSDAY ISLAND, OCTOBER 1, 1914.

We regret that owing to the war it has been found impossible to get the full October "Carpentarian" printed, and we have to omit much news. We are in hopes that the January number may be printed as usual.

The Bishop, after a visit to Croydon and Normanton, returned to Thursday Island immediately after the outbreak of the war and with Rev. E. J. Nash has been kept busy as Chaplain to the troops. The Bishop has been a military Chaplain for many years and holds the rank of Major.

The Francis Pritt arrived at the end of August with Mr. Reside who is giving up his work on account of age, and Mr. West who had been seriously ill. They left by the south by the s.s. Suva and we are glad to hear that Mr. West is progressing favourably in Sydney. Mr. Chapman a new worker left by the boat and two new women workers are expected to arrive at Thursday Island on November 17th, when Mr. and Mrs. Lane will leave for their furlough in the south.

Letter from the Bishop.

My Dear People,—

We are engaged through no fault of our own, in a terrible war. It is our duty to be calm and steadfast. We must be prepared to go on until peace comes with honour. It may be that the war will mean great suffering. We must all be willing to bear our fair share of it. If personally we should be out of the range of wounds and violence, of spoiling of our goods and sudden death we must not therefore simply congratulate ourselves. We must give liberally and deny ourselves to help those who do suffer. We must refrain from complaint and despondency and never lose heart. Above all we must believe that God governs in the affairs of men. Apart from Him nothing happens. We can pray with a clear conscience "God defend the right." Some of you may be called upon to make the greatest sacrifice, to give your sons to the war. I have just had a letter from an English mother, a widow with one child, a lad of great talent and promise who has volunteered. She says simply "I encouraged him to go." This is true self sacrifice and we can all imitate it in our various ways. The issue is still doubtful. May God give us victory, and if not that courage and splendour of spirit which makes defeat itself into a real victory. May God keep and watch over you in this time of anxiety and distress.

GILBERT, Bishop of Carpentaria.

Moa Mission.

Some serious charges having been made against the Superintendent, Mr. B. S. Cole, by two residents on Moa Island, the matter was by Mr. Cole's own request fully investigated by Mr. Lee Bryce, Government Resident, at the Court House Thursday Island on August 31st. Mr. Lee Bryce after a patient hearing of over three hours and the examination of six or seven witnesses said that he had carefully considered the statements made regarding complaints against Mr. Cole and felt satisfied that there was no foundation for the reports. He added, "I have seen a good deal of Mr. Cole and his work and have formed the opinion that he is a capable administrator and a man of high moral character." The Bishop who was also present said that he entirely agreed with all that Mr. Lee Bryce had said. The new house for the Superintendent has arrived from Brisbane. Mr. Walker is kindly taking it out in the Goodwill.

The design of the Deaconess Buchanan Memorial Window arrived from England and was considered entirely satisfactory with the exception of the central figure which was not satisfactory. The design was returned for alteration.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at the Bishop's House, Thursday Island, on Friday September 25th. There were present, The Bishop in the chair, the Sub-Dean Rev. E. J. Nash, Mr. W. M., Lee Bryce, Mr. K. Mackenzie and Mr. A. Sullivan. The Bishop announced that he had accepted the resignation of Rev. A. McD. Huxell who was going to the diocese of Brisbane at the end of the New Year and that his place in the diocese would be taken by Rev. C. Hall, Th.L.

The matter of completing the second aisle of the Cathedral was considered and it was pointed out that it would mean excluding from Church about 70 men of our present morning congregation for perhaps two months while the work was in progress. It was accordingly resolved to defer the alterations until after the wet season.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson has been continuing his great journey and reached its southern-most point at Charlotte Waters. From here he turned north again and expected to reach Alice Springs at the end of September. He will then visit the Arltunga Goldfield, returning north as soon as the thunderstorms make the track possible.

Rev. J. Tweedie who left Pine Creek owing to ill-health is now acting as Organising Secretary for Home Missions in the Diocese of Rockhampton.

Rev. D. M. Jones at one time tutor at Bishop's College, Thursday Island, is at work in the Diocese of Brisbane. He is at present in charge of the parish of Clayfield, Brisbane.

We regret to record the death of Rev. S. Lewis, formerly of Bishop's College and ordained for work in this diocese, which he left some years ago. He died at Orange, N.S.W.

The Bishop will probably remain at Thursday Island for some time, as his duties prevent him from being absent at present.

The following prayers have been authorised for use in the Province of Queensland: "O, Almighty Lord God, King of all kings and Governor of all things, that sittest in the throne judging right; we commend to Thy Fatherly goodness the men who through perils of war are serving this nation, beseeching Thee to take into Thine own hand the cause wherein their King and country send them. Be Thou their tower of strength where they are set in the midst of so many and great dangers, make all bold through death or life to put their trust in Thee who art the only Giver of all victory and canst save by many or by few through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

"O God, Who lookest down in Thy Fatherly love on all the nations of the earth, assuage the pains of warfare, restore the sick and wounded, relieve those that are in anxiety and comfort the bereaved, and in Thy mercy forgive the sins of all both living and departed: through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen."

The Archbishop of Brisbane is expected to arrive at Melbourne by the Themistocles on October 7th.

By the kindness of Rev. F. Walker the materials for the new superintendent's house at Moa were taken out in the Goodwill on October 2nd. The weather was very boisterous and it was feared that there would be difficulty in landing the materials safely.

The Patriotic Concert in the Cathedral grounds was a great success, some five or six hundred people being present.

News has been received that Mr. West has much improved in health.

A new Diocese is to be formed in South Australia to be called the Diocese of Willochra. A Bishop will shortly be elected.

Bishop's Visit to the Roper.

I left Thursday Island on May 5th to visit the Roper Mission, intending to go by the Government steamer Leichardt. The Leichardt was advertised to leave Darwin on May 4th, and as my steamer from Thursday Island was a week late I was afraid of missing her. After much telegraphing I obtained permission for her to wait until 6th, "but no longer." As it was impossible for me to arrive before the evening of the 9th I made most elaborate arrangements to tranship at sea, obtaining permission from all sorts of authorities and spending a small fortune in telegrams. Half-way across I was relieved to get a wireless to say that the Leichardt would not leave before my arrival; and when I got to Darwin I discovered that she was not there, and no one knew when she would arrive as she had been three weeks on a sandbank in the Victoria River. Under these circumstances I determined to go overland, and the Government most kindly assisted me by lending buggy and horses. I had barely left Pine Creek when the Leichardt arrived. Had I known, I should probably have turned back and thereby given myself much loss of time and trouble, for when she did start she had to put back in a leaky condition for repair; and when she finally got off she took a day more to reach the mission by sea than I did by land, and six days longer to return. A driver had been engaged, but when I got to Pine Creek I could see nothing of him and went out to stay with my friend Mr. T. at the battery. Next morning, however, the driver came riding out and informed me that as he did not much care about driving a bishop he had come out to have a look at me, to see whether he could stand it. After a little conversation he said, "O, you'll do all right," and I expected him to turn up after dinner with the buggy ready for a start. He did not come, nor were there any signs of him next morning. However, about midday, just as I had given up all hope he suddenly appeared and I lost no time in making a start. When, however, three days later we reached the Katherine, the first and only settlement on the road, my driver apparently concluded that I would not do, for he vanished without a word back to Pine Creek, and I had to wait six days before I could make a fresh start. This time it was under better auspices, and the pleasant company of Mr Surveyor Chrisp, who was going back to his camp on the Roper. Mr ridges; while as for the crossings, some of them made one hold one's breath.

The Katherine boasts a hotel, police station and telegraph office, also a number of graves. Alongside of one I found a gin bottle, only too significant a sign of the Territory's past. There is, however, no excuse in the present, for the hotel-keeper is not popular because he objects to shouting and will not serve a drunken man. His sincerity may be judged from the fact that on the front veranda hang two big waterbags always kept full to the brim. To those who know that water is regarded by the ordinary bush publican with extreme dislike and suspicion, as interfering with his lawful profits, and that the only waterbag in the house is carefully kept behind the bar the above speaks for itself. I had service at the Telegraph Office on Sunday and each of the three houses contributed its quota. One of the congregation was on her way with her husband to be the first white woman on the new tinfield at Marranboy. She was confirmed a year ago by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is a far cry from Lambeth to Marranboy.

On the third day we reached Butter Springs, where the track leaves the overland telegraph line. So far I was familiar with the road. Butter Springs has been suggested officially as the site of the capital. I do not know why, nor have I discovered anyone who could tell me. There is, it is true, a good spring of moderately good water, one of the sources of the Roper, and the trees along the banks of the stream are refreshingly green at all seasons; but the land is poor and covered with ant-hills and the ridge suitable for building of small extent. The surrounding country is so poor that no one has thought it worth running stock on, and the nearest station, the old Elsey, has been abandoned. Anyhow, it is difficult to see what anyone wants with an

Chrisp rode and I drove the buggy myself, having a most pleasant journey. I had no time for weariness, for the horses were converted "brumbies" with somewhat elementary ideas of harness, and the roads were like General Wade's before he made them, so covered with long grass that neither they nor the stumps could be seen, intersected by unexpected washaways and gutters, stony beyond belief over the ranges, and deep in sand on the artificial capital which must always be difficult of access. A day's travelling brought us to the Elsey station at McMinn's Bar on the Roper, and three more over dry country and dreary ranges to Hodgson Downs. Twenty miles further I bade good-bye to Mr Chrisp at his camp, and two days later reached the police station at the Roper Bar, where all the few station people for 100 miles around were camped, and had been camped for three weeks waiting for the Leichardt. I reached Paddy's Lagoon, a station four miles further on near the Wilton, on Sunday, and had service at night. Next day I went on to the mission, 16 miles down the river. The crossing of the Roper is bad enough in all conscience, but the Wilton is far worse. Not only have you to risk your neck to get to the water at all, but you are warned to see that it is clear of alligators before you enter it, and as there is no way of making sure of this you have to take your chance. I spent a most useful and interesting week at the Mission, having scarcely a spare moment from start to finish. The work included inspection of buildings and material, school work, interviews and meetings for the staff a Devotional Day, and a very busy Sunday. The station is situated on the banks of the Roper River which, though tidal, is here fresh, and a pumping plant has been erected since my last visit. The usefulness of this is seen in the greatly improved vegetable garden which does so much to keep the missionaries in health. The growth in numbers of the mission has not been so large as I had hoped, but good work is being done. The superintendent of the mission, Rev. H. E. Warren, had a narrow escape lately. The school-children, about 60 in number, bathe in the river. One day the boys who bathe higher up saw a big alligator making straight for the girls. He did not dive as usual, but came driving along at great speed on the surface, the water foaming behind him. They shouted a warning, and the alligator retired disappointed. Mr Warren went to look for him and climbed out on an overhanging tree about two feet above the water. He could see nothing until happening to look down he saw the head come out of the water swiftly, exactly beneath him. He dropped the muzzle of his rifle and fired without aim. The alligator disappeared and next day was found floating, dead. On the Sunday afternoon the Leichardt appeared and landed Miss Tinney. She had taken sixteen days to come from Darwin after her second departure, or one day more than I had taken by land. On the following day I started back, holding services on the way at the Survey Camp and at Elsey Station, where we rested for the Sunday. No one was at home at Hodgson either time except the Chinaman cook, a versatile genius who made a most polite host and regaled us with food and phonograph. I had a pleasant and most capable driver to take me back, as we had to drive four-in-hand, and a pair was as much as I cared to tackle on the bad and narrow roads. We had a good journey until we came within four miles of the Katherine, when the road being heavy we turned off into the bush, which was pretty thick, and I was admiring the way the driver twisted his big and heavy team round the trees. The driver got down to shoot a turkey, asking me to take his place and drive on slowly. In stalking the turkey he came too near the buggy and fired just behind the horses, who took fright and bolted. The light little buggy was as nothing and, fortunately for me, I failed to clear the first tree, so that before we had got up full speed the buggy was caught and held. The horses tore away the pole and swinglebars and went off like a cyclone. I was dragged from the box over the dashboard and hit the ground head first, making a complete and graceful somersault. I let go and the horses dashed into another tree about 100 yards away, broke it off short and tumbled in a heap one over another. Fortunately they were not hurt. It is a curious instance of the continuity of thought in spite of unauthorised interruptions that my first remark on sitting up was, "Did you get the turkey"? He, much amused, for he thought I was killed, said "No," and I felt a sense that the world was a hollow fraud, where one got knocked on the head and bumped and bruised for nothing at all in return. Happily, my pith helmet saved my head and I was able to walk into the Katherine and send out help. The buggy was patched up and I got into Pine Creek on Sunday morning, and at Evensong dedicated the beautiful cross, candlesticks, and vases which have been provided for the altar. I reached Darwin two days later, six days ahead of the boat. Had I gone by her I should not only have taken much longer over the journey but would have only had one day at the Mission instead of seven. The weather was fine but very cold at nights, so that I found it impossible to use my camp bed, and had for warmth to sleep on the ground.

A Visit to Trubanaman.

It was on the beautiful sunny afternoon of July 2nd that Mr. Nash and our little Moa maid, Mary Bann and I started in the Francis Pritt for the Mitchell River. We sailed away at 4 p.m. merrily enough, but alas! when outside the rip the wind dropped and for the first night we anchored within sight of Booby Lighthouse. It was a beautiful moonlight night and so were the other nights. The next day we spent drifting about outside the Wallis Islands. All hope of calling in at Mapoon was at an end, so we decided to reserve the pleasure for the return journey. On Sunday morning we passed Duyven Point, and had service on deck. We had a very hot afternoon and were again becalmed. The coast throughout was uninteresting and flat, there not being any points of interest to look at. We all kept well and slept a great deal the first few days. We had plenty of books to read and work to do so time passed away pleasantly enough. Owing to contrary winds which were strong during the nights with rough seas, the rest of the journey was rather tedious. However on Friday 10th we reached the Beacon, and at 4 o'clock got ashore after an eight day's voyage, one of the slowest on record. We were rather startled by the appearance of the natives from the back camps who came to pull our dinghy ashore; their clothes consisting in some cases of a bead-necklace or a head-band only. They were willing carriers of our baggage, and we soon found ourselves comfortably settled at "the guest-house" at Koongalara, the little out-station where Tom Solmon, the skipper lives. It was too late to get up to Trubanaman, so we sent up two natives with a note and the mailbag to Mr. Matthews, the Superintendent, to say we had arrived, and next morning he fetched us in the buggy.

The guest-house consists of one room built of bush timber and saplings, roofed with ti-tree bark and has a mud floor. The only furniture is a stretcher, a table and a bench. The drive to Trubanaman was nine miles through flat plains and salt pans. The wonderful birds we saw, ibises, cranes, native companions and many more, and the tracks of wallabies, added great interest to the drive.

At Trubanaman we received a warm welcome, and after morning tea, visited the church, dormitories, dispensary, gardens and fields. Cassava and sweet potatoes grow splendidly there, as do pineapples, lemons and bananas. I was much struck by the prosperous look of the whole station, and the pretty creepers growing on the buildings, making it all look old and homely. The little huts the married people occupy are very pretty, being made of cabbage tree palm. When one contemplates that the mission has only been in existence ten years one is astonished at the progress, and also to find there a church built by the people themselves, a building of such dignified simplicity, built of pandanus trunks and iron roof, with brick floor, (the bricks made on the mission.)

The whole atmosphere of the place was that of a happy home, for the mission children seem always cheerful and contented, and are steady at work and most keen at cricket, which they play every day. Even tiny mites of boys are to be seen with a stick smiting at imaginary balls with quite a style of their own.

On the afternoon of our first Sunday, 12th, we all trooped over to a small out-station called "Angeram" in charge of Jack Giebo, a South Sea Islander. Here there are several married couples living in picturesque little huts, made of cabbage tree palms. Gardens of cassava and sweet potatoes, and paw paw and other fruit trees have been brought to great cultivation. Here Jack has built a tiny little church, so that his people may meet for morning and evening prayer, and Mr. Nash formally opened the little building at 3 o'clock and there was a large congregation. It is built of pandanus saplings and cabbage tree palms, and the floor is of ant-bed. All the seats and dectern were made by Jack himself. It is highly creditable to him, and also that in so short a time he should have converted a rough piece of bush into such a patch of cultivation. Jack has a dear little one month old son, whom he has called "Henry", because in a book sent him by Mrs. Jones, (wife of the A.B.M. Secretary), he read that all the first four King Henrys were good to the Church, and he hopes his son will grow up a good missionary. The great event of our visit was the marriage of the Rev. F. Lane and Miss Matthews on the morning of the 15th at 8 o'clock in the presence of a large congregation. Mr. Simpson from a neighbouring station, came over to act as best man, and Mary Bann, and Daisy, a Mission girl, acted as bridesmaids. I was organist. After the marriage service there was a celebration of Holy Communion. Then breakfast, at which the bride cut the wedding cake. Then the festivities of the day began, the camp people joining in. All were photographed "en masse," the Superintendent standing on the roof of the chaplain's house with his camera. Then followed the distribution of lollies, when 200 persons passed before the bride, who dispensed a bag or handful to each. Cricket then began and skipping and games for the girls, while others went "walk about."

In the afternoon the bride and bridegroom drove off in the buggy to Koongalara, where they spent a happy little honeymoon of five days, camping in the guest-house. There was one sad incident to mar the wedding festival, at 2 a.m. next morning a camp dog or dingo was discovered eating the wedding-cake, which had been put safely away in the dairy. Next day we had fifty pairs of blankets to divide, mark and distribute to all the mission people.

I was greatly struck by the method and orderliness with which the married women and girls do their daily work. The girls in the kitchen take alternate weeks with others, and all in turn learn to wash, sweep, wait at the table, make beds and clean lamps and churn, and all attend the afternoon sewing classes. We saw the fine new engine at work, lately given by the A.B.M. for cutting up timber, and for irrigating the gardens. It is a grand help to the mission. One great feature at the mission is the giving out of rations to the mission children—rice, sweet potatoes and johnny cakes. It is quaint to hear them sing their grace

"Thou art great and thou art good

And I thank Thee for this food.

By Thy hand my soul be fed

Give us, Lord, our daily bread. "Amen."

On Friday a whole holiday was given for a picnic to Cabbage Tree Creek. This is a lovely spot 4 miles off. Some rode on horse-back, and some drove in the buggy, with little ones packed in front and behind. The natives on foot, through the bush, looking for game as they went. The whole scene was pretty and picturesque, especially when the fires were lighted and on them were thrown wallabies, opossums, fresh turtles, bandicoots, native companions, iguanas, and snakes. One snake measured 7½ feet, being a thick carpet snake. In the ashes sweet potatoes were roasted, and they tasted most delicious, like chestnuts. The lagoon close by was covered with beautifully tinted purple lilies, which the natives ate as vegetables. The little children waded into the water to gather handfuls, and the keen enjoyment they displayed over the munching of lily stalks and seeds was amazing. Wherever one looked there was a child munching a long lily root, even "Cora" the Mission baby of 3 doing her share of wading in after them. Then, all too soon, came the day for our departure, July 20th. We drove down to Koomalara to find Tom had forgotten to get the Francis Pitt out of the creek on the night tide, and nothing could be done for another 24 hours, so we had again to camp in the guest-house, and stayed two days, for the second attempt only put her on the bar where she lay all Tuesday. We amused ourselves with walks on the beach, and a bathe in the sea and wanderings in the bush. The nights were cold and still, and, like the natives, we retired early to rest and slept peacefully enough in our little hut. Early on Wednesday Tom brought us the welcome news that the boat was clear, and had anchored off the beach. We soon got aboard starting at 9.15. There is not much to say about the voyage home, except the bad night off Albatross Bay with rough sea and strong east wind. In Endeavour Strait the tide was against us, and we had much beating to do before we reached Thursday Island, where we anchored on Saturday evening 25th, just as the sun was setting.

Feminism.

The problem of modern feminism has been forced upon us by the suffragettes, but the suffragettes were only one byproduct of feminism. There is of course not the slightest reason to suppose that the granting of the franchise would restore these demented women to sanity, for the arguments by which they justify their conduct are just as applicable to every cause in which women happen to be in the minority, but the cause of feminism is much wider than the suffragettes.

An interesting study of modern feminism has been recently published by Mrs. Archibald Colquhoun and it suggests anxious thoughts as to the extent and dangers of the movement.

The keynote of feminism has always been found in the blessed shibboleth 'equality', and equality has been interpreted to mean that women and men are essentially the same, and that it is only lack of opportunity and the tyranny of man that has kept woman in an inferior position. Even the physical differences between the sexes are minimised and explained away as far as possible. It never seems to have never dawned on most feminists that there may be equality without sameness, that woman may be perfectly equal to man and yet have different characteristics and different tasks. Feminists pay man the undeserved compliment of supposing that their way must always be the best.

The attempt to live as man has not so far been very satisfactory in its effect upon women's health and happiness and it has been especially disastrous in the sphere of family life.

Christian marriage is indeed the central point of attack on the part of a large and increasing number of feminist writers. The air is full of such words as "unfettered personality" "enhancement of life" "living one's life out" "self realisation" etc., and this can only be accomplished they say by rejecting the Christian idea of marriage, and substituting for it some temporary bond dissoluble at the will of the woman.

It is amazing that women should be in the forefront of the attack on marriage which has always been their great safeguard and protection, and it can only be explained by the supposition that the old sanctities of marriage still exercise such a profound influence on civilised society that women are incapable of forming any mental picture of what life and society would be like if their theories were carried into effect and free love reigned supreme.

spiritual conception it needs no watering down. As a sacrament administered in the most solemn way, and typifying the union of Christ and His Church Christian Marriage has undoubtedly proved the most binding form of Union the world has seen. But indissolubly connected with it has been that principle now threatened in all religious communities save the Roman Catholic, that those whom God has joined together man cannot put asunder.

The number of feminist writers from whom Mrs. Colquhoun quotes shows that the movement is very widespread and the most serious part of it is that it has spread very widely among the teachers of girls' schools and the girls are largely being brought up to believe that men are essentially bad compared with women. (It will be noticed how brilliantly Mr. Joseph Conrad has brought out this point in his mordant picture of the feminists in his latest novel, "Chance") that the first duty of women is to themselves, and that self realisation (which we used to call 'selfishness') is the supreme end of life.

Feminism is doomed to failure because it is an attempt to fight nature. If women under its influence refuse wifehood and motherhood it will only mean that they leave no children to hand on their peculiar views but in the meantime it may do untold harm to the national life. Of course all feminists do not go as far as the extreme writers quoted by Mrs. Colquhoun, but the whole movement is a false one.

Let women by all means claim an equality with men, but on their own line and in accordance with their own nature.

Let them demand by all means the repeal of all laws that are unjust to women and the passing of laws that may be needed to protect them, but the claim to be treated just like men can only end in disaster for women.

In Australia women have the vote and it has made very little difference indeed. The drink traffic remains just what it was, and politics are no purer than they were before. If women would live up to the rights and privileges that they have they might quickly reform the world, but no cult of a false feminism will help us.

Extension of Missionary Work

A great missionary opportunity has come unsought to this Diocese. The London Missionary Society, which for many years past has been working in the Torres Straits islands of Murray, Darnley, Stephens, Yam, Cocconut, Saitai, Douan, Boiu, Maubiag, Badu, and Adam, has offered to hand over all its work unconditionally to the Diocese of Carpentaria, and to retire entirely to the mainland of Papua. The islands in question contain over 2000 inhabitants, who are industrious and earn their living by fishing and by cultivating their gardens and plantations.

At least three priests will be needed to minister adequately to the people, and probably two additional cutters; but the opportunity is one which it would not befit the Church to neglect. The Bishop has gone to Sydney to consult with the Australian Board of Missions with regard to the acceptance of the London Missionary Society's offer.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, who started on his great journey in April, 1913, is still working steadily through the Northern Territory. In our last issue we reported his arrival at Tennant's Creek on June 5th, after a terrible journey through the waterless desert between Wave Hill and Newcastle Waters. About a month later he arrived at Alice Springs, having sustained the loss of three of his horses on the way. He remained here until Thursday, July 30th, when he left for Charlotte Waters and the Finke River. From there he returns to Alice Springs and visits the Arltunga goldfield, starting north again on December 4th, as soon as the road was opened by the thunderstorm. It is not probable that he will be able to reach Pine Creek before January. We reproduce a characteristic photograph of Mr. Wilkinson and his gear and faithful blackboy taken by an overland cyclist, Mr. E. F. Reichenback, at Attack Creek, about 400 miles south of Pine Creek. Many friends will be glad to hear that Mr. Wilkinson's health is good in spite of the great hardships he has undergone.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Volume XV. - No. 56. Thursday Island, Jan. 1, 1915

One of the most unsatisfactory features of the war has been the occasional tendency of British Statesmen to swagger and use tall talk. It may be forgiven perhaps to a Lloyd George, but Mr. Winston Churchill ought to know better; and it is painful to hear of the Arch-deacon of London prophesying in St Paul's that the British flag would wave over Berlin. We have nothing much to be proud of. Our tremendous fleet has performed its duty with the skill and courage that was expected of it. Our army has shown unequalled courage and devotion, but so far as numbers go the Kaiser was right in calling it a "miserable little army" for such a nation as Great Britain. It is true that by extraordinary good fortune we have been able to start to form an army after war had begun, and that by the middle of next year we will be able to put into the field an army not altogether inadequate to defend the wealthiest country in the world; but we have done very little so far. We could not save Belgium and we are only able to face Germany in the field at all because ten times our number of Frenchmen stand in line with us.

Even if we had much more to be proud of than we have, the attitude of pride and self-conceit is the most fatal of all possible ones in a great crisis. "Pride goeth before a fall" is a good old saying, and we need to remember it. Let us at least wait until the war is over before we do the shouting. Even General French told his troops when they took up their present position in September that they had only to hold out for a few days, and the enemy would be driven back in confusion to their own country. Happily, one man has kept his head. Lord Kitchener has never ceased to point out from the first that the war would be a long one, and that though he believed we should win in the end it would only be at great cost and heavy loss.

Great Britain has no reason to be ashamed of the fact that she is at war, but she has great reason to be ashamed that the greater part of her sons were at the outbreak of war unable to take up arms for many months to defend her most vital interests. Australia can throw no stones. She is depending on her boys, too young, too little trained, to stand the stress of a great campaign. It will be well for her if she is not put too violently to the test.

We are in earnest in this war, and we mean to carry things through to the end, but in heaven's name let us abstain from swagger and tall talk. Let us keep our breath for the work we have got to do. We shall need it all. Above all, let us abstain from talk as to what we are going to do. Let us do the thing first and talk it about it afterwards. It will be time to wave our flag over Berlin when we get there, if ever we do. In any case, the flag-waving is a mistake. We do not want to exult over our enemy; all we want is to prevent him from again upsetting Europe and how that can be best done is a serious and difficult problem.

If, as we believe, we are going to win in the end, we can afford to leave to the enemy all the parade and talk, the swagger and the bombbast with which the loser tries to save his face. If we can secure the real objects of the war it may be well to leave the Kaiser to wave every flag he likes over his capital without interference. Talk of humiliating Germany to the dust can do no good, and may do much harm. Our business is to see the war through until it reaches a stage at which a permanent peace becomes possible, and then we can do the talking.

Criticism on the Creed.

A claim is now being made by certain persons within the Church for the right to interpret certain articles of the Creed—e.g., the Virgin Birth and the Resurrection, in an altogether different sense to that in which the Church has always interpreted them, and yet remain loyal members of the Church.

We must not conclude that these persons are actuated either by hostility to or disbelief in the Christian religion. Many of them are actuated by the highest and best motives; they point out, what is undoubtedly true, that no words ever do more than approximately represent the truth; that each century, not to say each generation, looks at things from a different point of view, and that the words which were the nearest expression of the truth that one century could attain to are not necessarily the best words in which the truth can be expressed a thousand years later; they warn us earnestly against cramping the truth into outgrown formulæ, and tell us that if we will not change the formulæ we must grant perfect freedom of interpretation even if it appears to absolutely contradict the plain language of the Creed. They are careful to explain, with in most cases, obvious sincerity, that they themselves are firm believers in Christian revelation, that if they set aside the Virgin Birth they believe nevertheless. They believe that Christ was in an entirely unique sense the Son of God; if they set aside the Bodily Resurrection they believe that Christ did triumph over death and appear to His Disciples in an objective, if not in a bodily form, and that He is still to them as the Church has ever taught, "Very God of Very God." Two questions seem to arise and claim an answer. First why is it that sincere Christians should want to deny the accepted form of the Christian Creed, and secondly, Can the Church admit the claim of such persons to remain its loyal members while denying fundamental articles of its creed?

The answer to the first question is very simple. The reason is that those who have been for years applying the strictest scientific methods to the study of the New Testament have more and more become imbued with the so called scientific belief that miracles never happen. It is somewhat curious that our Biblical critics are largely under the influence of a dogma which modern science is more and more tending to regard as antiquated and inexact.

The trend of the most modern science is to admit that while as a rule effect follows cause with unflinching regularity, there are nevertheless certain unexplained impulses which from time to time operate to produce something which is entirely new, and which cannot be deduced from what has gone before.

Apart from this however we must remember that all science is an abstraction. Contrary to general belief it does not deal with things as they really are, but with things as they are when taken out of their context and deprived of their reality. As M. Bergson has pointed out, a thing that lives is a thing that endures not by remaining the same but by changing unceasingly. Science cannot deal with things that are unceasingly changing. It must mentally arrest the movement and cut off the environment before it can deal with a thing at all. "Five," for instance, is a purely scientific abstraction. We have five men or five horses, but no one ever saw or found "five" by itself anywhere in the world. Yet it is a most useful if unreal scientific abstraction. Physical science deals with that which is stable and unchanging. It does not deal with real life which is for ever changing. Hence, there may be truths in life, in reality, of which science can only take account by stepping out of its artificial abstractions and looking for a moment at things as they are.

If there be any truth in this philosophy, and it is appealing very largely to the modern world of thought, then the critics who want us to give up the plain meaning of the Creed because of a supposed, but already discredited, scientific dogma are surely blundering badly. It really looks as if some of our modern critics were falling into the old theological vice of over-dogmatism. They repudiate with scorn the dogmas of the Church, but they immediately pick up and substitute for them an unproved scientific dogma. May we suggest that a scientific dogma is, and of en has been, quite as great a barrier in the way of the search for the truth as any ecclesiastical dogma?

We have already answered by implication the second question. There seems to be no reason why the Church should allow any of her members to deny the Creed and yet remain her loyal members. Anyhow, there seems to be a touch of disloyalty about it which rather shocks us when some really good person advances such a theory: but if our view be correct it is a dishonesty by which the Church has nothing to gain and everything to lose. The English Bishops of the Province of Canterbury have recently made a declaration taking this view of the case, and we trust that those whose consciences will not allow them to agree will make their protest from without instead of from within the Church. If they will have a little patience they may find that no protest is after all necessary.

The Family and the Nation.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitham of Cambridge made a valuable contribution to the national welfare in their book with the above title.

They complain not without justice that Parliament concerns itself with everything else but the matters that are of most vital importance to the national life. Among these questions none is more important than that of the number and quality of the people who compose the nation. As is well-known the birth-rate of which the maintenance of the population depends has been steadily diminishing for many years past, and this is not the whole truth. The decreased birthrate is, with one or two exceptions to be noted below, almost entirely among the best types of the population the educated classes and the skilled artisans; while it remains the same among the idle shriftless, criminal and public minded. The authors show very conclusively with what speed the whole of the national life tends to deteriorate under these circumstances.

The authors give the following versions for the decline of the birthrate.

'A mistaken sense of individual responsibility which tends to prevent the birth of children for whom lavish pecuniary provision cannot be made seems the worthiest of the motives at work. The economic factor in all its aspects is probably the most widespread of the causes. Unwillingness to face the discomfort and discipline of life which a large family entails on the parents and especially on the mother is a potent factor among those people who take advantage of modern facilities for a restless life, unceasing social activity and an excessive devotion to sport and games. The extension of the activeness of women in spheres social, political, and economic, has probably much to answer for. In industrial life the employment of married women in factories and workshops has been shown to be incompatible with the welfare of the children.'

Partly then from a mistaken and short-sighted view as to responsibility, and much more largely from cowardice on the one hand and love of pleasure on the other, our population is tending towards the point when the deaths will outnumber the births and at the same time deteriorating steadily in quality from the failure of the best stocks.

It takes four children from every futile marriage to maintain the numbers of the race since statistics show that of every four children one dies before marriageable age and one does not marry, hence only two are left to replace the parents. It is worthy of note that the authors tell us that three classes of people are exempt from the decline of the birth rate. The Clergy, the Roman Catholics, and the Jews. These exemptions show quite clearly that there is no loss of fertility among the people. It is a deliberate wilful race suicide. That the Clergy should be exempt from this particular form of sin is only what we have a right to expect. That the Roman Catholics are exempt is a proof that much as they are often attacked for being under clerical influence, in this case at least it has been of great service to them. We wonder whether those protestants who talk so much of opposing the Roman Catholics influence remember that they are many of them by their own deliberate wilful act increasing year by year the population of Roman Catholics in the population. That the Jews are exempt is simply because they too put Gods care before their own desires.

As a nation we shall continue to go down hill till the more educated and industrious classes of the community realise that the practice of limitation is at once a sin against God and an act of selfish treachery towards the State. Mr. and Mrs. Whetham point out that great as is the evil which has been done to the race during the last fifty years it is not yet too late to save the State, but that reform must come quickly if we are not to drift into a state in which the able and efficient are not too crushed down by the burden of supporting the inefficient and feeble minded.

Rev. A. Mc'D Hassell leaves Normanton on December 11 for Brisbane diocese. Mr. Hassell has done good work in the bush districts, and we are sorry to lose him from the diocese where he has worked for over five years.

III

In 1903 the Bishop saw the Home Secretary in Brisbane and applied for a Reserve for an Aboriginal Mission on the Mitchell River, which was shortly after proclaimed. The Bishop was almost three months in the south engaged in speaking and preaching for the work of the diocese. Four men were in residence at Bishop's College under the charge of a resident tutor. In July the Bishop left Normanton with Inspector Galbraith and visited the Mitchell River Reserve making friends with the natives and exploring the country. On August 16 Mr. W. M. Wilkinson, who had been working in the Diocese since 1900 as Lay Reader was ordained Deacon at Croydon. The preacher bade him imitate Him who said, "I am among you as one that serveth" and the admonition has been nobly obeyed. In October a deputation waited on the Bishop to ask that "ordained ministers of any Christian congregation" should be allowed to preach in the Cathedral. The Bishop promised to consider the arguments of the deputation which rested on supposed facts connected with the building of the church. On December 3rd, after careful inquiry, he replied that the evidence in no way supported the claim of the deputation and that he could not therefore admit it. An interesting event of 1904 was the confirmation of 14 lepers on Friday Island prepared chiefly by the careful teaching of one of their own number, Tom Moreton. Rev. W. P. Glover the first Subdean left this year and was succeeded by Rev. J. Jones, now Secretary of A.B.M. In May the Diocese was honoured by a visit from the Primate and Saumarez Smith, who laid the foundation block of the new Vicarage.

The second Diocese Conference was held on July 26, 1905. It was saddened two days before its opening by the death of Hon. John Douglas, and old and kind friend of the Diocese. The new Subdean was instituted on September 18, 1904, and in October Rev. E. R. Gribble and party visited the Mitchell River Reserve and remained for over a month.

In the following April the Bishop, accompanied by Rev. E. R. Gribble and others, proceeded overland from Cairns and started the mission with a celebration of Holy Communion on the Sunday after Ascension Day, June 4, at Tubanaman. Many difficulties and purations were experienced, but the work was successfully accomplished. After his return the Bishop went south to preach for the Mission. Mrs. Pritt greatly helped the work by the gift of the Francis Pritt, a fine ketch, originally the "Santa Cruz." After several years hard work this vessel was sold for more than was given for her and a new vessel of a shallow draft built in her place. The old Francis Pritt was wrecked in New Guinea soon after. The Bishop moved and carried in General Synod a resolution approving that coloured races who are advanced in culture and cultivation are entitled to a measure of respect similar to that which is presumably enjoyed by a "white" nation, also a determination providing that in case of the vacancy of the see of Carpentaria, the appointment should rest with the Bishops of Queensland after such consultation with the clergy and laity as was possible.

In May 1906 the Bishop made an overland Journey from Cooktown to Cape York. The third Diocesan Conference was held on his return in June 1906. A second attempt was made this year to start a Church School with Miss G. Robson as Principal, but the scheme fell through for lack of adequate support.

In 1906 and 1907 Croydon and Cooktown suffered from severe cyclones which did considerable damage. In June of the latter year the Bishop and Mr Ebbs went in the Francis Pritt to select a site for a Mission Station on the Roper River. On his return the Bishop paid a visit to the south to preach for the Diocese.

In February 1908 the Bishop left for England to attend the Pananglican Congress and Lambeth Conference, appointing Rev. J. Jones as Administrator.

The War.

WHAT TO PRAY FOR.

What ought we to pray for at this time when prayer is so much needed and can accomplish so much? Shall we pray simply for the victory of our arms? We can find abundant precedent for such prayers in the psalms and the old Testament but very little in the Prayer Book. It is true that in the Prayer in Time of War we pray that God would "deliver us from the hands of our enemies, abate their pride, assuage their malice, and confound their devices that we being armed by Thy defence may be preserved from all perils." But this in spite of the strength of its language is a purely defensive prayer. In the prayer for use in the navy we pray for protection against the violence of the enemy that we may be a safeguard to the King and a security to those who pass on the seas on their lawful occasions. Only in the indirect form of the daily prayer for the King and in the Litany do we find the prayer that he may vanquish and overcome all his enemies.

The special prayers for time of war lately issued by the authority of the Church of England and confirmed by an order in Council contain nothing whatever in the shape of a prayer for victory. We may say then that except for an incidental reference in the prayer for the King the Church of England prays only for defence against aggression, and that in her most mature judgement while commending to God's protection and guidance our soldiers and sailors she carefully abstains from the prayer that God would necessarily give us the victory.

A little reflection will probably convince us that this attitude is right.

We are not the only people that pray. The Austrians and Germans pray probably more regularly and fervently than we do and believe just as much in the rightness of their cause and we cannot believe that a war of great principles is going to be decided simply by superiority in the number of petitions.

There is another reason that God does not always give victory in battle to the side that is in the right. If He did the Belgians would not have been driven from their country.

Not seldom defeat in the field means real victory. The Belgians were beaten, but who doubts that it was they and not the Germans who carried off the real fruits of victory. As an old Spaniard has it, they were of those who "con ser vencedores llevan la victoria." Even in material results it is not always those who win the victories who win the campaign, and far more is it true of greater and wider issues. If we pray for victory it must be with the conditions 'if it be Thy will' and 'if it be for our good.'

This does not mean that we are not to strive for victory with every nerve we possess but it does mean that if victory is denied our faith in God is not shaken.

What then can we rightly pray for in reference to the war.

1. That all our people may realise the duty of self sacrifice and throw themselves into the cause that we believe to be a righteous one.

2. That every man, officer and general may be and do his best

3. That we may be successful in resisting all aggression.

4. That the war may make men hate war and run such a course as to stamp out the spirit of militarism and aggression.

5. That the war may lead to a permanent and honourable peace.

Our prayers for victory when we are ourselves the aggressors must be conditioned by the thought that they are justified only in so far as our action does really tend to the higher ends of the destruction of militarism and the winning of permanent peace. It is not easy for us to judge how far this may be really the case in any particular instance, and therefore we shall regard such prayers with something of the doubt which we never feel when we pray for the triumph of those principles which we know to be in accordance with the will of Almighty God.

No mention has been made of the more obvious prayers for the sick, wounded, and sorrowing, but it may be noted that the official prayers already referred to return to primitive Christian custom in the petition that God's redeeming love would have mercy on the fallen. This is a prayer that every heart will re-echo in this time of sorrow.

German Philosophy of War.

The following quotations from General von Bernhardi's "Germany and the next war" will give more clearly than anything else can, the true spirit of Germany and the designs which have been maturing in the minds of German soldiers and statesmen.

"The dominion of German thought can only be extended under the aegis of political power; and unless we act in conformity with this idea, we shall be untrue to our great duties towards the human race."

"War is the greatest factor in the furtherance of culture and power. War is not merely a necessary element in the life of nations, but an indispensable factor of culture, in which a truly civilized nation finds the highest expression of strength and vitality"

"Our people must learn to see that the maintenance of peace never can or may be the goal of a policy. The policy of a great State has positive aims. It will endeavour to attain this by pacific means so long as that is possible and profitable. But the inevitableness, the idealism, and the blessing of war, as an indispensable and stimulating law of development, must be repeatedly emphasised. To the Peace idea, the offspring of a false humanity, the clear and definite answer must be that, under certain circumstances, it is not only the right but the moral and political duty of a Statesman to bring about a war."

"Arbitration treaties must be extraordinarily detrimental to an aspiring people, which has not yet reached its political and national zenith, and is bent on expanding its power in order to play its part honourably in the civilized world."

"Strong healthy flourishing nations require a continual expansion of their frontiers. they require new territory for the accommodation of their surplus population. Since almost every part of the globe is inhabited, new territory must as a rule be obtained at the cost of its possessors, that is to say by Conquest, which thus becomes a law of necessity."

"We have fought in the last great wars for our national union and our position among the powers of Europe. We must now decide whether we wish to develop into and maintain a world Empire, and procure for German spirit and German ideas that fit recognition which has hitherto been withheld from them."

"Might gives the right to occupy or to conquer. Might is at once the supreme right, and the dispute as to what is right is decided by the arbitrament of war. War gives biologically a just decision, since its decisions rest on the very nature of things."

"The idea that the weak nation is to have the same right to live as the powerful and vigorous nation is a presumptuous encroachment on the natural laws of development, which can only lead to the most disastrous consequences for humanity generally."

"A pacific agreement with England is a will-o-the-wisp which no serious German Statesman would trouble to follow. We must always keep the possibility of war with England before our eyes, and arrange our political and military plan accordingly. We need not trouble ourselves with any pacific protestations of English politicians."

"It can be urged that to act on the offensive would produce an unfavourable position for us since it creates the conditions on which the Franco-Russian alliance would be brought into activity. Let it then be the task of our diplomacy so to shuffle the cards that we may be attacked by France, for then there would be reasonable prospect that Russia would for a time remain neutral. We must not hope to bring about this attack by waiting passively. If we wish to bring about an attack by our opponents, we must initiate an active policy which, without attacking France, will so prejudice her interests or those of England that both these States would feel themselves compelled to attack us"

Comment is needless. It is a bold gospel of "Might is right."

Rev. L. Ayscough returned to Cooktown from a two month's holiday on December 6th. On November 14th Mr Ayscough was married in Brisbane to Miss Ward. We wish the bride and bridegroom every happiness.

The Bishop visited Moa and held service at St. Paul's on Sunday, November 15th. The new Superintendent's house is now finished and is a great improvement on the old grass house. The building was erected by the crew of the Banzai and cost about £200.

St. Paul's, Moa.

At the end of August certain natives made serious charges against Mr. Cole, the Superintendent of the Moa Mission. By Mr. Cole's own wish the matter was submitted to Mr. Lee Bryce, the Government Resident, for investigation. The inquiry was held at the Court House on Monday August 31st, and after a careful examination of all the witnesses, extending over 3½ hours, Mr. Lee Bryce came to the conclusion that the whole of the charges were simply got up by some persons who were dissatisfied because Mr. Cole would not let them do as they liked. He said, "I have completely considered the statements made and feel satisfied that there is no foundation for the reports. I have seen a good deal of Mr. Cole and his work and have formed the opinion that he is a capable administrator and a man of high moral character." The Bishop, who was present during the whole inquiry, emphatically endorsed Mr. Lee Bryce's judgement. Mr. Cole is to be congratulated on the complete and entire vindication of his character and the appreciation of the excellence of his work.

The Superintendent of a mission station is peculiarly liable to slander and cabals and the only way to meet them is often to appeal as in this case to an impartial outside tribunal. Unfortunately there are always persons ready to believe any story that is to the discredit of religious teachers, even though its sole foundation is a diseased and perverted imagination.

The Francis Pritt arrived from the Mitchell River on November 12th with Rev. F. and Mrs. Lane who left for the south by the Changsha on November 17th. Unfortunately we had no women workers to send down by the Pritt owing to the fact that two ladies who had volunteered withdrew, leaving no time to obtain others in their place.

His place at Normanton has been taken by Rev. C. Hall who was trained for work in this diocese at St. Francis College, Nundah, and has been working for the last two years at St. John's, Dalby.

The Bishop has been given two month's leave of absence from his duties as Military Chaplain at Thursday Island and leaves for Sydney on December 14th to consult with the Board of Missions with regard to the acceptance of the offer of the London Missionary Society to hand over their missions in the Torres Straits to the Church. From Sydney he will go on to Tasmania to conduct a three days retreat for the clergy at Cressy, commencing January 18th, returning to Thursday Island about February 14th.

To our Readers.

We have to apologise for the lateness of our January number and for the smallness of the previous number. The war is, we suppose, indirectly to blame. Our last number was three months in the hands of the printer, and we have now made other arrangements which will, we hope, secure greater punctuality.

The Constitution.

At the last meeting of the Diocesan Conference, held at Cooktown in August, 1913, it was proposed by Rev. E. Taffs, seconded by Mr R. Roberts, and carried, "That this Conference believes that the time is approaching when it may be practicable and desirable to form a Diocesan Synod, and that the Bishop-in-Council be requested to draw up and submit to the next Conference a Draft Constitution for the Diocese; that if such Draft Constitution should be approved by the next Conference, it shall nevertheless not come into force until it has been confirmed by a Conference called for the purpose after an interval of not less than twelve months." This matter has not been lost sight of, but it was considered that it was not necessary or desirable to hold a Special Conference to deal with the matter in view of the change in the occupancy of the See. It must also be remembered that the war has had a bad effect upon the finances of the Diocese, and that the prospect of being able to form a Synod looks more remote than it did two years ago. The drafting of a Constitution was suggested by the Bishop, not so much with any idea of its immediate adoption, as in the hopes that his long experience might be of use in forming a Constitution under which his successor might as a Missionary Bishop find it easy to work. This is not now possible, and we think that it would probably now be better to wait until the new Bishop has gained some experience of the conditions of the Diocese before plunging into the intricacies of legislation.

The following Letters from the Superintendent of the Mitchell River Mission will be of interest:—

Trubanaman Mission,
December 7th, 1914.

We had a very sad accident here last Saturday. Little Cara was drowned in the lagoon. The girls had taken her with them, but she wandered away from them, and apparently tried to cross the water. The sad part is, that she almost got over, and was picked up in water not deeper than her shoulders. Chapman and I worked for over an hour trying to restore animation, but without avail. She was a general favourite, and her death has been keenly felt by all.

We are working now at the irrigation channel and are meeting some difficulties owing to the level nature of the ground. We are also thatching such roofs as require it.

Five acres of new land have been cleared here and four at Angeram.

Trubanaman Mission,
December 29th, 1914.

We had a phenomenal storm here yesterday. Thinking that it may have been widespread, and perhaps much worse than we had it, I am writing to let you know that it did very little damage here. Three huts were blown down, and that is all. We are very thankful to escape so lightly, for the wind and rain were appalling; 8.66 points of rain fell in a little over three hours. Of course, the country is flooded.

Our Christmas festivities passed off very pleasantly, and we have commenced work in earnest, ploughing and planting.

We have a practical man in Chapman, and if we do not increase our food supply by tons this year, it will not be his fault. He is a thoroughly good fellow. He had a sharp attack of fever a fortnight ago; but finding that he is liable to fever, he is following Major Ross's advice in taking quinine, so far, with excellent results.

We have not had any War news since November 16th, so naturally, we are anxious to hear how affairs are moving. I am getting a mail ready to send away next week, with boys who will walk to Delta.

Mr. Simpson, of Lochnagar, has been offered 30/- per cwt. for his bullocks, at the Byboora Meat Works. He will take ours at the same time. He has not been able to muster yet, but we expect to have at least twenty head fit for sale. They will average over £7 per head.

I remain,
Your Lordship's obedient Servant,
H. MATTHEWS.

The following Letter from Rev. W. M. Wilkinson will be read with interest:—

[Mr. Wilkinson started on his present journey in April, 1913.]

Alice Springs, N T.,
Nov. 18th, 1914.

My dear Bishop,—Thank you very much for letter and telegram received. As indicated by my wire on the 7th instant, you will know that my tour through this portion of the Northern Territory is completed. On arrival here, the horses were so low in condition that it was necessary to give them a month's spell—being fortunate in securing a good paddock to put them in. They did well—plenty of grass and fodder, and being out of hobbles. There is no doubt as to the favourable conditions of the McDonnell Ranges for horse country, especially after rain. You may imagine how nearly done the horses were when another died after my arrival at Alice Springs, making a loss of four since passing Tennant's Creek.

On August 13th I resumed travelling, following the telegraph line to Charlotte Waters, and found it a very bad road for the horses. The miles of sandhills, ridges and plains were very distressing, and no surface water—had to go from well to well for a drink. At Deep Well, Mary Vale, Alice Well, Horseshoe Bend, Old Crown Point, New Crown Point, and Charlotte Waters, I made breaks of one to three days; and, had I known of their existence, would have visited a couple of out-stations from Old Crown Point West and returned on to the telegraph line again at Blood's Creek, but it was too late when I heard of them. From Charlotte Waters I retraced my steps to Horseshoe Bend, where the road crosses the Finke. Then I made a detour north-west, following the Finke over 200 miles; from that course making a detour of 50 miles to get to the furthest out settlement. Although the Finke is called a river, it is but a sand-bed most of the way; I had as far as 35 miles to travel from water to water on the course of the river. At Idracoura Station, the first place of call after South Horseshoe Bend, the staff consists of a storeman in charge and a number of black boys.

From Idracoura went south-west to Eridundea Station, a fifty-mile dry stage. Eridundea is the property of the Warburtons, of South Australian historical fame, and managed by one of the Warburtons, who brought a wife out there two years ago; transplanted from Melbourne to the sand-ridges of the furthest out settlement in the Territory, with a water supply of one well which does for 1,500 head of horses and 1,000 cattle. You may imagine how they appreciated a visit from the outside world. From Erldunda another fifty miles dry stage north-east to Henbury Station, on the Finke. Henbury is the head station for Idracoura, owned by Mr Joseph Braden, of Oodnadatta, and is managed by W. Braden; both brothers are a very fine stamp of men—they have done much pioneering in the early days of exploring South Australia. At Henbury they have a married couple and three or four stockmen. From Henbury followed the Finke again to the Hermansberg Aboriginal Mission Station, for which the Lutheran Church of South Australia is responsible. The Mission, which has been established about 40 years, is under the superintendence of the Rev. C. Stuhlow and his wife. Here I came in touch with some of the distress of the war: Mr and Mrs Stuhlow were in Germany on furlough three years ago (the only furlough for twenty-five years), and when on the Continent left their family of four boys and one girl in Germany to be educated; now they are cut off from them by the war, no communication either way. The Mission compound is substantially built. The buildings are of stone (timber is a scarce commodity), well adapted to their requirements; the Church, with its appointments, would do honour to many townships. I was there over a Sunday, and attended service conducted in the aboriginal dialect, the congregation having service books which have been translated by Mr Stuhlow. The morning service, being much after our Holy Communion service, I could follow it, though I could not understand a word. The reverence and devotion of the people, especially the men, was a marked feature. The industrial work of the Mission is devoted to cattle and horse breeding. The limited supply of water prevents any development on agricultural lines. They are taxed at times to grow enough vegetables for the staff. On my visit to the Mission there was a stone building in course of erection, and to see the aboriginals on the walls with level, plumbline, trowel, and mortar, one would have thought it was a set of European skilled workmen on the job; the work is finished off in a workmanlike manner. From the Mission station returned to Alice Springs, where I remained a few days before setting out to Arltunga and district. Arltunga itself is a deserted mining field. The features of the country and the general appearance of the surroundings remind one very much of Maytown, only there is no river like the Palmer; what few people remain live in the memory of the good old days, and in the hope that some capitalist will come along and expend his wealth. Gold has been the attraction, but now the only work in operation is mining and cutting mica. Whatever possibilities the field contains they will remain until such time as there is a railway to carry the necessary machinery at a reasonable cost and time. Not only the miners but also the settlers on the various ranches to the east of Alice Springs have been visited; as is my custom, in every house a service of some form has been held, and the people have gladly embraced the opportunity for worship, some even expressing their thankfulness. There is a general desire for someone to live in the district and minister to their spiritual needs—many are the requests that have come to me to remain amongst them, but that I cannot do. By a large majority the people are Church-people, and it is to the Church they look for supply.

When at Alice Springs there was a celebration at 8 o'clock each Sunday morning with an attendance of five to seven; only one female communicant at present in the community. Certainly there is not much in the way of temporal things to offer but a service full of joy in fellowship with the Master. Were I a younger man I would find it very hard to refuse the invitation to stay.

Now am proposing to start on the return journey. The storms have commenced, so hope to leave on December 2nd. I return north to Newcastle Waters, then east to Betlow Downs, Anthony's Lagoon, Brunette, Alexandra and Avon Downs, then down the Rankin and Georgina Rivers to Austral Downs, Lake Nash, etc., returning to Camooweal, then Burketown, Normanton, Mitchell and Palmer Rivers to Laura, where I hope to be early in May. A letter to reach me at Powell's Creek must reach Darwin not later than January 14th; after that it will likely miss me. Having had a dry experience travelling south, am likely to have it wet going north again; the country gets very boggy from Powell's Creek north in the wet season.

Am thinking the war is going to cause a general upheaval; there will be a new order of things when it is over. One thing is certain, the general order will not be as it was before the war.

Whichever you decide upon for January—the South or New Zealand—I trust you will have a season of rest and refreshment.

I am looking forward to getting amongst the people on the Peninsula again; on my return will, if all goes well, be on the road again as soon as possible. The years are so very short, so much to do and so little time to do it in. I hope to telegraph you on arrival at the telegraph offices, but there will likely be a long silence between Powell's Creek and Camooweal.

I must ask you to excuse so long a letter; the scribble fever has been much in evidence in this cooler climate. The festive season will be with you by the time this reaches Thursday Island, so will wish you a Holy Happy Christmas and all New Year's joys.

Looking forward to seeing you sometime after my return.

Yours obediently,

W. M. WILKINSON.

In a later letter from Powell's Creek, dated February 6th, Mr Wilkinson says that the rains were early and the country like a wheat-field. He hopes to reach Camooweal about the end of April.

New Workers.

Miss Quinon, who has had many years experience as a Church worker in Sydney and in New Zealand, and who is at present assistant matron to the Deaf and Dumb Institute, Melbourne, has volunteered for the Mitchell River, but has been asked by the Bishop to take charge of St. Paul's, Moa, until Mr Cole returns from his holiday.

Miss Ellen Phillips, of Melbourne, has also volunteered for the Mitchell River; and Miss Nellie Jones, of Brisbane, daughter of Rev. Canon Jones, has volunteered to take Miss Quinon's place at the Mitchell until she is free.

These workers hope to arrive at Thursday Island by the coast boat, arriving at Thursday Island on April 13, and to proceed as soon as possible by the Francis Pritt to the Mitchell.

History of the Diocese.

The year 1908 was in some ways important. On May 19th the Francis Pritt landed on Moa the Government Resident, Rev. J. Jones, and Deaconess Buchanan, together with the modest furniture of her grass house and a few desks and school materials. The Government Resident made a speech, and Rev. J. Jones gave the people his blessing, and the Deaconess was left alone to her heroic work.

On August 8th a party under Rev. F. Huthnance left in the Francis Pritt to start the Mission to the Roper River, so the year of the Pan-Anglican Congress saw the starting of these two important Missions.

Lady Arburthnot visited Thursday Island, and was of great service to the Mothers' Union by the deep interest she took in its work. A white captain was obtained for the Francis Pritt, which had a busy time serving both the Mitchell and Roper River Missions. The Act for taking a Referendum on the subject of Religious Instruction in State Schools was passed by Parliament.

Early in 1909 the Bishop and Miss White returned from England, and the Fourth Diocesan Conference was held at Thursday Island on May 31st. The Bishop in his opening address referred to the Provincial Synod and the approaching Referendum. The Island was visited by the Governor, Lord Chelmsford, who like Lord Beauchamp showed the greatest interest in the work of the Church. Rev. J. B. Drabble and F. C. Hall left the Diocese this year, and Mr A. M. Hassell was ordained for work in it. In August the Bishop visited Gregory Downs and Lawn Hill.

The great event of 1910 was the Referendum on Religious Instruction in State Schools. Every effort was made in the way of preparation for the event, which took place in June. Prayer was made earnestly of the Church, and who shall say how much it affected the unexpected result, which was—For, 74,223; against, 56,681; informal, 7651. It was a great triumph, and the results of the working of the Act have fully justified it, the supposed dangers being found practically non-existent.

On January 24 a great Patronal Festival was held at Moa, and three of the oldest men roused much interest by describing the days they remembered before the introduction of Christianity. Rev. J. Jones, B.A., Sub-Dean, returned to England, and his place was taken at Easter by Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., late Vicar of Leatherhead.

In General Synod the Bishop proposed, and it was carried unanimously, "That the physical, moral and spiritual care of the Aborigines is national, responsibility resting both on the individual States and also on the whole people of the Commonwealth, and the promotion of Aboriginal Missions is a primary duty of the Church in Australia."

The Francis Pritt was sold this year, and a new Francis Pritt built in her stead.

Early in 1911 there was a terrible cyclone at Port Douglas and Mossman, which destroyed three of our Churches, and one Rectory. The house and Church at Port Douglas were rebuilt, and a Church began at Mossman, but the cost of the foundations proved so great that it is still awaiting completion. Rev. W. M. Wilkinson started on his long visitation tours in the Peninsula.

Moa Island Mission was visited by a severe epidemic of dysentery.

In April the Bishop accompanied some new Missionaries to the Roper River, visiting Borooloola on the way. An interesting report on the Diocese by the Archbishop of Brisbane, who had been invited by the Bishop to send visitation questions to the clergy, was made public. The Archbishop concluded his report by saying that the Bishop and clergy were doing a noble work in the face of exceptional difficulties.

On September 23, Mr H. Milman passed away. He was Churchwarden and a member of the Diocesan Council, and cared very deeply for the welfare of the Church.

German Criticism.

Not long after the war commenced thirty leading German theologians published a manifesto in which they stated that "Germany had drawn the sword only under compulsion to repel a wanton attack," and represented Germans living abroad, women and children, wounded and physicians as having "suffered unnameable horrors, cruelties and shamelessness such as many a heathen and Mohammedan war had not revealed." This extraordinary document was replied to by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and about 40 leading English theologians, who showed that the official correspondence did not in the least bear out the statement that Great Britain had been the aggressor, and pointing out that there was not a shred of evidence of any outrage whatever on Germans in this or any other country. Professor Harnach has now written commenting on this reply. He quietly ignores all the official documents, and alleges certain discoveries in an arsenal at Maubeuge which "completely prove the guilt and treachery of England." "It was not the Germans," he says, "who violated the neutrality of Belgium. It was really England who encouraged and forced Belgium into war against us, and therefore all the responsibility for all the misery which that unhappy country has suffered rests on the head of England."

Again, Professor Eucken says in a letter to an American Unitarian minister: "Our feeling of embitterment is worse against England. It will hereafter always be counted our worst enemy, and our intellectual work together will be ended for an incalculable time."

These extraordinary miscomprehensions of facts on the part of the German theologians would not be of much interest were it not for the vivid light they throw back on recent higher criticism of the Bible. For years we have all been sitting meekly at the feet of these same German theological critics, accepting as accurate all their judgments as to what did or did not happen in Palestine nearly two thousand years ago. Now we suddenly discover that these same confident critics are utterly incapable of judging accurately as to what has happened in their own country and in Europe this very year. We find them honestly and conscientiously, for that is the point of the whole thing, believing all sorts of fables of the wildest and most absurd character, and refusing credence to the plainest and simplest facts though vouched for by the most unimpeachable authority.

We have here a most striking example of the effect of presupposition and prejudice. The German theologians have been told, on authority that they respect, that England is the unjust cause of all Germany's troubles. Accordingly they unconsciously distort all facts to fit in with the one great underlying theory. These same German theologians had been told on what they believed to be the unimpeachable authority of science, that miracles never happen, and therefore unconsciously they distorted all the facts of the Gospel history to fit in with this theory. Perhaps when after the war they have discovered that the English people are not the diabolical schemers which they have imagined, they may go on to ask whether there is not more to be said than they thought for the sober and conservative English criticism. In the meantime Biblical criticism made in Germany will be received in England with well merited scepticism.

The War.

The war is a difficult enough subject to write upon at any time, but it is much more difficult when one is writing an article which will not be printed for a month, by which time the whole aspect of things may have changed for the better or the worse.

The deadlock still continues, but whether it is inevitable or voluntary on the part of the Allies is not clear. Probably, however, they have at present no wish to advance over bad roads, with the result only of shortening the German line of communications. When an advance is made they will probably try to make it sweeping and continuous. Whether or no it will succeed is another question. Probably a good deal of reliance is being placed on the effects of famine and shortness of military supplies. Here, again, it is difficult to know the real truth. England is the object of a fanatical hatred in Germany, which it is difficult for us to understand. We are under the impression that the war was caused by Germany's restless ambition and relentless militarism. Germany believes that all its troubles are due to the deliberate plotting and planning of Great Britain. We know that this is untrue, and that so far from desiring war, we were, so far as our army was concerned, absolutely and utterly unprepared for it: but it is not easy to convince Germany of this. The only ray of light so far from the German side is the fraternisation of their soldiers with ours on Christmas Day, a thing quite contrary to official orders, but seeming to show that the common people do not share in the sentiments of the vile Hymn of Hate. That the Kaiser should have decorated the author of this horrible production, and ordered it to be taught in the schools, is, if true, the saddest thing in this fearful war. Anything more utterly opposed to the elementary teachings of Christianity it is impossible to conceive. It is on a par with the action of one of the officers of the Blucher, who spat in the face of the man who rescued him.

Such hatred will do far more harm than good to those who are possessed by it, for hatred, like other violent passions, is blind, and is inconsistent with a calm and balanced judgment.

In Great Britain the war has called out all the best of the nation, and it is quite clear that whatever evil tendencies there may have been, the people are neither faint-hearted nor decadent. The crisis has had its dark as well as its bright sides. The refusal of the men in the armament factories to work full time because higher wages had given them more chance to drink, is a disgrace to England, and, as Mr Lloyd George truly said, is doing her more harm than the enemy. Is it not time that we recognised the fact that the so-called free man is not a free man where drink is concerned, and that he needs to be protected against himself and his own folly. The same thing is true of our Australian troops. The spectacle of men shipped back from Egypt before they had seen the foe, because they were incorrigible drunkards and were disgracing the name of Australia, is not a pleasant one, and the same holds true of another large class of inefficients who are to be sent back.

When will democratic England and Australia have the sense to follow the example of autocratic Russia and deprive men of the means of making beasts of themselves? Meanwhile we wait the crisis of the war with the hope that our people, at any rate, will have learned its lessons. Unless we are to rise to a higher ideal of personal responsibility and national righteousness, all the blood that has been shed, all the gallant young lives that have been given, will be in vain.

The world in the years that immediately follow on the war will face the greatest test, the most supreme opportunity that has been given it since Christianity came to the earth. How it will use the opportunity, how it will stand the test, is perhaps a greater and more important question than even how the war will end. Meanwhile we can only wait, and do our best to help what we believe to be the cause of right, and pray.

Bishop's Visit to the South.

The Bishop left Thursday Island by the Montoro on December 14 and went to Brisbane, where he was the guest of the Archbishop. He spent Christmas here and on December 29 went on to Sydney, where he was the guest of Rev. J. Jones and the Primate. From Sydney the Bishop went to Cooma, where he stayed with an old friend and Curate, Archdeacon Ward, with whom he made the assent of Mount Kosciusko. From here he went straight through to Tasmania, where he conducted a retreat for the clergy, of whom about 30 were present, including the Bishop and Dean. From Tasmania the Bishop went to Melbourne, preaching on Sunday for the Torres Straits Island Mission. On Monday he left for Adelaide to speak for the same Mission, returning to Melbourne for the Sunday. Here he spent a very busy week and two Sundays, preaching and speaking for the Mission. He then went on to Sydney, where he also spoke and preached for the Torres Straits Islands Mission. Leaving Sydney on February 15, he spoke at Newcastle and reached Brisbane on 17th for a meeting of the Queensland Bishops and of the Standing Committee of the Province. On Sunday, 21st, he preached at the Cathedral and West End, and left for Thursday Island by the Nikko Maru on February 24th after a somewhat busy holiday.

The Carpenterian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XV., No. 58. Thursday Island, April 1, 1915.

To the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of Carpentaria.

My dear people,

You will have already learned that I have accepted my election to the new Diocese of Willochra in South Australia, and that in consequence I shall be leaving the North for good in June next.

After thirty years of North Queensland I had begun to feel that the climate was at length to some extent telling upon me, and that the long journeys and the boat work would be more easily, and with more justice to the Diocese, be performed by a younger man. When therefore there came quite unexpectedly an almost unanimous call to a Diocese where the climate held out promise of a considerable extension of my years of work, where the area was only half that of Carpentaria, where there was no boat work, and where much of the travelling could be done by rail, I felt that on the whole I could probably serve the Church better by devoting the experience I had gained to the work of organising this new Diocese than by working on for a few years longer in Carpentaria.

Nevertheless I am sincerely grieved to leave the North, where I have spent so many happy years and the people from whom I have received so much confidence and kindness, nor can I relinquish without a pang the work of the Diocese with which I have been so closely associated for the last fifteen years.

Unfortunately, ever since the Diocese was founded, there has been a steady and uninterrupted decline of population, both white and coloured. I estimate that the white population is now, at the most, only two-thirds of what it was in 1900. Under these circumstances we have much to be thankful for in the progress that the Church has made, that the clergy and communicants have more than doubled, and that we stand in the happy position of being free either from diocesan or parochial debts of any kind.

It is in Missionary work that the Diocese has made its most marked advance, as may be gathered from the fact that whereas in 1902 the Diocese expended £63 on Missionary work, it last year expended £783 directly and exclusively of the work of A.B.M. and C.M.S.

I have to acknowledge the most generous aid given to the Diocese by friends, both in England and Australia. Prominent among these have been the Carpentaria Association, with its energetic secretary, Miss Gascoigne; Lord Beauchamp; the English Societies: S.P.G., S.P.C.K., O.C.O. Society; Mr Christison, and another anonymous Australian donor. Generally speaking, about half the income of the Diocese has come from England and half from Australia; and the response to our needs has been so generous that for the last six years I have not found it necessary to make any appeal on behalf of the Diocese as such, but have been free to devote myself to pleading for the Missions of the Australian Board of Missions.

My successor will be appointed by the Bishops of Queensland after an opportunity has been given to the parishes to make any suggestions. I do not know who will be appointed, but I ask for him the same loyalty and kindness that I have myself so fully received.

I expect to leave Thursday Island about the middle of June, and to be enthroned at Port Pirie on July 28th. Rev. E. J. Nash will administer the Diocese until the enthronement of your new Bishop, and I take this opportunity of saying how deeply indebted I am to Mr Nash for the great services he has so unassumingly rendered to the Diocese in the past.

I shall do my best to visit all the parishes before my departure, and to say good-bye personally to those with whom I have been so long associated. I hope that the clouds of anxiety and distress, which have been so much intensified by the war, may pass away, and that the Diocese may have a long and prosperous future.

Your affectionate Bishop,
GILBERT,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Thursday, March 18th, at 4 p.m. Present: The Bishop in the chair, the Sub-Dean, Mr. W. Lee-Bryce, Mr. K. O. Mackenzie, and Mr. A. Sullivan. It was resolved to postpone the question of the introduction of a constitution suggested by the last Diocesan Conference until after the new Bishop's enthronement.

It was decided to call for tenders for the completion of the north aisle of the Cathedral. Messrs. Lee-Bryce and A. Sullivan were appointed a sub-committee for this purpose. The Bishop stated that some delay had occurred with regard to the Deaconess Buchanan and the Archer Memorial windows, but both had been ordered, and he hoped would soon arrive from England. The Rev. E. J. Nash, Sub-Dean, would be administrator of the Diocese during the vacancy of the See. Mr. Nash stated that he had received a communication from the Archbishop on the subject of the election, and that he was communicating with all the parishes. The Bishop stated that the See income was now £493, but £100 of this was a grant which might not be permanent.

The Bishop handed in an inventory of all the furniture, etc., in Bishop's House, which belonged to the Diocese, and also a list of all the deeds of land, some 35 in number, belonging to the Diocese, and suggested that a sub-committee should be appointed to examine and take over the custody of the deeds. Messrs Lee-Bryce and Sullivan were accordingly appointed a sub-committee for this purpose. The meeting then terminated.

Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop expects to leave Thursday Island on March 29th for Mossman, where he will spend Easter. He will spend Low Sunday and the preceding week at Cooktown, returning to Thursday Island on April 13th, and leaving the same day for a tour of the Torres Straits Islands. He hopes to return from this tour about April 24th, and to leave ten days later for the Gulf, visiting Croydon and Normanton, and, if possible, Georgetown, and returning to Thursday Island on May 31st. He will then, if the boats allow of it, visit Darwin, and will leave Thursday Island for good about the middle of June. He will spend a few days in Brisbane, about June 27th; a week in Sydney at the beginning of July; a few days in Melbourne; and arrive in Adelaide about July 13th. Here he will be the guest of the Bishop for a fortnight before his enthronement at Port Pirie on July 28th.

Election of the First Bishop of Willochra.

[FROM THE ADELAIDE "CHURCH GUARDIAN."]

"The Bishop of Adelaide summoned the electors to meet on February 26th. They assembled at the Cathedral at a Celebration of Holy Communion at 8.30 a.m. After breakfast at Bishops Court, the clerical and lay electors met at 10.30 at St. Barnabas' College. At the first meeting, at which both clerical and lay members were present, details of procedure were decided on. The clerical electors then met to select and send on to the laity not more than three names. The lay electors met at 2.30 p.m. Then followed a joint meeting of both orders, and at 4.30 the electors proceeded to the Cathedral to record their votes by ballot. The Bishop, attended by his Chaplain carrying the episcopal staff, took his seat in his Bishop's chair at the chancel step. The Dean and those members of the Chapter who were among the electors, occupied their stalls. The Clergy were robed and sat on the south side; the laity sat on the north side of the nave as at Synod. Two ballot boxes had been placed one at either end of the chancel step. The Veni Creator was sung, and some prayers said by the Bishop. The Clergy first cast their votes, then the laity. The Bishop, Chaplain and scrutineers then retired to the Lady Chapel, when the votes were counted. The Bishop was then conducted to the chancel steps and announced the result of the election. His words were as follows:—'By the almost unanimous vote of the Clergy, and by the unanimous vote of the laity, the Bishop of Carpentaria has been elected the first Bishop of the Diocese of Willochra.' The Te Deum was then sung and the Bishop gave his blessing. So ended a long day of prayerful deliberation. Those who took part in the solemn act of choice have repeatedly expressed their conviction that it was overruled and guided throughout by the Holy Spirit of God. Dr. Gilbert White is no stranger to South Australia, and a feeling of profound thankfulness that he has accepted the Bishopric of the Diocese of Willochra has been everywhere felt and expressed. Te Deum Laudamus."

The Choice of a Bishop.

The choice of a new Bishop for Carpentaria lies with the Bishops of Queensland, among whom for this purpose the present Bishop is not included, but inasmuch as they are directed to hold such consultation with the clergy and laity of the Diocese as may be possible, it cannot be out of place for the diocesan paper to indicate some of the qualifications required. The Diocese is so large (600,000 square miles), and the travelling involved so incessant, that it is not desirable that the Bishop should have passed the prime of life, and it will be an additional advantage if he has not reached it. The small time that the Bishop has at home, the smallness of the income and the distance from schools, and the tropical climate, would seem to indicate that the work would probably not be undertaken by a married man with a family, or at least with a young family.

The income of the See was from 1900 to 1912 only £300 a year, with no allowance for travelling. In 1912 it was raised to £400, and for the last two years it has been £500 without travelling allowance. The last £100, however, is dependent on an annual grant and cannot be regarded as absolutely secure. The income from invested capital of the See (£400) is not sufficient, with no grant for travelling expenses, in these days of the increased cost of living. Travelling expenses may be estimated at £100 a year. It is obvious that the new Bishop ought to be a man who is interested in Missionary work, for the most characteristic note of the Diocese since its formation has been the decrease of the white population and the increase of Missionary work and opportunities. In 1901 the white population was estimated at 15,000 in the Queensland part of the Diocese, while to-day it is doubtful whether the population exceeds 10,000. At the same period there was practically no Mission Station within the area of the Diocese, and now there are well equipped stations at the Mitchell River, Roper River, Moa Island, and we hope shortly in the Torres Straits and Groote Eylandt. Capacity to endure fatigue and to rough it by sea and by land is also necessary. Of the moral and spiritual gifts that are needed we do not presume to speak. We have every confidence that the Bishops will choose wisely, and that the Diocese will loyally accept the man that is chosen.

Property.

As the Diocese is not a corporation, it cannot hold property. Accordingly the deeds for all the old properties in the Diocese are in the name of the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland. The deeds themselves have, however, been handed over to us. All newer property is vested in the Bishop, who has deposited the deeds, together with a deed of trust in each instance, in the Q.N. Bank, Thursday Island. As soon as the new Bishop is enthroned the present Bishop will transfer these deeds to him, and he should then execute similar deeds of trust. The deeds are examined and reported on by a committee appointed by each Diocesan Conference.

Departure of the Bishop.

The following resolution was passed by the Executive Council of the Australian Board of Missions at its meeting on Friday, February 12th, 1915:—"That this meeting of the Executive Council of the Australian Board of Missions desires to place on record its deep appreciation of the apostolic labours of the Bishop of Carpentaria, and his great service to the Missionary work of the Church in Australia, and offers its best wishes on his appointment to the new and important Diocese of Willochra."

The following minute was passed at a meeting of the Brisbane Diocesan Council on February 5th, 1915:—"That the Council, having heard that the Bishop of Carpentaria is shortly leaving the Province, desires to place on record its deep appreciation of his self-denying work, and to assure his Lordship that the members will not forget him in their prayers, and trust he will have health and strength for many years to enable him to carry on his work."

Similar resolutions have been passed by most of the parishes in the Diocese.

The Bishop of North Queensland writes most sympathetically in the Northern Churchman of March 1st:—

Bishop's Registry,
Townsville, 15th February, 1915.

My Dear People,

The Church in Queensland is about to part with an able and devoted man who has served her for thirty years, eighteen of them in this Diocese. Many of you know personally, and all of you by reputation, Gilbert White, D.D., Bishop of Carpentaria. As a scholar and a poet, as well as a Missionary Bishop, he is known throughout the Anglican world. You know that he has now accepted the Diocese of Willochra, which has been cut out of the Diocese of Adelaide, and includes a large portion of South Australia towards its northern boundary. For the sake of the Church at large, it was right that he should go; his great gifts and powers demand a greater scope than could be found for them among the unfortunately dwindling population of the Gulf. Also for his own sake, after so many years of constant danger and hardship in journeys by land and sea where no conveniences of travel yet exist, and the tax upon strength occasioned by an extreme climate, it was only fair that he should enter a sphere of work more favourable to health.

The Bishop has given ungrudgingly of his love and labour to the North. This Diocese will always bear the mark that he has left upon it. He worked for a time in many of its parishes and met and conquered many a difficult situation; the elder people often tell me of their gratitude to him. And in these quite recent days, our lads, who spent some months at the end of last year performing military duties on Thursday Island, have come back, many of them, with a new zeal for faith because of what the Bishop taught them in the "Quetta" Memorial Church during their stay. My own loss in being deprived of a neighbour so wise and kind and sympathetic is great. I shall be expressing the feelings of you all when I say that we wish him every happiness in his new Diocese, and I am sure that we shall try to support him in his new venture—no light one—with our prayers.

Meanwhile the people of the Diocese of Carpentaria have a special claim upon our sympathy. They have shown wonderful steadfastness and loyalty, and through days of increasing difficulty and heavy material losses have to give generously to the support of their Church. It is hard for them to lose the leader they have so long trusted and revered. And the departure of the Bishop, regretted as it will be by the white people, entails a specially serious loss for the Aborigines. The constant and growing activity of Bishop White among them has been an object lesson to the Church in Australia: the black man has had no more faithful and understanding friend than he.

It will probably interest many of our readers to know something about the new Diocese of Willochra, to which our Bishop has been appointed. Speaking broadly, it contains the whole of South Australia except that portion which is south of a line drawn 130 miles north of Adelaide, from Spencer's Gulf to the N.S.W. border south of Broken Hill. The south-western portion of the Diocese is Eyre's Peninsula, a growing wheat district, of which Port Lincoln is the chief port. It is hoped ultimately to form this part into a separate Diocese, and, though under the jurisdiction of the Bishop, it is not strictly part of the Diocese of Willochra. The chief industries of the Diocese are wheat and sheep; and the most important towns Port Pirie, where the ore from Broken Hill is smelted; Port Augusta, the starting point of the transcontinental railway to Perth; Quorn; and Petersburg, an important railway centre. The Bishop will be enthroned at Port Pirie, which is a town of about 10,000 inhabitants, and will for the present live at Petersburg, which is a convenient centre. There is no episcopal residence, but an allowance will be made for rent until a house is built. The income of the See is £500, with an allowance of £100 for travelling expenses. The first Synod will meet for formal business only immediately after the Bishop's enthronement. There are about twenty clergy in the Diocese at present, but more are said to be needed. The Port Darwin Parish Paper says:—"Willochra is the name of a stream running from near Mount Remarkable north to Lake Torrens, having several tributaries. The name thus described the largest part of the watershed in the settled portion of the north of the State of South Australia."

"Its meaning was 'green bush,' the reference being to the tender shoots of the polygonum bush, which sprouted in the good seasons when the Willochra overflowed its banks in the great plain through which it flows."

The Secretary of the Carpentarian begs to acknowledge, with thanks, the following subscriptions:—Mrs Wilson £1, Rev. C. B. Mirrlees 8/-, Mrs MacIntyre 10/-, per Rev. A. McD. Hassell 10/-, Rev. F. Walker and Mr Hennessey 4/- each, Mrs Pearce 3/-, Bishop Stone-Wigg 2/6, Mesdames Finnis, Woodhead, and Robeson 2/- each, Miss A. Jenkin 2/-, Rev. A. McD. Hassell 2/-, Mr G. Bennett and Mr Toulasik 2/- each.

Love Your Enemies.

We have to-day the possibility of putting our Christianity to a very practical test by loving our enemies. This does not mean as a few strangely constituted people seem to think, that we are to prefer our enemies to our own people and always believe that they must be right and our own folk wrong. We are not told to love our enemy more than but as our own people, that is with equal fairness, justice, and truthfulness. It is very hard to do so, but that is no reason why we should not make the attempt. In the first place we must remember that the German army is not entirely represented by those in high places who have adopted the policy of "Schröcklichkeit" or the criminals who have committed such vile excesses under the ægis of their protection. We must remember with admiration the courage and devotion with which hundreds of thousands have marched on to certain death, giving their lives freely with no hope of victory, but patiently dying for their country that they might simply distract the enemy's attention or waste his ammunition. We must remember that the mass of the German people firmly believe what they have been told, that they are the innocent victims of an international plot of which England is the arch conspirator. They believe that they are fighting purely in self-defence, and that their cause is so righteous that they are amply justified in invoking the aid of God. We may wonder how it is possible for them to believe this in the face of facts, but there is no doubt that they do believe it. There is an instructive passage in the secret report of a high German officer quoted in the French Yellow Book: "the idea that our armaments are a reply to the armaments and preparations of the French must be instilled into the people." After such careful schooling we cannot wonder that the German people believe what they do. We must remember that from the German point of view they are in a peculiarly dangerous position. Hemmed in on one side by the huge and ever antagonistic masses of Russia, and on the other by a rejuvenated France ever mindful of the loss of Alsace and Lorraine, their sole outlet for their huge population was over seas. The population was too great for the land. It had to be employed in manufactures, and these manufactures were dependent on overseas trade. Every German ship had to pass through the Channel, which was practically an English lake; and the hostility of England might in a moment stop every German ship and close every factory, as indeed as it has now done. Can we wonder that Germany viewed its position with a not altogether unreasonable amount of alarm. Our Christian duty as well as our truest political wisdom is to abstain from increasing the terror and distress of the German people. If we indulge in talk about crushing out and annihilating the German power the only effect will be to drive them to resist the last man, for they will naturally argue that if they are to be destroyed they may as well take it fighting. The unofficial fraternisation of the German soldiers with ours on Christmas Day shows that the common people do not all share in their rulers' creed of Hate. We ought to lose no opportunity of showing that it is the militarism of the rulers that we are fighting, and that we have no hate for the common people, a kindred race with many noble qualities. We ought to try to regard the enemy in the light in which we should regard those who were opposed to us in a civil war; detesting the false principles by which they were ruled, and blaming the leaders who had led them astray, but remembering that the people themselves were our brothers and looking forward to the day when a true peace should reconcile those so bitterly opposed to-day. Hatred is bad policy as well as unchristian, and love alone can win the greatest of victories. Lastly, true love will very probably be the last, not the first, to advocate peace. As both sides become weary and exhausted there will be many proposals for a patched-up peace, which will settle nothing and leave the future full of threats and darkness. Love will say "It is better to fight on till a peace can be arranged which is a real and lasting peace, based on justice and upheld by the memory of generosity; a peace which will ensure to the world some hope of a progress untarnished by the fear of prodigious armaments. For the hope of such a peace it will be willing to endure yet longer even the horrors of war, since it is for peace that it is fighting. South Africa to-day is a striking example of a war continued until true peace could be made, a peace which has stood the severest of all tests without breaking down."

Torres Straits Islands

On April 13 the Bishop and Rev. J. Jones, General Secretary of A.B.M., hope to leave Thursday Island for a visit to all the islands of the Torres Straits. The Papuan Industries have kindly lent the Goodwill on payment of bare out-of-pocket expenses, and Rev. S. Walker, of Badu, is kindly giving his services as master and pilot. We hope to give a full account of this interesting journey in our next issue.

St. Paul's, Moa.

The following Extracts from the Report of the Superintendent of St. Paul's Mission, Moa, to the Government Resident will be of interest to our readers:—

Dec. 27th, 1914.

I herewith beg to present my report for the above Mission for the year 1914.

Normal conditions have prevailed throughout. The school with an attendance of 43 has maintained full time. Chief attention is given to the three R's. Composition proves a gigantic difficulty, but some knowledge of it is needful for letter writing. Geography is popular. Progress is sustained up to a certain age, but the desire to get to work on the boats over-rides all. Three of the senior boys have been signed on for beche-de-mer luggers during the last quarter of the year.

The great need is to place these young boys under a master who will exercise judicious discipline and take a personal interest in them. We were very fortunate in being able to do this. Three girls were also released from school. All were within a few months of sixteen years of age.

Many inducements have been held out to obtain the services of our girls for domestic purposes by the residents of Thursday Island. It is thought expedient only to sanction the acceptance of the offers under certain conditions. If the girl has attained the age of sixteen, and can be reasonably released from home duties with the assent of the parents; consent is not withheld. We are anxious that the girls should have domestic training under particular care.

The health of the village has been good; only one death of a new born infant breaks a record.

Births during the year have been six. Only one marriage has eventuated. We have a few fine eligible young men and women, whom we would like to see settled in a home of their own.

The population of the settlement is 135—67 males and 68 females.

The court has had a slack time during the year. The councillors are not sufficiently alive to the interests of the village. It has been a great difficulty to persuade them to develop the village according to plan. After much persuasion a drain has been dug to drain off the swamp during the rainy season. Our plans for improvement were many, but owing to scarcity of labour the schemes have not come off.

The native company boat has earned very little owing to the collapse of the shelling industry. All our eligible men were out at work, but most of them have now returned to their home. A little debt for the upkeep of the Banzai is still owing.

The gardens have yielded abundantly again, and much stuff has been given to people of neighbouring islands. Our people are fortunate in having soil that yields large quantities of food stuffs. The gardening entails a great deal of hard work, and it is to their credit that they labour and produce more than enough to maintain themselves throughout the year. Young boys and girls have their garden plots.

A wooden cottage 36 x 12, with verandah back and front, purchased from James Campbell, Brisbane, has been erected for the Superintendent. The group of substantial Mission buildings gives an appearance of permanency, and their utility is beyond estimate.

Religious instruction and services are held daily.

Notes.

Rev. H. H. Ayscough, who recently took his B.A. degree at the University of Durham, has resigned from the Diocese of Carpentaria as he wishes to remain in England for the purpose of taking his M.A. degree, and gaining some further experience of ministerial life in England. The Bishop has accepted Mr. Ayscough's resignation with great regret. Mr. Ayscough was trained at Bishop's College, Thursday Island, and served at Croydon, Normanton, Cooktown, and Darwin before going to England on leave of absence. Mr. Ayscough is now curate at Bearpark, near Durham.

Rev. J. Jones hopes to arrive at Thursday Island on April 9th to accompany the Bishop on his visit to the islands. His old friends at Thursday Island are looking forward to his visit with the very greatest pleasure.

Rev. J. T. Lane and Mrs. Lane hope to arrive at Thursday Island on April 13th, and two new workers for the Mitchell River will accompany them, Miss Quinon, who has had considerable experience of Church work in Sydney and in New Zealand, and Miss Philipps, of Melbourne.

A young officer recovering from his wounds in an English hospital summed up his experiences very tersely. The war was, he said, beastly, and he was very much afraid, but he did not want to be anywhere else. Surely this is the highest kind of courage, to admit discouragement and fear but to resolutely overcome them.

Not a few clergy have joined the combatant ranks. We cannot understand how they reconcile this with their vows as priests. It is of course quite a different case in France where they are obliged to serve. They would be better employed in fighting the world, the flesh, and the devil, which are the causes of war. They are just as much needed in their proper place as the doctor is in his place. An army cannot exist if it is nothing but combatants. It must be supported by an almost equal host of providers, supply men, artificers, manufacturers, doctors, nurses, chaplains, statesmen, financiers and others, and it is here, not among the combatants, that the priest should find his place. We can at least understand the self-sacrifice which has led some priests to enlist in the ranks mistaken as we believe them to be, but when a priest accepts a commission we feel that he goes perilously near to renouncing his holy office for a position which has much to attract an active man in time of war.

The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearly centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum.

Visit to Torres Straits Islands.

I left Thursday Island at 7.15 a.m. on Wednesday, April 14th, in the "Goodwill," with Rev. F. Walker (her master), Rev. E. J. Nash, Rev. J. Jones, and Miss Quinan. There was a fresh breeze and two of our party soon fell victims, for the boat rolled badly, being light. We made a good passage and arrived at St. Paul's, Moa, at 12.15 p.m. We were met by the whole population, who were enthusiastic in their welcome of Mr Jones. Mr Jones was much impressed by the wonderful growth of the settlement since it was founded in 1908, and by the good buildings and the order and contentment everywhere visible. Immediately after dinner, which was rather late, I baptised three children, and after the baptisms Mr. Jones examined the children in the school, the answers being excellent. After this the great event was the wedding of Bana and Dinah. Mr Jones gave away the bride, and though I am not able to describe the ceremony in proper journalistic style, it was evidently a great success. In the evening five candidates were confirmed. The Church had been decorated, and looked very well. The Bishop wore his cope. After service Mr Nash and I returned on board the "Goodwill," Mr Jones staying on shore for the night. I had arranged for a Celebration of Holy Communion at 7 a.m., and so was up early, and we landed at 6.30 a.m., to find the whole community wrapped in slumber, after the exertions of the previous day. The bell quickly woke them, and there was soon a procession of men and women in their best wending their way to the Church. Mr Jones explained that he had spent the night till about 5 a.m. in wrestling with an enquiring and aggressive goat, who apparently wanted to spend the night in his room! The Celebration of Holy Communion, with about 30 communicants, was very happy and brought back many memories of the start and progress of the Mission. After service we bade good-bye to many friends, and leaving Miss Quinan to take Mr. Cole's place, while he and Mrs Cole went for their holiday, we went on board to breakfast, sailing at 9 a.m. It was blowing hard, and we all fell more or less victims to the sea; at any rate we were very glad to lie down on the hatch, and hope for better days. After a rather miserable day and much heavy rolling we arrived at Yam Island at 4 p.m., and at once went ashore, and after greeting the people, who were waiting dressed in their best, we all adjourned to the Church, where we had a hearty service. Immediately after the service all the men adjourned to the schoolroom, and we had an interesting conversation about the change of ecclesiastical administration, and reassured the people on some points about which they were anxious. They wanted a Church bell, and were quite ready to provide the cost, as also some small repairs to the Church. The singing was very hearty, and we parted feeling that much had been done to remove misunderstandings.

Mrs. Smallwood, the Government teacher, kindly asked us to dinner, and we went on board again, leaving at 9 p.m. It was a very bad night with squalls of rain and strong headwind, against which we made slow progress, only reaching our anchorage under Dungeness Island at 1 a.m., and having to anchor in 15 fathoms of water.

The weather was but very little better when we left again in the morning after an uneasy night, and we still rolled heavily. We made very slow progress all day, and did not anchor off the beach at Massig until 5 p.m. We landed at once, and walked over a mile through the bush to the village, which is on the south-east side of the island. We passed many gardens, which seemed to be doing fairly well though wanting rain. Here again we repeated the programme of Yam. We were especially pleased with the singing. After a short visit to the Government teacher we again went on board; and I must confess that I was completely tired out. The Church is very resonant, and is under a cocoanut grove. There was a strong wind and the crying of several babies to contend with; however I got through all right, but very tired with the four days constant work and travelling. We had a good quiet night on board, and left at 8 a.m. At last for the first time wind and sea were merciful, and we made a good passage to Darnley, arriving at mid-day. The island is high and picturesque, and the lower slopes are well cultivated. The anchorage is a poor one, and much exposed. We landed after dinner, and transferred our belongings to an empty house ashore. I must confess that for myself it was an immense pleasure to sit ashore in the shelter of a room on a chair at a table and to look out over the reef to the foam-capped waves and listen to the wail of the freshening wind from the security of the land. I love the sea very much—from the land.

Afterwards we walked down to the village, which is scattered along several little bays and buried in cocoanut groves. Here my services were requisitioned to find out what had become of the water which supplied the well, which had recently run dry. I diagnosed that part at least of the supply had become diverted to the right, about 25 feet from the well, and suggested for the present distress the digging of another well above the point of divergence. In the evening we had a meeting of the men, the greater part of whom were away on the boats. Those left were chiefly the older men.

Early next morning we had a quiet little Celebration of Holy Communion for our own party in the Mission House, and at 10 a.m. a big service in the Church. The whole island must have been present, and the singing was most hearty. I preached, and the people were most attentive. All the people were in their best, and there were many most intelligent faces. Before service I took the children for religious instruction. The white Church, the green palm trees, the purple reef, and the blue sea beyond made a most beautiful picture.

We were up at 5.30 a.m., and off by 7 a.m. The wind was due ahead, but was fortunately moderate, and we made a good passage with the engines alone, arriving at Murray Island at 1 p.m. As we neared the island we passed through innumerable reefs. The islands are three in number, and evidently volcanic. They mark the northern end of the Great Barrier Reef, which lies some miles to the westward, and rise up boldly to the height of 600 and 750 feet. We anchored on the edge of the shore reef, dropping anchor in 7 fathoms of water; a short distance further in there was 1 fathom, while under our stern there were 14 fathoms.

After being welcomed by the people and hospitably lodged by Mr. Bruce, who has been Government teacher for 25 years, and has an extraordinary knowledge of the native character and customs, and arranging for a meeting with the men at 5 p.m., we set out under the guidance of two of the councillors for a walk round the island. There is a good road 5 miles long round the greater part of the island, and we followed all the way through the miles of gardens and shade trees. It was a scene of enchanting beauty, and I had no idea that there was anything like it in Queensland. It reminded me more of Ceylon or the Philippine Islands, but had the additional beauty of the half-mile wide reef surrounding the island with its endless walls built in immemorial times of the past for fish traps, and the sea with its countless reefs rising out of 40 or 50 fathoms water away to the Barrier. About half-way round a halt was called, and a boy of our following was sent up a cocoanut tree to fetch down some nuts, which provided us with a refreshing drink. On the southern side of the island the volcanic formation is very obvious.

We got back in time for the meeting of men, and I gave an address, and made arrangements for the next day. An interesting evening with Mr Bruce brought a busy day to a close.

Next morning there were 150 people out of a total population of 420 at Church at 7 a.m. I wondered in what white parish the same proportion would attend, especially when we remember that some live two or three miles from the Church. This week-day service is held regularly twice a week. I conducted the service and preached. The people were very attentive, but the singing was very inferior to that of Darnley. The Church is a fine concrete building, much more ecclesiastical looking than most. Our brief spell of fine weather seems, alas, to be over; for this morning it is raining, and looks as if it meant to continue, while it is evidently blowing hard at sea, and we are glad of the shelter of the hill. After breakfast we met the native Church officials, and discussed a large number of cases of discipline, as many wished to be readmitted to Church membership. Out of 25 cases, there were 13 of quarrelling, 3 of attending forbidden dances, 4 of drunkenness, and five of immorality. As we could hardly receive the penitents into a Church which was as yet only Anglican in name, I asked Mr Walker to receive in their accustomed manner those guilty of the lesser offences, while those who had sinned more seriously were put on probation until the arrival of our first missionary. It is only fair to say that the offences dated over the last seven or eight years, and that none were more recent than twelve months. In the afternoon I was kept busy with nine baptisms and four weddings. The children were very good, except one of about 18 months old, who suddenly realised that I was white, and rent the air with convulsive yells. No pen of mine is sufficient to describe the weddings. The four brides and their bridesmaids were adorned with profusion of ribbons of red and the most brilliant of all greens. To get all the brides and bridesmaids, the grooms and best men in the right places was only possible by the organising genius of Mr Nash, and finally the right couples were duly united, Mr Nash giving a very practical and helpful address. After the weddings I walked out to the other end of the island at the request of Mr Bruce to try to find water, and was able to recommend a spot where there was a fair, though not large, flow of the indispensable fluid, which the women and girls have now to carry two or more miles.

We were off at daylight next morning (Wednesday, April 21st) and cherished ambitions of reaching Saibai, 100 miles away, by moonlight, but when we got to the passage of the Warrior Reef, 60 miles, about 4.30 p.m., we found that the sun was shining right down the passage, and that it was impossible to go through as it is full of dangerous patches. There was nothing for it but to turn round and make our way back to Dalrymple Island, seven or eight miles away to the right. It was dark when we reached the island, and anchoring proved a ticklish business. The reef shelves from above low water level to 18 fathoms in the space of a few yards, and the only way is to drop the anchor on the edge of the reef and swing off into deep water, a difficult feat in the dark, but safely accomplished. We sailed at 3 a.m., and by daylight sighted our old friend Dungeness, and an hour or two later passed through the reef by the large passage between Dungeness and Warrior Island, where once lived the famous tribe of warriors who attacked a British gunboat in their canoes. Soon after the engine broke down and we had to rely on our sails until we were near Donan. We anchored at Saibai at 3.15 p.m., and immediately went on shore. We were met by the people with the news of several marriages, so there seemed to be no time to be lost. We went straight to the Church and held service, at which I gave an address on the proposed changes, and afterwards held a meeting for the men. As elsewhere I explained that the Deacons would have to become Wardens, which did not seem to disturb them. One of them made a very nice little speech of welcome—short, emphatic and to the point. After the meeting came the weddings, three young couples, simply dressed, and without best men or bridesmaids. I was just congratulating myself that I had got through my labours, when a fourth couple, an elderly policeman and a widow turned up and pleaded not to be overlooked. The bridegroom said he did not know his own age, and when asked for that of the bride, declared that it was the same as his own. A short walk and tea brought us on to 8 o'clock, when the Deacons arrived, and I talked to them for an hour, when we parted very good friends. After a short visit to the wedding festivities, we got on board before 10 p.m., after a very busy afternoon.

We left Saibai early on the morning of April 23rd, and had a splendid run of 40 miles to Mabuig with all sail set. We passed over several large shoals, and went through the Mabuig reef by the narrowest passage that it was possible to conceive. It was not even straight, and in several places there could not have been more than a foot or eighteen inches to spare on each side of the ship. We landed about 2 p.m., and made our way to the village, escorted by a large number of men. The new concrete Church is a really handsome building, about 70 feet long, and very lofty. The roof, which is to be of red tiles, is not yet erected, though all the materials are to hand, as the natives thought they were not equal to the work of erecting it by themselves.

We had the usual services, including four baptisms and a most interesting meeting with the men, getting back on board soon after 6 p.m. After tea I had a talk with the two deacons, and explained to them that they were to be Churchwardens in the future. We left Mabuig at 2 a.m., and had a violent headwind and rough sea, but by the help of our engine we managed to make steady if slow way against it, and arrived at Moa about 8.30 a.m. We were very glad to get in under the shelter of the reef after the bucketing outside. We went ashore, and found Miss Quinan very well, and getting on most happily with the people. We were unable to stay more than a hour on shore to our regret; but other work had to be done, and were off again about 11 a.m. The people came down to the water's edge, and waved to us until we were far away. I felt sad to be parting with my Moa friends for good. We retraced our course round the north-eastern part of the island, and now with a fair wind, and about 1 p.m. arrived at Adaru, a picturesque little village, with a new concrete Church. On landing we found that most of the men were away, and arranged for the people to come over to Badu for the Sunday services; then the anchor was raised, and a short run across the Straits brought us to Badu, and Mr. Walker's hospitable Station at Dogai. It was an immense refreshment to get a bath and sit in a civilised house again after ten or twelve days of the crowded cabin of the "Goodwill."

Next day, Sunday, April 25th, we had a quiet celebration at Dogai at 7 a.m., and morning prayer in the village church a mile away at 10 a.m. The Church was crowded, more than half the congregation being men. The singing was excellent. After service I had a very satisfactory meeting with the men in the Mission House. This is the last island, and in every one I have met the people, and in every case they have professed themselves ready to welcome the Church and its work. As one of the Saibai men expressed it: "We are like children who have lost their father and mother. We do not know what to do, or where to look. You will be our father and show us the way to go, and how to live. We thank you." One man came to me to anxiously enquire whether I would continue him in his office, which he had held continuously for over 40 years. He was the official Church awakener, and had an ancient black rod with a silver top, with which he went round and prodded any member of the congregation who fell asleep under the sometimes very long-winded exhortations of the native Deacons. "Sometimes," the people complained, "decona preach so long, he break our back!" and because of the official prodder they could not even find escape in sleep. I continued the old worthy in his office, understanding that he had become somewhat old and no longer terrible. There is a flourishing temperance society among the men with 60 members. In the afternoon about 40 adults, together with a number of children assembled at Dogai for a Bible class, which is usually conducted by Mrs. Zahel. This was taken by Mr. Nash, and the attention of the men was admirable. After the class I walked up the hill behind the station, and had a most magnificent view over the islands in every direction. The only view I know to compare with it is that from Cape Misenum, which protected the old Roman naval station near Baiae, and served as a look-out port. The Badu view is, however, both more beautiful and more extensive. There was a crowded congregation again at night, and Mr. Jones preached. We left Badu next morning about 10 a.m. after many farewells, and arrived back at Thursday Island at 4 p.m. after a most deeply interesting time.

We owe a great debt of gratitude to Rev. F. Walker not only for lending us the "Goodwill" and for his constant care for our comfort on board, but for the invaluable assistance he gave us in helping to reconcile the natives to the changes in ecclesiastical matters, and by giving us the benefit of his great experience of the Straits and of the native mind.

The A.B.M. has appointed Rev. J. Done, of Melbourne, to carry on the Church's work among the islands. Mr. Done hopes to arrive at Thursday Island in July.

History of the Diocese.

[CONCLUDED.]

In January, 1912, the Bishop left for a holiday in the South, the first regular holiday since taking up his work. He visited Tasmania and came back much refreshed in body and mind. In May he visited Moa, and celebrated the Holy Communion with 31 communicants.

The new "Francis Pritt" was launched at the beginning of this year, and handed over on April 2nd. The boat has proved a most satisfactory investment.

On June 24th Mr Thomas Woodd, one of the missionaries at the Mitchell River, died on his way South on furlough. He was a devoted worker, and was looking forward to a speedy return to the Mission, but God had other work for him.

The Bishop of North Queensland resigned during this year, and the Bishop of Carpentaria sent to the Archbishop a renewal of his protest against the appointment of a Bishop with the title of "North Queensland," seeing that North Queensland was in the Diocese of Carpentaria.

In August the Bishop accompanied Rev. W. M. Wilkinson on a tour in the Cape York Peninsula, visiting Ebagoolah and Coen. Mr Wilkinson continued his journey northward from Coen, and the Bishop returned with a black boy as companion.

On Jan. 30th the Bishop left for the Philippine Islands to visit Bishop Brent's Mission to the Igorot headhunters in the Mountains of Luzon. On the way he paid a flying visit to Hong Kong and Canton. The visit to the Igorots proved of the deepest interest, and the Bishop's account of his experiences was widely read.

In April the Bishop went South to preach for the Board of Missions, and was present at the consecration of the new Bishop of North Queensland.

The Diocesan Conference was held at Cooktown on August 20th, 1913, and a very helpful time was spent. The Bishop of North Queensland was present, and kindly conducted a Quiet Day for the Clergy.

On St. Peter's Day the Douglas Memorial Chapel was opened; over 100 representatives of the Torres Straits Islands were present, and were much impressed by the beauty of the memorial window, which was their gift.

In April of this year Rev. W. M. Wilkinson started on his long two years' journey through Central Australia.

The beginning of 1914 was saddened by the death of two Diocesan workers, Mrs Matthews, of the Mitchell River Mission, and Deaconess Buchanan, whose name had become a household word in the North, and, indeed, throughout Australia.

In May the Bishop drove overland to the Roper River to visit the Mission, and on his return had a narrow escape from an accident caused by four horses bolting with his buggy.

After the outbreak of the War in August, the Bishop spent four months at Thursday Island, acting as Chaplain to the considerable number of troops then stationed there.

In December, 1914, the Bishop went South, and conducted a Retreat for the Clergy in Tasmania in January, 1915. He also visited Melbourne, Sydney and Adelaide, and preached on behalf of the Torres Islands Mission.

On January 28th he accepted the See of Willochra on condition that he was allowed six months in order to visit the Torres Straits Islands and try to get the Mission under way. This visit took place in March, when the Bishop, accompanied by Rev. J. Jones and Rev. E. J. Nash, visited the various islands of the Straits in the auxiliary schooner "Goodwill." It is not a little remarkable that by far the greatest Missionary advance of the Church should take place in this year of War and stress.

The Way of the Lord.

When I think of the horrors and sufferings of War which have come upon my beloved country, certainly through no wish or desire of its own, but in consequence of its following its noblest instinct to defend (though too late) the weak, I am inclined to ask "Where is God's good government of the world?" Then I recall my last visit to England some seven or eight years ago. I remember the shock given me by the rejection of the Government's attempt at Licensing Reform, how not only the selfish and the wordly but how many of one's own friends, whom one knew to be neither, how many, how probably a large majority of the clergy shrieked and howled against the Government because they were interfering with the sacred rights of property, with the vested interest of the brewer. What mattered the degradation of the people—what mattered the enchainment of the people by the curse of drink—so long as the sacred rights of property in beer were respected? I think this one fact saddened me more than all the many things I found to cheer me in the old country. Since then it would seem as if things had gone from bad to worse. Mr. Lloyd-George tells the working man that drink in England is a worse enemy than the Germans, and this at a moment when England is fighting for its life. Luxury and selfishness were ever increasing, bitterness and party strife ever growing keener, civil war in sight, social questions debated with a bitterness and hatred that seemed to presage ruin. When I think of all these things I say "No! God knows His own business." Whatever the loss and trouble of War may be it is better than the spiritual deafness and blindness, better than the fratricidal bitterness and strife which was threatening England. But I go further, I do not hide the fact that I am not an optimist. It seems to me not impossible, not even improbable that we may have to face far worse things than any we have yet endured, more suffering, more loss, perhaps humiliation and failure. Who knows? Whatever our path, and wherever it may lead, I believe that as we went into this War for the right it will be God's path, and will lead to that which in the end will be for our highest welfare. Take our sins alone. I believe that the shameless and most widespread degradation of marriage revealed by the declining birthrate was enough alone and by itself to justify God's punishment of England and France not only by what they have suffered, but by sufferings infinitely greater than those that they have yet endured. The Germans pray "Gott strafe England." I believe that He is punishing her, not to please the Germans, who would do better to pray for forgiveness for their own sins of arrogance and ferocity, but punishing in love, and because he sees in her hope and promise of amendment and redemption. I remember the old words "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth," and so am heartened to endure whatever God had sent or may send. The great need at present is for men and women who will endure without losing their heads, without losing faith and courage whatever happens. Moral victory implies sooner or later material success. It was because Germany thought, not without reason, that as a nation we had lost moral fibre, and become soft and powerless that she was encouraged to plan an attack upon us. We know that she largely miscalculated the extent of the evil, but that the evil was there, eating out our national life, few would care to deny. If we can but return into the way of the Lord we shall need to fear no foe.

Forgetting.

Among the many good gifts of God to men there is one for which we seldom thank Him, which we are indeed a little ashamed of, but which is indeed one of the best and most merciful of His gifts, the power to forget.

Of course like all other good things this may be abused. We may forget, where it is part of our obvious duty to remember, but it is not so with a large proportion of the pains and sorrows of life. Were we to retain the vivid impression that they first make upon us, life would be intolerable. Some great disaster, public or private, happens. It comes upon us like a physical blow. It fills all our thoughts. It darkens the sun by day and haunts our dreams by night. But quickly, we are sometimes ashamed to think how quickly, ordinary life reasserts itself. Other things, daily cares, joys and sorrows, begin to fill our thoughts, and the great sorrow begins to recede into the background. Thank God that it is so. If we allow too much space to grief it paralyses our usefulness, and makes us forget the plainest duties. Fogazzaro, in one of his novels, "Piccolo Mondo Antico," has a vivid picture of a naturally good and amiable woman who is so overcome by grief for the death of her little daughter, that she neglects her husband and her household duties, and for years does nothing but selfishly bewail herself, and moon round the grave of the child. St. Paul realised the duty of "forgetting those things which are behind," if he was to press effectively toward the march of his high calling in Jesus Christ. "Heaviness may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." It is because we cannot for ever feel with equal keenness, but must forget the first sharpness and edge of sorrow that we are able to face life and duty, and endure to the end.

Bishop's Visit to Gulf and Darwin.

The Bishop arrived at Normanton on May 6th, on his last visit to the Gulf District. On Friday he took the Religious Instruction in the State School, and on Sunday preached at Morning and Evening Prayer. It was pitiful to see how the numbers of the congregation had diminished; the only satisfaction was the large proportion of those left who gathered at the early celebration.

On Tuesday the Bishop left for Croydon. Here again the diminution was even more marked. Practically nothing is doing, and most of the Churchpeople have left the town. Yet the Church struggles on gallantly. A meeting of the Parochial Council, which was held on Wednesday night, and at which the Bishop was present, disclosed the fact that the Church was only £10 behind in the annual accounts, after a year of exceptionally hard times, including seven months of War.

On Thursday, May 13th, Ascension Day, a gathering of parishioners was held in the evening. The attendance was large for the Croydon of to-day, and after some music and songs Mr J. S. Chandler, the People's Warden, read an address to the Bishop from the parishioners, which deplored "the loss of one who, for the past 15 years, has exercised a growing influence on the whole spiritual life of the North, and to whom our Church in particular could ever look for sympathy." The address continued "Under your Lordship's guidance the Missionary work of this Diocese has steadily progressed, and your special knowledge of this work will be much missed." The Bishop, in his reply, said that Australia was more than ever in need of religion. He did not think that the gravity of the War was realised in Australia, and he showed how real the call was to young men to give their services. He was very sorry to leave the North, which, if not perfect, had at least the virtue of reality, and which had given him so many years of happiness. More songs and music followed, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

On Friday the Easter Vestry Meeting was held, and on Sunday the Bishop held Confirmations at Croydon and Golden Gate, in addition to preaching at Croydon in the evening.

On Monday the Bishop returned to Normanton, where he had to spend ten days, as there was no means of getting back to Thursday Island. On Sunday there was a large congregation at the celebration of Holy Communion, and the Church was full at night when the Bishop confirmed several candidates. He arrived at Thursday Island on May 30th, and two days later left for Darwin, where he spent five days as the guest of Judge Bevan. He preached on the Sunday, and held a Confirmation in the afternoon. On Monday he met the Parochial Council, and resolutions and speeches were made expressing great regret at the Bishop's departure. He returned to Thursday Island on June 12th, and on the following day held a Confirmation in the Cathedral, and preached at Evensong.

Farewell to Carpentaria.

[BY THE BISHOP.]

O land of the flaming noon,
Where the hot unending track
Leads on by the waning moon
To the men who live out back.

O land of the white ketch sails
And the reefs of coral seas,
The roar of the nor'-west gales,
And the whispering sunset breeze.

O land of the camping fires,
And the slow night talk of men
Of things that the day inspires,
And the things beyond their ken.

O land of the childlike race
With its longdrawn wailing cry,
Earth's sons who have lost their place
Who but ask for room to die.

Farewell to my home of years
To the life now up now down,
Farewell amid hopes and fears
To my friends white, black and brown

Unknown is the lonely main
Where I steer my vessel forth
So, doubtful of port again,
I have left my heart up North.

South Sea Islanders' Farewell.

A touching incident in the Bishop's departure was the entirely spontaneous farewell of the South Sea men. The Bishop and Miss White innocently accepted an invitation to "a last cup of tea," at the South Sea Home, and found a most elaborate feast prepared, and a number of the white Church-workers also invited. After an elaborate feast of fowls and sucking pig, during which the visitors were elaborately waited on by the Islanders and their wives, Henry Lewis, Joe Bann, and Tulasik made speeches, saying how grateful they were for all the Bishop's and Miss White's care for and interest in the South Sea Islanders, and that they wished to give them a little present in conjunction with the South Sea men of St. Paul's Mission, Moa. The "little present" turned out to be a most beautiful collection of pearlshell ornaments, all of the very best quality, and chosen with singular good taste and appropriateness. The Bishop expressed his thanks and his continued interest in all the coloured races.

The South Sea Islanders all accompanied the Bishop and Miss White to the ship, and showed many signs of sorrow at their departure.

Australia and Germany.

We wonder whether the people of Australia generally realise what a victorious Germany would mean.

It is possible that the immediate surrender of Australia as a whole would not be demanded. Such a course would be unnecessary as the same object could be attained by other means, and it might seem magnanimous to refrain from it, but it is almost certain that terms of peace would include the cession to Germany not only of the conquered German territory in and about New Guinea, but of British New Guinea, and of the northern parts of Australia. We could raise but little effective protest. The answer would be "You have made no use of Northern Australia, we will," and they would. Coloured labour would be freely imported, much of which would no doubt find its way south, and considerable profits would probably be made.

A strong naval base would be established at Thursday Island, and a second in north-west Australia. These two would command all shipping from Australia to the East or to Europe. Australia would be compelled to grant free import to German goods, and by way of compensation to tax more heavily those of other countries, including Great Britain. German immigration would be encouraged. No legislation would be permitted which conflicted with German interests, and in a few years Australia would be practically, if not in name, a German province. If we tried revolt Sydney and Melbourne would be seized, and held as hostages, and in case of disobedience treated as the Germans treat weak and helpless victims. It is best that Australians should fight for their homes now, for if they do not they may never get another chance to fight, when the enemy hold in their power those whom they hold dear. A lady wrote the other day "I have five brothers, and not one of them will volunteer or take the slightest interest in the War." Perhaps this is exceptional stupidity, but we fear there are too many Australians who are deaf and blind to obvious facts, and who do not realise that the time prophesied by Sir Henry Norman has come when they must fight for their country or lose it. It must be remembered that a victorious Germany would certainly demand an enormous ransom from Australia, and that private as well as public property would be confiscated, and payment enforced by the threat to murder the principal inhabitants of the towns. Conquest by Germany means slavery to a foreign military caste, means having to take off your hat to swaggering Prussian officers under pain of beating and imprisonment, means that every attempt at free speech will be visited with death. It would be far better to die than to suffer or see your country suffer what Belgium has suffered, and what neutral Belgium has suffered is nothing to what Germans will mete out to enemy Australia. It is folly to shut our eyes to the fact that Germany means world conquest, and especially the conquest of England's colonies, and she will stick at nothing to attain her end. Every man who can fight and not being hindered by a lawful cause does not offer to fight is surely blind or unworthy of the country to which he professes to belong.

Rev. W. M. Wilkinson Interviewed.

On the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson's arrival at Normanton, after his two year's journey through the Northern Territory, he was immediately interviewed by a representative of the Carpentarian. Mr. Wilkinson, who looked extremely well after all his hardships save for a big scar down the back of his head, said that he left Laura, near Cooktown, on April 23rd, 1913, with two blackboys and 17 horses. Of these latter he lost one by snakebite, one by drowning, and five by sickness and want of food.

Travelling down the Mitchell, and visiting the Mission Station on the way, he passed through Normanton and Burketown, and entered the Northern Territory through Woolagarang in August, 1913. A little prospecting was going on in this neighbourhood, but all the mining on the Macarthur River had come to an end when he visited Boorooloola. From here he made his way by the Macarthur, Baubinea, Tarambarini, Nutwood, and Hodgson Downs Stations to the Roper River. He was impressed by the good site chosen for the Mission Station and by the devotion and unselfishness of the workers, but thought that the work had suffered very greatly from the continual changes of superintendents, and from the lack of a continuous policy combined with the undue stress laid upon the subjective and sentimental side of religion rather than on definiteness and clearness of teaching. The natives often mistook sentiment for weakness.

From the Mission Station Mr. Wilkinson followed up the course of the Roper River, passing the beautiful Red Lily Lagoons so well described in Mrs. Gunn's book. "We of the Never Never." The Elsie Station is now pulled down, the house having been removed to McMin's Bar on the Roper. Another day's journey brought him to Bitter Springs, the proposed site of the capital of the Northern Territory. Mr. Wilkinson wanted to know in the first place why they wanted a capital at all, and in the next place why they wanted to choose a place like Bitter Springs where the country is poor and sour, and where the only thing to recommend it is a small spring of bitter water and the few trees that grow along its course. From Bitter Springs the tin mines at Marranboy were visited. They did not impress Mr. Wilkinson very favourably, though the Government have since promised to erect a battery. From Marranboy he went on to the Katherine, Pine Creek, and Darwin. Questioned about his opinion of the administration of the Northern Territory Mr. Wilkinson condemned it emphatically as a failure. He thought that if the services had been obtained of men used to northern conditions and willing to profit by the experience of those on the spot things might have gone much better.

From Darwin Mr. Wilkinson returned to Brock's Creek and drove out with Rev. J. Tweedie to the Daly River, which has been much advertised as a great agricultural country. Here he found about half-a-dozen settlers, none of whom seemed to be prospering. He considered the land to be very poor compared with the Queensland coast country, and it is also subject to flood. Speaking generally he thought the Northern Territory to be only a pastoral country. There were large areas of country no good even as pastoral country, and it was impossible that it should succeed as an agricultural country, especially with white labour. The experimental farms had been costly and depressing failures. The white man's attitude was illustrated by a man whom Mr. Wilkinson found mortising holes for fencing in the shade of a tree; the man emphatically declared that it was no country for a white man to work in, especially in the sun. Mr. Wilkinson asked how the railway was to be constructed? "Oh," was the reply, "they must pay them big wages!"

After returning from the Daly Mr. Wilkinson went back to the Katherine and left on December 28th, 1913, for the Victoria River. He managed just to keep ahead of the flood waters, and shortly after he left the Katherine there was a record flood, the river rising some 80 feet, and isolating the store and telegraph station. He reached Willaroo Station the day before the heavy fall, and was detained there for a week. When he reached the Victoria River it was in flood, and in swimming it he had a narrow escape, his horse going under, and he himself being rescued with difficulty by the black boys. Fortunately he had a second boy temporarily with him, one of his two original boys having deserted on the Roper. The going was very heavy, and at Victoria Downs Station he was again detained for a fortnight, waiting for the country to dry. On reaching Pidgeon Hole he found that the country was drying rapidly, and from here on the trouble was want of sufficient water. Wave Hill is the centre of a number of stations belonging to a large company. Large numbers of aborigines are employed, between £1,500 and £2,000 being spent in food and clothing for them, irrespective of beef; but very little white labour is employed. From Wave Hill he travelled by Meruka and Inverway to Gordon Downs. From here he followed the Sturt up to its source, and then over the Divide on to Hooker's Creek, and so on over very dry country, and long stages without water, to Tanamai Goldfield, where only eight men are employed. Of these only one, the original prospector, has payable gold. He is following a series of leaders in open cuts through ironstone conglomerate, the gold being in little irregular bunches. The place is 220 miles from Hall's Creek in Western Australia, from which the supplies are derived. There is only one well from which the stock have to be watered, and water for all purposes derived.

From Tanamai Mr. Wilkinson retraced his steps to Victoria Downs, finding great difficulty in getting water. He was the last person who travelled that way for the year. Everywhere the drought was prevailing, and no stock could be worked on the station.

From Pidgeon Hole he started East for Newcastle Waters, over a long stretch of almost waterless country, with stages in places of 50 miles from hole to hole. At Newcastle Waters he struck the Overland Telegraph Line, but there had been no rain, and conditions were very bad. Lake Woods, which in good seasons is twenty miles across, had been dry for four or five years. For hundreds of miles down the line there was very little water, and scarcely any grass. The horses all became very poor, and several died. It seemed as if they could not possibly pull through. On the Macdonald Ranges, however, there had been winter rains, and at Alice Springs Mr. Wilkinson got a fortnight's welcome rest for himself and his weary horses.

Starting off South again he visited Deep Well, Maryville, Horseshoe Bend, Crown Point and Charlotte Waters, the Southern point of the Diocese, some 2,000 miles from his starting point, irrespective of the many deviations to visit outlying camps and stations which had added another 1,800 miles to his journey, his actual mileage up to this point being 3,812 miles. After a day or two at Charlotte Waters, he returned to Horseshoe Bend and followed up the Finke to Idracowra, and then a dry stage of 50 miles West to Erldunda Station. Here 12,000 horses and 800 cattle are watered from one well. From here another dry stage of 50 miles brought him to Hermannsburg Mission Station, supported by the German residents of South Australia. Good work is being done, many of the natives being skilled mechanics. The superintendent has a wonderful knowledge of native life and character. Eighty miles east from here brought him back to Alice Springs. After a short stay he started out East to visit the old Arltunga Gold Fields. The field never was any good, but was boomed some years ago by interested persons. The only product of value is mica, which is found in large sheets, but is unsaleable at present on account of the War. It is found about 40 miles N.E. from Arltunga. After visiting Undulia and Love's Creek Stations Mr. Wilkinson returned to Alice Springs, where he had to wait over a fortnight for the rain to open the road. He left Alice Springs on December 5th, and had good grass and water all the way, a pleasant change from his experiences on the southward journey.

The flies, however, were very bad, and caused much suffering to the horses, leading indirectly to an accident, which nearly cost Mr. Wilkinson his life. At Barrow Creek he was applying a lotion to a horse's eye, when it suddenly reared, and struck him down and trampled upon him. For some time he lay between life and death, but on the twenty-first day was able to mount a horse and resume his journey. A terrific scar, some 5 inches long, down the back of his head shows how near he was to death.

He left the overland line at Renner's Springs, and travelled across the Barkly Table land by Eva Downs, Anthony's Lagoon to Oreswell Downs and Brunette. Here were the first of the sub-artesian bores, which are doing so much to increase the carrying capacity of the table land. From Brunette he went to Alroy and Alexandrina, and so to the Rackham over big plains stretching 30 miles without water or timber. From here to Avon Downs where there are sheep as well as cattle, but they do not seem to do so well as further east. From Avon Downs he followed the James to the Georgina, and so on to Lake Nash on the borders of the diocese, and from there to Austral Downs where he left the Northern Territory on April 21st, 1915, two years after leaving Laura. He followed the Georgina to Camooweal, and from there came along the road to Burketown where he left his horses for a week to rest while he came over by coach to Normanton to bid farewell to the Bishop of Carpentaria.

Mr. Wilkinson remarked that he had seen the Territory at its best and at its worst so far as natural conditions were concerned. The people were most hospitable and friendly, and had gladly welcomed the opportunity of religious services. Services had been held at almost every place of call, even at roadside camps. Isolated and disagreeable as their conditions were the people were cheerful and heroic in their endurance of hardship. They appreciated the fact that the Church had not forgotten their existence, though they had almost despaired of ever being remembered. Invitations to return were warm and frequent, but, said Mr. Wilkinson, "I am too old to do that journey over again much as I should like to." The opportunity is a great one for the Church just at present, and if it is not taken advantage of it may not return. He thought the various dioceses adjoining the Northern Territory ought to combine to work the island parts as it was more easy of access in this way. Mr. Wilkinson returns to Burketown for his horses, and will then travel through Normanton to the Mitchell River Mission, and from thence on to Laura, which he expects to reach by the end of July. On his arrival at Burketown he had travelled with his horses, exclusive of his visit to Darwin, etc., a distance of 6,020 miles, and he will be well on towards 7,000 by the time he returns to his starting point. On arriving at Laura he will start to visit the Peninsula, a task which he expects to occupy him until the end of the year.

This missionary journey will have occupied about two years and three months, and will have embraced almost every corner of the Central Australian Territory. We congratulate Mr. Wilkinson most heartily on the accomplishment of a most difficult and laborious but most useful and necessary task. Who will take it on?

New Aisle of the Cathedral.

The Bishop opened the new north aisle of the Cathedral on Sunday morning, June 20th. About two years ago the south aisle was completed as a memorial to the late Hon. John Douglas, greatly improving the appearance of the Cathedral. Immediately on the completion of the south aisle, a member of the congregation set to work to collect for the north aisle, and the work of replacing the old wooden wall by a permanent concrete wall has just been finished at a cost of £205. The great feature of the nave is now the row of Gothic doors on each side, which give a very light effect, besides making the building extraordinarily cool. The Cathedral is now complete as far as it goes, although one bay of the nave, the tower spires and vestries remain to be completed at the west end. The Cathedral is an object of pilgrimage to nearly all visitors to Thursday Island. Two new stained glass windows have been ordered from England; one in memory of Deaconess Buchanan, and one in memory of Mr. Archer, who was lost in the Quetta. These did not arrive in time to be dedicated by the Bishop, being probably delayed by the war.

The Bishop-Elect.

The Bishops of Queensland have selected the Rev. Henry Newton, B.A., to be the second Bishop of Carpentaria.

Mr. Newton is, we believe, an Australian by birth, and is a younger brother of Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, of this Diocese. When a boy he was adopted by Rev. F. R. Newton, of New South Wales, and he changed his name at his Confirmation to Newton. He went to Sydney University, and took his degree in 1889. He then went to England and entered at Merton College, Oxford. He took 2nd Class Honours in Mathematical Mods., 1890, and a 3rd Class in Mathematics in 1891, taking his B.A. in 1893.

He was ordained Deacon in 1891 and Priest in 1892, and was Curate at St. John's, Hackney, 1891-93, and Esk, Queensland, 1893-98. He went as a Missionary to New Guinea in 1899, and has worked there ever since, his work lying chiefly at the Head Station, Dogura. He was Vicar-General and Administrator of the Diocese during the anxious time 1908-10, between the departure of the first Bishop and the arrival of his successor, and again during the absence of the Bishop in England.

He has recently published a very interesting and capable book on New Guinea.

The Bishop Elect is a man of strong physique, and like his brother capable of enduring much hardship without complaint. His great Missionary experience will be of much service in dealing with the complicated problems of the Torres Straits Mission, and his administrative capacity has been already well tested.

We believe that the Bishops have selected the man who was, of all others, probably the man best suited to the work to be done, and we are devoutly thankful that our prayers have been so well and so fully answered.

The following prayer has, at the request of the Bishop-Elect, been issued by the Bishop for use in the Diocese until the Consecration:—

"O Heavenly Father, Who, in answer to our prayers, hast called Thy servant Henry Newton to be Bishop-Elect of this Diocese, we beseech Thee to grant unto Him the fulness of Thy Holy Spirit, to prepare and fit him for the high office to which he is called. Pour upon him, we beseech Thee, in his consecration, Thy gifts of wisdom and counsel, of love and insight, of strength and steadfastness, that by his means Thy Kingdom may be enlarged in this Diocese and Thy Holy Name glorified, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The Bishop's Consecration will take place in Brisbane, on St. Matthew's Day, September 21st, before the meeting of Provincial Synod at Rockhampton.

Carpentarian subscriptions received:—Mr D. Beryholtz, 10/6; Mrs Wassell and Mrs Waters, 4/-; Messrs. C. Hindmarsh and Young, 2/6; Mesdames Willocks and Owen, 2/6; Messrs. Mendis, McCloskey, D. A. Farewell to the Bishop.

A large and representative gathering took place in the Town Hall, Thursday Island, on Wednesday evening, June 16, to bid farewell to the Bishop of Carpentaria. The Churchwardens (Mr. W. Lee Bryce, Government Resident, and Mr. K. O. Mackenzie) expressed their sorrow at the Bishop's departure, and the regard and affection in which he was held by the members of the Church. They stated also that a large roll-top desk was being presented to the Bishop as a memento of Thursday Island. The Churchwardens were followed by Rev. E. J. Nash, Sub-Dean, who spoke on behalf of the clergy who were not able to be present, and who referred to the cordial relations which had always existed between the Bishop and his clergy. He was followed by Mr. McCarthy, manager of the Q.N. Bank, and Mr. Broadbent, manager of Burns, Philp. These gentlemen spoke of the deep interest that the Bishop had taken in civil affairs, and the value of his advice and co-operation. The Bishop, in his reply, said that it was a great grief to him to leave the North and his many friends of so many years. He had been decided chiefly by two circumstances, one the opinion of those to whom he was bound to listen, that he could probably serve the Church better if he were nearer the centre of things and more in touch with general Church life, and the other that, while he was as fit as ever for travelling by land, he was beginning to feel seriously the work in small boats and luggers, work which was likely to considerably increase owing to the recent inclusion of the Torres Straits Islands. He had enjoyed the best of health in the North, and he was certainly not looking for a better climate. So far as he could discover, his new diocese was likely to be far too cold to please him. He believed we were on the eve of a great social, economic, and political world crisis, and it behoved all to rally round the Christian Church, which was alone adequate to help the world to better things.

New Bishop of Goulburn.

The appointment of the Rev. L. Radford, D.D., to the See of Goulburn will meet with general approval. Dr. Radford has condensed into the seven years that he has been in Australia an almost incredible amount of volunteer work of the highest order in the Church's service. Not content with his own important work as Warden of St. Paul's College in the University of Sydney, he has been indefatigable in the support of Missionary work; he has taken a deep interest in social work and social questions; he has been editor of "The Australian Church Quarterly Review," and one of the Editorial Board of the Church Standard; he has been a constant and valued lecturer, and a most able writer; he has given his Sundays to preaching, and shortened his holidays to conduct retreats for the clergy in all parts of Australia. It is, we suppose, vain to hope that he will not wear himself out so fast in his new work, but we congratulate the Diocese of Goulburn on having secured a Bishop who will be a power alike within and without the Diocese. Dr. Radford will be consecrated in Sydney on St. Bartholomew's Day, August 24th.

The Pioneer Bishop of the North.

It is much to be regretted that no life or even brief memoir of Bishop Stanton was ever published. Appointed first Bishop of North Queensland in 1877, he came straight from a London parish to be a pioneer Bishop in the roughest and most exuberant days of North Queensland, and he adapted himself to the circumstances with a readiness which was little short of genius. The genial humour with which he would address a rough bush meeting, and win all hearts by his playful description of the incidents of his journey to the spot, and the abundant friendliness with which he would greet everyone that he met were only equalled by the powerful master strength with which he would on the Sunday speak of the great problems of life and faith, illustrating his theme by homely similes that his hearers could understand and appreciate. Essentially a scholar and a recluse he threw himself into the actualities of life with a zeal and a thoroughness which sometimes led to his being accused of insincerity, but which was really the keen desire of a soul not naturally social to throw itself even to excess into the joys and sorrows of others. His clergy knew him as one of the most unselfish of men. If you were travelling with him, and both had to share a room containing, say, a bed and a shakedown on the floor, you were certain on retiring to find him unconscionable on the floor, and no pleading would induce him to take the more comfortable position. His purse was always at the disposal of the Church, and much of the land now held by the Church in the North was bought by Bishop Stanton out of his private pocket, and handed over without a word to the Church. He had a fund of racy stories of his northern experiences, and he never minded telling them even when they were against himself, as when on one occasion he said with his usual effusive manner to a very prim little girl, "Well, my dear, and what would you say if I were to tickle you?" and received the unexpected reply, "I should say that you were a very rude old man." His generosity was often abused, as when having arranged with a clergyman from England with a large family to come out for two years' work, leaving his wife and family at home, he, a precise old bachelor, came home to his house one afternoon to find it in possession of the said clergyman, his wife, and eleven children who announced that they had come to stay till further orders.

In spite of the abundant geniality and keen sense of humour which endeared him to the roughest bushmen throughout the North there was a deep under-current of spirituality which astonished those who only knew the surface of his life. Though he was no party man, and his whole soul rebelled against intolerance he had an early strain of Evangelical piety which underlay all his doings, and few perhaps would have suspected him of a yearly examination of conscience of the most searching and complete character.

He never seemed to his friends to be so full of life and happiness after he had left the North. He was cramped and fettered by the more rigid conditions of life in the South, and he often sighed for the free if rough conditions of the North.

Here in the North, at least, he will always be known and revered as the true founder of Church life and character. His successors, Bishop Barlow, of North Queensland, and Bishop White, of Carpentaria, were both his disciples, and bound to him by the closest ties of personal friendship. Whatever work they have been able to accomplish has been due to the inspiration of one whose memory will always be green in the far north of Australia.

Diocesan Council.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Wednesday, June 16th, at 4 p.m. Present: The Bishop (in the chair), Rev. E. J. Nash (Sub-Dean), Messrs. Lee-Bryce, Mackenzie and Sullivan. The Bishop said that the appointment of the new Bishop had given him great pleasure. He was sure that he was the right man for the post for which he was eminently qualified in many ways. He reported that he had visited all the parishes, and that they were free of debt and working well. An audited statement of Diocesan accounts was presented, which showed that the Diocese had a credit balance of about £750. It was agreed that in accordance with the request of the A.B.M. Moa Mission should be transferred to the Australian Board of Missions as from April 1st, 1915. Rev. E. J. Nash and Rev. W. M. Wilkinson were appointed representatives of the Diocese to the Provincial and General Synods on September 28th and October 12th respectively.

Australians in Battle.

The courage shown by the Australian troops in the Dardanelles will not have surprised those who know anything of the Australian character. The bushman faces the possibility of death every time he rides a half-broken horse, goes into the yard with a refractory bullock, swims a flooded creek or faces a waterless track. His nerves are strong, and he has the fearlessness which comes from perfect health, and has a mind not unduly "sicklied o'er with the full cast of thought." We expected him to be brave, but he has astonished the world by his reckless and unconquerable valour. We heave a sigh of relief, for we were afflicted with an unusual attack of modesty. In spite of our knowledge of our men's courage and resource, we feared that some accident might occur, some disregard of discipline, which would cloud their fame before they had a chance to earn it. Now we know that the Lion cub is not one whit behind his fathers in courage and daring, and the whole world will have marked the fact. Its bearing on the future of Australia cannot be over-estimated. A tradition has been established, which will bear fruit in the future; and many plans for the easy conquest of this continent will probably be subject to considerable revision, though it would be rash to conclude that they will be abandoned. Victory, alas, has its price, and many homes in Australia are in mourning to-day. Among those who have lost near relatives is Rev. F. T. Lane, whose brother, Lieut. C. Lane, fell gallantly fighting in the early days of the landing on Gallipoli. Far off as the scene of the fighting was it was a veritable fight for hearth and home, and the names of those who have fallen will ever be cherished in the land for which they fell.

Farewell to Miss White.

Over 50 ladies met at Mrs. Mackenzie's on Thursday afternoon, June 17, to say good-bye to Miss White. Mrs. Williams, in the name of the ladies present, presented Miss White with a case of silver-mounted brushes, and spoke of the work Miss White had done in connection with the G.F.S., Mothers' Union, and other Church societies. Miss White replied feelingly, and spoke of her regret at leaving Thursday Island after so many years, and parting with so many old and tried friends.

Carpentaria at the Front.

Mr Skelton, one of our Diocesan students at St. Francis' College, Nundah, has been given permission by the Bishop to volunteer for the Front. The way in which the Germans are violating all the laws of humanity and all the rules of warfare is making the fight for justice and freedom a pressing and sacred duty.

Mr H. Matthews, Superintendent of the Mitchell River Mission, asked for permission to volunteer some months ago, but the Bishop replied that the work he was doing was so important, and it was so difficult to get anyone to replace him, that he thought that at present at any rate his duty lay where he was. All who know Mr Matthews realise that he would make a splendid soldier, but he is already in a very real sense at the Front.

After the War.

A recent private letter from a high authority in England to the Bishop, says—

"The latest is that the very highest leaders almost dread the termination of the War because of the domestic strife which seems certain to arrive. Strikes, shifting of trade, return to normality—return of hundreds of thousands of labourers to England, but, perhaps not ever to farm work and wages. What then? A strike of employers? State Socialism? I believe no great war has ended without great unrest at home. Then there is Ireland. This is not pessimism, but noting of facts."

Notes.

Mr. Matthews visited Thursday Island by the last trip of the "Francis Pritt." He looked extremely well and reported all well at the Mission.

The rise in the price of flour has added considerably to the cost of running our Missions.

Rev. J. Done has been appointed to the charge of Torres Straits Islands Mission.

The Bishop will be enthroned as Bishop of Willochra at Port Pirie on July 28th. He will be the guest of Mr. S. Mitchell, late Government Resident at Darwin. The Bishop has not yet decided where to live, but has rented the Rectory, Petersbury, for six months.

Miss Quinan has been winning the hearts of all the Moa people, and there will be much lamentation when she goes on to the Mitchell as arranged on July 18th.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east par. 144 and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory of South Australia, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 16,500 whites, 7,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is chiefly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowment beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum.

Missions.

Missions are carried on among the Japanese at Thursday Island; among the South Sea Islanders at Thursday Island, Mossman, and Moa; and among the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers.

The Torres Straits Mission.

The new Mission may be said to have come into active existence on July 16th, when the Rev. J. Done set sail in the "Dogai" on her first cruise.

Mr. Done had arrived in Thursday Island on Saturday, July 10th, accompanied by Mrs. Marshall and Miss Davis, who were to take charge of St. Paul's, Moa, for two months. The ladies went off almost immediately in the "Banzai" cutter, and had a very fast but rough voyage to Moa, where they were welcomed by Miss Quinan, who had been in temporary charge for three months.

The "Dogai," a large ketch of nearly 15 tons, had been chartered from Papuan Industries Ltd. for the first six months. The boat was slipped and examined, and small repairs were made, and on July 16th Mr. Done began his first round of the Islands. The Missioner's Diary, from which we make copious extracts, shows the energy with which he has been prosecuting this important work for some two months.

FIRST CRUISE

July 16th.—Left Thursday Island 10.30 a.m., with Joseph Lui as captain, and a crew of Badu men: arrived at St. Paul's, Moa, 3.30: were met by Miss Quinan, Mrs. Marshall, Miss Davis, the Councillors, and the school children. Visited southern end of the village. Took Evensong at 7.30—good congregation. Next day there was a feast, in honour of Miss Quinan, who is shortly leaving, and also of the first birthday of Thomas Lowa. The people gave up the usual dance in order to be present at a service of preparation for Holy Communion.

July 18th.—Holy Communion at 8 a.m., 27 communicants; Mattins and Baptism, 10.30; children's class at 3, and Choral Evensong at 7.30. The last hymn was a native one, and was delightful.

July 19.—After Mattins, Miss Quinan prepared to leave for Thursday Island. To show their appreciation of her work, the whole village assembled with gifts of fruit, baskets, etc., and laid them at her feet, singing a farewell in English. The farewells took so long that the tide was missed, and the departure had to be put off till next day. The ladies then went off with the women and children for a picnic, while the men looked after me, and gave me a decent spread of fowls, yams, rice, curry, and native fruits. Evensong was followed by the native dance, postponed from Saturday.

July 20.—Left at 9.30 for Badu, where we anchored at 12.45. Invited to dinner by Mr. Charlie Walker. Visited the village during the afternoon. Alligator, the principal churchwarden, met me and escorted me round, lustily calling out at every dwelling. All at home, about 50 adults, with numerous piccanninies, followed us to the end of the village. I spoke to them, telling them of the change of management, sympathising in the recent trouble (a house burnt down, one child burnt to death, and others injured), and adding some words of exhortation. Returning, we stayed some time at the Mission House, where we sang hymns, and I talked further. The welcome given by these people, and their evident appreciation of one's coming, were very touching. One feels the great opportunity—the people are religious in every sense.

July 21.—Accompanied by Mrs. Zahel, Government teacher at Badu, who has the oversight of the school at Adam, I went over in a cutter to that village, and was met by churchwarden, councillors, and school teacher. Held a meeting in the Church and spoke about the change, and what I proposed doing. After a yarn with the men we returned to Badu about 3.30.

Held service in the Church at night, and had a splendid congregation. Most of the young men were away in the boats, but 100 were present. After the service I was told the people wished to make me a small presentation. The whole village, men, women and children, came in procession, singing a native song, and deposited their gifts on the ground in front of me. Nearly everyone had a coco-nut, sweet potatoes, yam, or something similar, and a great heap of food soon accumulated. Then Billy Verygood made a speech, saying that the people were very glad I came, and thanked God. "People before like chicken when mother go away, hearts very sad; but now mother come back again, spread wings over us, and we warm and glad."

It does make one feel humble, realising one's limitations, and feeling the absolute dependence of these people. Thank God the Church was not slow to accept this responsibility, for there is a wonderful harvest only waiting to be gathered. At Badu I find the people quite ready to kneel, though that is a posture they are not accustomed to. It seems they followed Bishop White's example, and afterwards asked Mr. Walker if they were to continue kneeling, as they liked to do so, and thought it a better way.

July 22.—To the village again, and visited the school. On the whole the people at Moa and Badu are clean, some exceptionally so, though in some cases one has to admit all is not as one would desire.

July 23.—Sailed about 1 p.m. for Mabuia, and arrived 4.30. Almost the whole island turned out, led by the churchwardens and councillors, and lined up on the jetty to welcome me. We marched to the house of the Government teacher, Mr. Minniss, upon whom I called, and then to the Mission House, where I addressed the people, and then to inspect the new Church, which is in building. This work has been almost at a standstill, but will now go on.

One circumstance relating to the roof is worth noting. A native named Luffman found a pearl which he sold through the Papuan Industries for £300. Having paid off all his debts, he paid the debts of his mates, and gave his wife and family a present. Then, as a thankoffering to God, he gave the tiles for the Church roof, costing about £76. The remainder was banked. Such an acknowledgement of the Giver of all speaks volumes for the sincerity of the man's religion.

At 7.30 held service on the verandah of the Mission House—congregation about 130.

There seem many reasons for making Mabuia the centre of Mission Work. The people seem more progressive and independent, and from what I hear are perhaps more difficult to manage than any of the other islanders. They are the predominant race of the western division of the islands. St. Paul's, Moa, is undoubtedly the place for a training college. We have practically complete control there. It is handy to Thursday Island and the Cathedral, and there is already the necessary Church atmosphere.

Mrs. Minnis has agreed to teach the children the Creed, the Ten Commandments, and the General Confession.

On the Saturday a feast of welcome was given me at the Mission House, and one of the councillors made a speech of welcome. Evensong became a preparation for Holy Communion, and was well attended. One man who has been excommunicated endeavoured to get admitted by telling his friends I had given him permission.

Sunday, July 25.—Celebration at 7.30, with 46 communicants. I explained this was done by Bishop White's wish, and was not to be regarded as a precedent. In future they must obey the Church's rule and be confirmed. The service at 11 a.m. was overflowing. People knelt for prayer and stood for hymns.

July 26.—Left Mabuiag 5 a.m. and reached Thursday Island at 6.30 p.m., calling in for an hour at St. Paul's on the way. Had an interview with Mr. Bleakley, Chief Protector of Aborigines, and found him very sympathetic towards our work.

SECOND CRUISE.

July 27.—Sailed 3.30 p.m. for Murray and anchored for the night under Double Island. Next evening we had to anchor in rather deep water. About midnight I was awakened by the heavy rolling of the boat. Getting up to investigate, I found the island near which we had anchored had disappeared, though the moon was bright. Seeing we were broadside on to the swell, I guessed we were drifting, and called Joseph. It took an hour's sailing to get us back to the island again. The very high tide had floated us off. A head wind next day, with a very heavy swell, made slow travelling, and we had to anchor again for the night. This day we caught four large fish on the tow-line.

July 30.—Reached Murray Island at 10.30. Called on Mr. Bruce, the Government teacher. Had a meeting of men, Poi Passi (native teacher), the five churchwardens, and others. During the afternoon walked round the village with Mr. Bruce, and in the evening held service—about 200 present.

July 31.—Held an enquiry this morning, and on the vote of Poi and the churchwardens, who stated that all had been of good behaviour since the Bishop's visit, I re-admitted four men and six women who had been excommunicated under the L.M.S. Interviewed a man who had been found drinking on a Jap boat. Gave him some straight talk, and told him he must see me again in three months' time before receiving Communion. During the afternoon married a young couple. The bride and her two maids were gorgeous, the bridegroom and best man were painfully dressed. Afterwards I received the usual "first time" present—mostly bananas, and the heap must have been nearly 4 feet high in the centre. The Mamoose made a speech of welcome, supported by his son Poi. In the evening had a preparation for to-morrow's Communion—an excellent congregation, who repeated the General Confession slowly after me.

August 1st, Sunday.—Celebration at 7.30 a.m., 90 communicants: other services as usual and baptisms. Have asked Poi to teach the people the General Confession and Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments.

The people are accustomed to talk a great deal coming into Church. I spoke about behaviour in God's house, and have asked Poi to quietly remonstrate about it, and also to endeavour to keep the people kneeling for prayer. During my visit they knelt frequently, but not every service, but they will get used to it, no doubt, in time. The older churchwardens need a bit of humouring, but seemed to accept in good spirit the few alterations I made.

August 2nd.—Left at 6 a.m. for Yorke Island (Massig), but had practically no wind all day, and were compelled by darkness to anchor outside. Next day reached our anchorage at 7 a.m., and were met by Mr. Connolly, Government teacher, and some of the natives. Went up to the school and saw the children. Went round the village and arranged for an afternoon service, as there are no lights in the Church. Had a good congregation at 4 p.m., though many of the men are away in the boats.

August 4th.—Baptised nine children. Sailed at 11.45 for Stephen Island. During my visit at Yorke Mr. and Mrs. Connolly were extremely kind, and entertained me for meals and bed. All the Government teachers have done all they could to make my stay pleasant, and help forward the work.

Arrived at Stephen Island 4 p.m. Only two men, three women, and three children there; the rest of the people were away, and the native teacher had gone to Darnley. After a short talk, held a service in the Church, and returned on board.

August 5th.—Left Stephen Island by moonlight, but met a strong head wind, and did not reach Darnley till nearly 3 p.m. Called on the Government teacher. Mr. Quartermaine, and saw the children in school. Service at 7 p.m., with a fair congregation.

August 6th.—Went to the school and gave instruction. Surprised to find one or two with a smattering of the Catechism, but they were too shy to say where they had learnt it. Mr. Q. has promised to teach the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, etc. Visited the villages on the island in company with Idage, the native teacher from Stephen Island, whom I found to be suffering from asthma. The service at night was much better attended than on the previous evening.

August 7th.—Saturday morning I spent quietly, as I was very tired. In the afternoon I took Mr. and Mrs. Q. a short run in the boat for fishing. At night we had a good congregation for the preparation service.

On Saturdays very little work can be done, as most of the people are "out-bush," i.e., gone to their gardens to get Sunday's "kai-kai."

August 8th, Sunday.—The celebration was somewhat interfered with by rain, and only 23 communicants attended. At 11 the rain had ceased, and we had an excellent congregation, and at 3 I baptised a baby and took a children's service. Evensong at 7.30 closed the day. As in the other islands the people are willing to adopt the new ideas, and a fair percentage kneel for prayer. The churchwardens have promised to continue the use of the General Confession in all their services.

Mr. and Mrs. Quartermain were very kind, and gave me hospitality during my visit.

August 9th.—Sailed for Coco-nut Island and got ashore there at 6 p.m. Met Aragu, our native teacher, and 42 people, all of whom came to the service.

August 10th.—Left at 6 a.m. and had a quick but rough passage to Thursday Island, arriving 1.30. Next day signed on the selected crew and prepared for our next trip.

THIRD CRUISE.

August 12th.—Left for Badu at 12.30, arriving 5.30. Arranged to spend some time here later on. Sailed next day for Mabuiag, and received quite a warm welcome from a large number of women and children, most of the men being out on the reefs.

They have been at work on the new Church, and the cement guttering will soon be completed. Owing to the absence of the men, 5 women have been assisting in breaking stone and mixing concrete. "Woman him work better than man" is the verdict. During the afternoon I did some visiting, and inspected a site for a Mission House. The best spot is on the slope behind the Church; unfortunately it is just outside the Mission Ground, but as the land is of no value for gardening purposes there should be no difficulty in obtaining it, especially if we were prepared to give, as we might, a small piece of garden land in exchange for it. A great deal of the material in the old Mission House can be used again, hence a building could be put up at comparatively small cost.

As a great number of the younger people know the Confession and Creed, I was able to use a shortened form of Evensong, and will do so in future.

Sunday, August 15th.—Had ante-communion and sermon at 7.30 a.m., and at 11 was able to have almost full mattins, the people joining in well. At 3 p.m. talked to the children, and at 7.30 had Evensong. I was very much pleased with the way they have taken up the Church service, and they seem to try to enter into it.

August 16th.—Went to Moa for saplings for scaffolding for the Church, and for firewood for ourselves. I thought it a good plan to do this, and so save a good deal of time, besides which the Mabuiag men have not been working too well with their boats, and have been told by Mr. Lee-Bryce to get out on the reefs, and I did not wish to hinder them.

After Evensong 40 or 50 young people accompanied us to the jetty to bid us farewell. I was much pleased with this visit to Mabuiag. Undoubtedly the Mabuiag race is the predominant one in the Western Group, and I feel that if one can get closely into touch with them, it will have a big influence with Badu and Adam.

August 17th.—Left at 7 a.m. for Saibai, and arrived about 2 p.m. Went ashore, and saw Mr. Niebel the Government teacher, and had an excellent congregation for the evening service. Everyone sat throughout the service, and a good deal of talking took place in the Church before and after service. Much has to be done here, but in my address on the Lord's Prayer I tried to prepare the way.

August 18th.—Went over to Dauan, and had a good welcome. The people came in their best to the water's edge, and lined up two deep. Most of them had flowers in their hair, palm leaves round their necks or similar decorations. The Church is a quaint little structure of sago palm and grass; it is very neatly built, but the level was omitted when doing it. A present was given me of coco-nuts, pumpkins, etc., and a nice little speech made by one of the Churchwardens. The people, as they approached, sang in native language, "What a friend we have in Jesus," and "God Save the King." I gave an address, but it was cut short by a heavy shower of rain, and all the women and children unceremoniously ran for their houses. At 6 p.m. we had service, and I baptised six babies. The people of Dauan numbering about 60 seem very clean; the interiors of one or two houses I visited were spotless.

August 19th.—Went ashore after breakfast and had a yarn with the men, and then sailed for Saibai, where we had an evening service, which was well attended.

August 20th.—Spent the day visiting and talking with the men. The people here know very little English. Spent Saturday quietly, and had a Preparation Service in the evening. On Sunday we had a Celebration with 62 communicants, but about 150 in the congregation. For the sake of order and to avoid noise I placed the communicants in front of the general congregation. At 11 a.m. the Church was packed, and they listened most attentively. A fair proportion knelt. There were six baptisms. At 3 p.m. took a children's service, a number of adults also attending. I spoke to them on behaviour in Church. They have been responsible for most of the talking while going in or out of Church. I gave them some thoughts for crossing the threshold of God's House, told them to kneel for prayer, and stand for hymns, etc. The lesson evidently went home, for at the 5 p.m. service there was a marked difference in behaviour. It seems to me the best way to talk on these matters to the children. Adults always come, and though they may think that what is said is for the children, I have noticed each time that the older people have themselves done as I told the little ones.

August 23rd.—Went ashore, and took some photos, and had a yarn with the men. Then at their request went to the Mission House to receive a present. This consisted of coco-nuts, yams, potatoes, and two wild geese (dressed), and half-a-dozen eggs. These latter have been donated liberally, and are full of surprises. I am lucky if half those cooked are fit to eat—they are all good from the native point of view.

Mr. Niebel had asked to be taken to Boigu, but at the last moment found he couldn't come, so I said good-bye to the Saibai people, and sailed for Boigu. The farewell of the people was impressive. They all came to the shore singing their good-bye hymn, and then, beginning with the men, they all marched round me shaking hands and singing all the time. As I stepped into the dinghy a shout was given, and hands were waved, and then the hymn continued. At its conclusion, when we were over 100 yards out, they gave three cheers and shouts of "yowa."

We reached Boigu at 5 p.m., and I went ashore at once. Was met by the councillors, and police, and church officials, and people, who all shook hands. Had a yarn with the men, and arranged for a service at 7 p.m. My crew are now a great help, for the six go in together and all kneel most reverently: to-night at a signal from me they all stood for the hymn, and the people followed their example. The crew are now used to their daily Mattins and Evensong on board, and Litany on Fridays, that is when no service is held on shore.

August 24th.—This morning the people gave me a present of coco-nuts and yams. They asked me to wait while they prepared it, and it took a long time. Eventually they all marched, singing, and gaily decorated with flowers—even the coco-nuts were garlanded. Afterwards I had a service for children, to which all the adults came. I spoke on the Gospel for the Baptismal office, and then a few words on kneeling and standing, and prayer on entering and leaving Church. I was pleased to-night to see quite a number reverently kneeling when they came into Church, and after service, and they stood for the hymns. I baptised ten babies, and as it took so long to make all arrangements, I took the Baptismal Service lesson and address.

Boigu people know even less English than those of Saibai, and I found it very difficult to make myself understood. Still some of my words went home, as was seen by the difference in posture, etc.

This afternoon I had what might have been an unpleasant experience. I asked Matthew, the policeman, for a run in his small, new outrigger canoe, and he gave it me, taking one man and his own boy. We went through the water at a great pace towards the "Dogai." Whether the mainsail obscured his view, or the other man forgot to let the foresail go, I don't know, but bang we went into the "Dogai," and smashed all the front of the canoe in. The lugger was not scratched. I fully expected a bath, but fortunately escaped. With a piece of wire I had, we temporarily fixed things up, and then made for the shore.

August 25th.—Left Boigu early this morning, so as to run out of the narrow passage on a good, falling tide, and make Dauan early. Unfortunately, the tides vary so much that we found a strong flood coming up which, with a head wind, made it 4 p.m. before we anchored. Mr. Niebel had come across from Saibai. The boys filled up the water tank while I prepared for service, which we had after tea, getting a good congregation. We left by moonlight at 9 p.m., and made Saibai by 11, taking Mr. N. back with us.

August 26th.—Left at 6 a.m., and made for the Warrior Reef, where we were to pick up the Saibai cutter, which had gone to Daru to enquire for my missing bag. We had a very heavy sea to face, and the "Dogai" rolled beautifully. The acrobatics of the lugger are wonderful. We met the cutter at 2.30, and I was glad to get my bag, as it contained some clean clothes and my robes. As it was then too late to dream of getting to Yam, we came down the reef and anchored for fishing, which enabled us to have a good tea for a change.

August 27th.—Left at 7.30, and arrived at Yam Island at 4.30 p.m. The people met me on the beach, and I then called on Mrs. Smallwood, Government teacher, and had a chat. Had a good service at 7.30, about 88 present (population, 120). The crew set the example of kneeling and standing, and most of the congregation followed.

Saturday, 28th.—Spent quietly as usual in seeing a few people, and a preparation service was held at night and well attended, as has been usual in the islands.

Sunday, 29th.—Celebration at 7.30 a.m., with 46 communicants. Service at 11 with four baptisms; children at 3, and evening service at 7.30.

I was glad to notice very little talking in Church here, and was much pleased with the attention in Church. After service had a yarn with the churchwardens about the conduct of the services, and they are going to use the General Confession and learn the Creed. Enquiries were made as to Prayer Books. Mrs. Smallwood was very kind, but is in very different health.

August 30th.—Sailed at 7 and anchored at St. Paul's, Moa, about 10.30. Next day the councillors and others were busy doing the guttering on the school, but could not manage the corners. The old guttering had completely gone. I promised to help, but it ended in my cutting, soldering, and putting up the new pieces, a good, solid half-day's work. At Evensong I baptised the twin babies of Tom Gela and Kalis.

September 1st.—We had a 7 a.m. Celebration with 30 communicants. My mail came by the "Banzai" last night, and it has altered my plans somewhat. To-day I came to Badu, and brought Miss Davies for the trip, as Mrs. Zahel had invited the ladies at St. Paul's. We hope to go back to-morrow.

September 2nd.—To-day was too stormy and the sea too heavy to attempt the voyage to Moa. During the morning I was present at the opening of the new school, and addressed the people. We marched round the building, and after prayer had a feast in the new school. The proceedings were made unpleasant by the heavy squalls.

September 3rd.—Returned to St. Paul's to-day; the sea was still very heavy, and we took a lot of water on board.

September 4th.—Sailed at 6.30 for Badu, and spent the morning at Green Island watering the ship, while I repaired the dinghy. Anchored at Badu 3.30. Had preparation service at 7.30, and choir practice afterwards.

Sunday, September 5th.—Celebration at 7.30, with 70 communicants. At 11 we had a full Church, and I baptised six babies. We sang the Te Deum to Oakley's Quadruple Chant, and Mrs. Zahel and Mrs. Walker had taught the people a gloria for the Venite and Psalm. Children at 3, and Evensong at 7.30; sang the "Nunc Dimittis" to the Tonus peregrinus. Mrs. Zahel has worked hard, and has taught the Creed and Confession as well as the Chants above mentioned.

One of my boys volunteered to take the pony out of the trap. He said he could do it, and he did, unfastening every buckle and strap.

September 6th.—Left Badu at 6.30 a.m., and anchored at Thursday Island about 4.30 p.m.

Presentation to the Bishop of Carpentaria.

A very pleasant gathering assembled on September 23rd, by the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Benson and Mrs. Bancroft, to do honour to the Bishop of Carpentaria and Mrs. Newton before their departure from Brisbane. A presentation in the form of a cheque for a substantial amount was made to the Bishop of Carpentaria. The Archbishop of Brisbane gave eloquent expression to the deep affection of many friends towards the new Bishop and to their admiration of his self-sacrificing labours in New Guinea.

Subscriptions to Carpentarian received:—Rev. O. Hall (extra copies), 6/-; Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, 12/-; Miss Miller (1915-16), 4/-; Mr. McCreery, 3/-; 2/- Mrs. Allom, Mrs. Bird, Miss Dove; per Miss Paige: Mrs. Docker, £1; Mrs. Simpson, 10/-; Mrs. Titmus, 4/-; Miss Jones, 4/-; Mr. Farran, 2/-; Miss Christian, 2/-.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA.
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XV., No. 60. Thursday Island, October 1, 1915.

Letter from the Bishop.

Bishopsbourne,
Brisbane,
Sept. 21st, 1915.

My Dear People,—

The October issue of The Carpentarian gives me an opportunity of sending an early greeting to you, and I am glad to make use of it.

First let me thank you for the kind wishes, and the messages of welcome we have received from various parts of the Diocese. It was hard for me, and still more so for Mrs. Newton, to decide to leave New Guinea, but the welcome offered by you and the kind messages sent by many from various parts of Australia help to assure us that we were right in accepting the call of the Bishops of the Province to come to Carpentaria.

I would ask for your prayers at all times, that the Holy Spirit may guide and direct your Bishop in all that he is called upon to do, and that the work of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria may be abundantly blessed.

The first thing I am going to ask you to do is, to consider very seriously whether you cannot in your homes begin to use Family Prayer. There is a special call for this now, and a special opportunity for a beginning to be made.

I am sending copies of a Form of "Prayer for Family Worship in this Time of War" to the Clergy.

Will you get and use these, and when the War is over we shall be able to continue a good habit.

I am,

Yours faithfully in Christ Jesus our Lord,

HENRY,

Bishop of Carpentaria.

The Consecration of the Bishop.

On St. Matthew's Day, September 21st, the Rev. Henry Newton was consecrated in Brisbane Cathedral as Bishop of Carpentaria. At the same time and place Archdeacon Le Fanu was consecrated as Co-adjutor Bishop of Brisbane. The solemn service was beautifully ordered throughout, and the large congregation must have been deeply moved by the inspiring ceremonial. The consecration was performed by the Archbishop of Brisbane, assisted by the Bishops of Rockhampton, New Guinea, North Queensland, and Bishop Stone-Wigg. About 40 of the clergy of the Diocese were present. The Diocese of Carpentaria was represented by the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson and the Rev. E. J. Nash, the latter acting as Bishop's Chaplain.

At 10.30 the first procession entered, the Cathedral Chapter taking their places in the stalls, and the two Bishops-Elect, with their Chaplains, being seated near the choir steps.

The hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy," was sung as the Archbishop and the other consecrating Bishops entered the Sanctuary.

The sermon was preached by Bishop Stone-Wigg from the concluding verses of St. Matt. xi. The preacher said the words "Come unto me," etc., had been called "the gracious invitation," but it seemed to him that, taking the whole passage together, the words were rather a private soliloquy of our Lord. It was one of those few occasions when we are enabled to see into the inner life of the Saviour. We are apt to give too little study to that inner life, to read our own conditions into the Perfect Life: we think of it as one of perpetual activity, and do not realise the reposeful nature of the age in which our Lord lived. The Bishop illustrated this by the sharp contrast he had himself experienced when called from the busy life of the city to the solitudes and long slow journeys of his New Guinea Diocese.

The preacher made moving reference to the personal relations between himself and the Bishop-Elect of Carpentaria in New Guinea, and congratulated the Australian Church on the fact that they had been able to find in their own ranks in Australia a suitable successor to Dr. White, the first Bishop of Carpentaria.

The Bishops-Elect were then presented to the Archbishop, seated in his chair before the Altar. The usual documents were read and signed, and the interrogations answered. The Bishops-Elect then retired with their Chaplains to the vestry and returned vested with copes. The act of consecration was performed by the laying on of the hands of the Bishops, and the service of the Holy Communion was continued.

Throughout the Diocese of Carpentaria the Holy Communion was celebrated on St. Matthew's Day with special intention for the new Bishop.

A Missionary Meeting.

The Missionary Meeting at Brisbane on September 22nd was a notably cheerful gathering. Of course the Archbishop of Brisbane was in the chair; and that means that the audience is confident that one speech at least will be a happy combination of serious and lofty thought with playful and delightful humour. Still the cheerfulness of the people who completely filled a good-sized hall was very striking, and is of happy augury; for it means that a good number of people, in Brisbane at least, have learnt that a true Church is a growing Church; that if it is growing inwardly it must of necessity grow outwardly also; and that the accidents of geography and race can never be allowed to stop that growth. The good attendance, as the Archbishop told us, was not the result of any beating of the big drum through the parishes, nor of any of the devices which used to be necessary in order to fill a room; it was just the spontaneous answer to a simple notice that a Missionary Meeting was to be held.

When will our Northern parishes rise to this level, and cast aside the prejudices they have inherited from the dark ages of ignorance?

The Bishop of New Guinea was unable to be present, so the Bishop of Carpentaria spoke on behalf of that Diocese, where he has been working for 16 years. He was able to report that really wonderful progress has been made in the last few years, and that the prospects are very bright if the Church supports the Mission as she ought. He showed by particular instances the growth of a sense of moral responsibility, which is quite a new thing in the Papuan character.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson followed with an account of his long journey through Central Australia. He described the accident by which he nearly lost his life in the Victoria River, but otherwise he made light of the difficulties and dangers he had passed through. He habitually thinks so little of such things himself that he failed to convey to his audience any adequate idea of what he had had to face.

Then the Bishop of North Queensland spoke of the work in the back-blocks, its difficulties and its encouragements, giving some striking instances of the way in which boys on cattle stations often do stick to their Church principles, and eagerly avail themselves of opportunities of enjoying their Church privileges of Prayer and Eucharist. And, mingling gaiety with gravity, he described how his well-fed horses, just loaded up for a big tour, "played up" all round the paddock. That was just after Mr. Wilkinson had strolled into Camooweal after his two and a-half years' journey. The reverend bushman was engaged in shoeing his 16 horses, and came across to the paddock girt with his shoeing apron, and with his mouth filled from ear to ear with nails, and smiled serenely as the Bishop's horses bucked and spun round like teetotums, flinging their master's worldly goods to every point of the compass. The verbal description of this scene was more entertaining than any picture show. It was certainly a cheerful meeting. May there be many more like it.

Notes.

A further step in the progress of the Torres Straits Mission was marked by the arrival of the Rev. G. A. Luscombe and Mrs. Luscombe in Thursday Island on September 4th. These new workers are heartily welcomed. They went out in the "Dogai" on September 7th to St. Paul's, Moa, where they will reside for some time.

Mrs. Marshall and Miss Davis, who have been in charge of Moa since Miss Quinan's departure in July, left the Mission soon after the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Luscombe, and returned to Sydney by the Mataram. We are deeply grateful to these ladies for their work at Moa, which they carried out with cheerful enthusiasm and good discretion.

We rejoice to record the birth of a son to the Rev. Frere Lane and Mrs. Lane at Normanton on August 21st.

The Rev. C. Hall, Rector of Normanton, was able to set out in August on a long round of visits to cattle stations, the Rev. F. Lane taking his duty at Normanton. Mr. Hall travelled first to the Mitchell River Mission, where he spent some time, his services being much appreciated.

The Sub-Dean, the Rev. E. J. Nash, left Thursday Island on September 11th, in order to be present at the consecration of the Bishop of Carpentaria. Mr. Nash then goes on with the Bishop to Provincial Synod at Rockhampton.

The "Francis Pritt" came in towards the end of August, bringing Mr. Chapman. Mr. C. G. Lane, who is to visit Trubanam for a couple of months, arrived on September 4th. The boat took on board the September stores, and sailed for the Mitchell River on September 7th.

An important addition to the Cathedral will soon be made by the erection of two stained glass windows, one in memory of Deaconess Buchanan, the other in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Archer, who were lost in the "Quetta." The windows have arrived, and will soon be placed in position.

We deeply regret to record that the Rev. W. A. Fletcher has recently experienced a great sorrow in the loss of two brothers. The elder went out with a friend in a motor boat at Sydney last June, and nothing more was ever heard of the boat or its occupants. Shortly after a younger brother attempted to bicycle overland from Pine Creek to Sydney, and was soon after found lying on the road in a state of collapse. He was brought into Pine Creek, where he died in the hospital on July 18th. The greatest sympathy is felt with Mr. Fletcher and his family.

PROVINCIAL SYNOD.

The Synod opened on Monday evening, September 27th, at St. Paul's Cathedral, Rockhampton, and continued on the two following days.

We greatly regret that we have not space for a full report of the discussions which, in accordance with the tone of the President's Address, maintained a high level throughout. We append a verbatim report from the Rockhampton Morning Bulletin of the greater part of the Archbishop of Brisbane's Opening Address.

Since our last Session, Bishop White has left us. He leaves behind him a tradition of self-forgetting work and courageous adventure, which will not be forgotten in our generation, and his acceptance of the pioneer Diocese of Willochra, hardly less removed from the amenities of Church work than Carpentaria, is just the sort of choice he has taught us to expect of him. And with him I must mention an old colleague of his who, although not of our Province, worked for many years as Priest and Bishop in North Queensland. Bishop Barlow belonged to an older generation—he had left the North before most of us had arrived in Queensland—but the memory of his eloquence and his kindly, genial attitude towards his fellow-men lingers on still, and many will have heard of his death with sorrow.

Again, since our last session Bishop Feetham, of North Queensland, has entered upon his work. He needs no words of introduction, for he has made himself known and loved by us all long ago. Nor need I say much in the way of welcome to the tried and gallant missionary who takes his seat among us for the first time as Bishop of Carpentaria. We know about his sixteen years' work in New Guinea, and that knowledge leads us to look forward to his work in Carpentaria with unbounded confidence and hope. Bishop Newton's appointment has been acclaimed—apart from all else—as an indication of the value which the whole Church sets upon the brave work of our overseas missionaries. I might feel it harder to speak of my tried and trusted colleague, Bishop Le Fanu, only here again it is not necessary, for he is known to all. I owe him already more than I can tell, and it is a very real happiness to me to have him at my side to wield an influence more weighty even than before. I must not indulge too much in the pleasure of personal recognitions; but there are three whose names during the past months have added lustre to our province, and of whom it would be wrong to keep silence. Deaconess Florence Buchanan ended her brave and beautiful career on the 30th December, 1913. So much has been written of her and her work that I will not now say more than we are proud and thankful to claim for our province a life-work so fruitful and a personality so pure and strong as hers. We class with her in our thankful and affectionate remembrance that manly, simple, loving soldier-spirit of Frederick Hulton-Sams. "There are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit," and in a far different sphere from Deaconess Buchanan, Hulton-Sams bore witness to the same Lord. It is not for me to judge whether he did right in accepting a commission in the army; but I can and do acknowledge with thankfulness that his brief career has enriched the traditions of the Church in Queensland, and has taught the world, as few have been able to do, the vital interdependence of Christianity and true manhood. The third name which is in my mind is of one still happily among us, and indeed sitting as the representative of Carpentaria in this Synod. I want to welcome in your name the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson and congratulate him on his safe return from his great and hazardous journey. Mr. Wilkinson has indeed worthily carried on the tradition of Bishop White, and we are proud that in him Queensland can boast not only a missionary-hearted priest, but also a notable pioneer traveller in the distant parts of Australia.

Turning from persons to things, it seems worth while to note two features of development in our work of the past three years. The first of these is the progress of religious instruction in the State schools under the Elementary Education Act Amendment Act of 1911. I think we can claim that our clergy throughout the State have responded nobly to their opportunity. Practically every clergyman in the Province is engaged in the work, and in many parishes the number of schools visited by one man is little less than marvellous. Among the people, too, I hear on all sides entire satisfaction, and the only complaints I have heard have been from outlying districts, where the children are deprived, owing to the distance and scarcity of the population, of those visits of the clergy which undoubtedly parents regard as a privilege. Of course the whole State is not yet nearly covered, and one longs for the day when a great fund may be available for the payment of catechists devoted exclusively to this work.

Another and most happy development has been the progress in the support of Foreign Missions. Our totals have advanced from £1890, as the sum total for the five Dioceses of the Province in 1912, to £2448, the total for the year ending last Easter. In this total two things are remarkable. First, the notable advance of the Diocese of North Queensland from £92 in 1912 to £294 this year; and second the generosity, as compared with the rest of us, of the Missionary Dioceses of Carpentaria and New Guinea. Carpentaria has advanced from £131 to £209, New Guinea from £60 to £203. Nevertheless we must face the plain fact that our total contribution for the past year, which is the highest on record, fails to reach even the single total of the Diocese of Sydney or of the Diocese of Melbourne. We are an outlying Province of the settled Church, and we are thrust into a proximity with the non-Christian world, which makes our position almost unique; we ought therefore to be leading the whole Church in our sense of the Missionary obligation.

This is our ideal for Australia. The machinery is here, and will surely complete its own development pari passu with the national life. But there are two practical points which in my judgment emerge from this consideration of historical precedents and modern needs. Our Church in this land must be Australian in name as well as fact; and, secondly, it is not necessary, as a preliminary to complete autonomy, to give anything like plenary power to General Synod. It is quite possible for a national Church to be governed, as I have indicated, by means of a diffused authority, an authority, that is, which resides partly in the Dioceses and in the provinces as well as in the General Synod. It is my own belief, so far as my present lights go, that General Synod ought to have powers of initiative (which Dioceses and Provinces ought accordingly to surrender) in certain specified directions. I suggest Prayer Book revision; corporate steps of re-union; and the marriage laws, as three directions in which this power may be given. After initiation by General Synod, legislative proposals in either of these three spheres might be referred to the subordinate synods for revision, and finally promulgated as law by General Synod when sufficient assents have been obtained. But I will not detain you longer with these technical matters. I have said enough to show the urgent need for study and of a committee appointed by General Synod (in accordance with the resolution), which will bring to that study all the learning and application we are able to give.

NATIONAL REPENTANCE.

I turn now from the discussion of abstract principles to the real situation before us. In this situation the Church has a message to deliver which will test her sincerity and tax her strength to the uttermost. For the message she has to deliver is not only of a sort distasteful to the popular mind, but also of so weighty and penetrating a character that it cannot be delivered at all without antecedent preparation on the part of the Church itself. I believe that we have reached a psychological moment. The first effects of the War upon our minds, the sense of novelty, the thrilling moments of national self-consciousness, the feverish pre-occupation, have now given way to something more settled and habitual, and we have leisure, if I may so put it, to face the spiritual situation. That situation can be stated in a sentence. The time has come for repentance. That is the paramount thing. We stand as a race at the parting of the ways; and the choice, I believe, is between repentance and the beginnings of dissolution; between a race exalted and purified through trial and a race hardened beyond repentance. "The time is come when judgment should begin at the House of God." If we of the Church fail to face it now, the nation will certainly never face it at all. What have we learned? War has come, we are all saying, not to destroy, but to chasten us. Has it even begun to chasten us? What real signs are there of national repentance? We must distinguish, of course, between penitence and sacrifice. The spirit of sacrifice, thank God, is without doubt among us; but I am speaking of that inward attitude of the public mind which is conscious of faults and earnestly desires to amend; of that attitude which, apart from all thought of gain in the War, turns honestly to God. Of this, I fear, the traces are small indeed.

On the contrary, a veil of self-satisfaction seems to have clouded our minds. We are satisfied to find ourselves—as we undoubtedly do find ourselves—living at a somewhat higher level than of old. We find ourselves suddenly projected into a world of tragedy and heroism, and it is little wonder if we are solemnised and raised to a higher platform by our close actual proximity to things we have hitherto only read about in the classics and in the drama. The more thoughtful of us are conscious of an activity of sympathy which we never knew in ourselves before. We are less selfish, more ready to serve others. Of course, this is all to the good, and the taste of sacrifice may lead us to desire more. But there is a danger in it, and I cannot help thinking that there is a subtle self-satisfaction over the new and thrilling emotions which we feel.

And this self-satisfaction amounts, I fear, to actual and very coarse self-righteousness the moment we think of our enemies and of our just cause. We know that the German methods of warfare have shocked the world and brought all neutral powers at least secretly to our side. We are strong in the consciousness that never in our history have we taken up the sword in a cause more just; but we have stopped at that. We have been so busy condemning our enemies that we have hardly begun even to consider our own past record and present position as a race in the sight of God.

And again, the very activity of our good works lulls our conscience to sleep. Every religious man knows how prone we all are to take refuge in superficial activities from the sterner demands of the spiritual life. Even so, among the less thoughtful, perhaps among us all, the busy round of our war activities, our Australia days, our wounded soldiers benefits, our Red Cross carnivals, and so forth is quite enough to fend off all serious reckoning with ourselves and establish a self-satisfied sense of duty done. And it is more than that. Frivolity and selfish pleasure are masquerading everywhere under noble names. Under the sacred name of patriotism the carnival spirit has been running riot and every sort of unhealthy excitement has been given the rein. Where is the patriotism of encouraging raffles among children of school age? What conceivable service are we rendering to our country by the public crowning of carnival queens? In the face of all the suffering and tragedy these things jar. The people would have no heart for such things if the view they took were less selfish and less superficial than it is. And when, after taking our fill of pleasure, we pride ourselves on our good deeds, it becomes plain that the veil of self-satisfaction and content is blinding our eyes to the realities of the times. What the nation needs—what we all need—is repentance.

And we must further recognise the fact that true national repentance will never be wrought by sporadic attacks upon the more obvious social abuses, but only by getting at the spirit behind them; for amendment will come only when the national conscience is really stirred, when men's hearts and wills everywhere are swayed into unity by a deep misgiving, when the lips even of the careless and of the ungodly falter in awe the confession "The Lord, He is the God: The Lord, He is the God." Then, and then only, will the strength be found in the nation to rise up and cry "Take the Prophets of Baal, let not one of them escape."

Therefore, I do not presume to say what faults need correcting in our national life. Modern denunciations of sin seem usually to be distressingly futile. They may attract a passing notice or provoke a brief newspaper correspondence, but they seem to make no change. Perhaps this is because modern preachers, whether in the press or in the pulpit, have not experienced the personal penitence, the haunting fear, the anguish of sorrow which marked the prophets of old.

But I will ask you to consider one feature in the life of the community by way of example. Without doubt a repentant nation will in some sense be a united nation, and that is just what, in spite of the excellent spirit of co-operation, born of the present emergency, we cannot yet pretend to be. Labour speakers make no secret of their belief that far greater than the European War is the class war between labour and capital; and on the other side, although less is said of it in the papers, the attitude of employers against organised labour is no less definitely an attitude of war. On both sides you are met with impatience and contempt if you speak of peace. If this spirit remains there is no doubt whatever that after the War, class strife, backed by bitter hatred, is likely to blaze forth more furiously than ever before. Now, are we to regard this as inevitable? Certainly the unrest caused by the emergence of the Labour movement must inevitably go on until some sort of social equilibrium is attained; with that no fair-minded man—certainly no Christian man—would quarrel; but that this must be through bitter class war, as the extremists preach it, is absolutely false, and is due to nothing else but to those sins of covetousness and self-will which lie at the bottom of most of our controversies. I confess that, as things are at present, I see nothing to encourage the hope that this lesson will be learnt. The violent elements in the community are not to be restrained by appeals from individual Churchmen as is sometimes suggested by both sides, or by a Press which is prevented by its position from playing a prophet's role. Only a repentant people can deal with so great an evil. Only an awakening of the general conscience can throw off a disease so widespread and so strong. And it is the Church's business to make the people repent. It is the Church's duty to awaken the conscience of the nation.

Yes, indeed, the Church has a message to deliver which will test her sincerity and tax her strength to the uttermost; but it is not beyond her power, and please God she will be faithful. But from the very first we must bear in mind one guiding fact. Only a repentant Church can preach repentance to the nation. We must begin with ourselves. The message of repentance can only be given out of a repentant heart, and the nation at large will judge of its sin by the measure of our sorrow and solicitude. We must begin, then, to school ourselves to that attitude of mind which we seek to commend to others. And the work must be done mainly upon our knees. Conviction of sin is not a thing we can attain by our own unaided will; it is the work of the Holy Spirit; but it will assuredly come to us, and through us to the nation, if only we will "agree" in prayer. Can we not all agree to pray daily for national penitence? Can we not each one make an act of penitence every day for our own personal share in the national sin? These things at least are within our power. And perhaps we can further strive by a concerted effort for the recognition of God in the home through the restoration of family prayer. Again, we can do something if we will take the trouble to mobilise the forces of the Church in every parish by calling up the slack Churchmen, the occasional worshippers, to something more regular and more earnest in the recognition of their Maker and in the honouring of His sacraments. Of this we may be sure, that every effort of an awakened conscience in the Church will react on the nation at large. The conditions are favourable; the people will listen; may God in His mercy enable His Church to speak.

I want you to know that, in making this appeal, I do not speak for myself alone. The Bishops of the Province have been earnestly considering the matter, for we are at one as to the urgent need. The General Mission is due in 1917, and the two pioneers are to visit us next year by way of preparation. And here is the objective to which we can address our efforts. The dates, it is true, are uncertain, and if the war continues we may count it as sure that the Mission will have to be yet further postponed. But whatever the date of the Mission we cannot postpone our appeal to the faithful now. To them we look. The faithful communicants of our Church are not the whole Church; they may be only a tiny minority of the people. But the initiative lies with them, and there is no limit to what they may accomplish, if God will. If Sodom could be spared for the sake of ten righteous persons, how much more will the penitence and humiliation of the faithful among us be accepted of God in the day of our country's trial.

To you, then, first, the leaders of our Church in this Province, I address my appeal. Upon you and upon me rests an obligation and a responsibility which I pray God we may have grace to perceive. The issues at stake are mighty and the penalty of the Church's failure is awful to contemplate; but God's ear is still open to the penitent, and He gives wonderful courage and power to those who rise up in obedience to His call.

Enthronement of the second Bishop of Carpentaria.

The Right Reverend Henry Newton, second Bishop of Carpentaria, was enthroned in the Cathedral, Thursday Island, the All Souls' Quetta Memorial Church, on Sunday, October 17th, 1915, the twentieth Sunday after Trinity, by the Rev. E. J. Nash, M.A., Sub-Dean of the Cathedral and Administrator of the Diocese, acting under a mandate issued by the Metropolitan of the Province of Queensland, the Most Reverend the Archbishop of Brisbane.

The Rev. J. J. E. Done, of the Torres Straits Mission, had come in a day or two before the Sunday, and had brought with him in the "Dogai" the Rev. G. A. Luscombe and Mrs. Luscombe from St. Paul's, Moa, and Mrs. Zahl, the teacher in charge of the School at Badu. The "Banzai" had come in with representatives from St. Paul's, Moa, boats from other islands of Torres Straits had also come in, but unfortunately some were delayed and did not arrive in Thursday Island until after the Sunday. The "Francis Pitt" had arrived from the Mitchell River, bringing some to represent the Mission Station at Trubanaman. There were about 50 South Sea Islanders and Torres Straits Islanders in the south aisle of the Cathedral, so that the Missionary work of the Diocese was well represented. It was not possible for any other parish except the Cathedral parish to be represented, and none of the clergy from other parts of the Diocese could be present.

The Cathedral was filled before ten o'clock, and in the congregation were officers and men of the R.A.G.A., and of the Torres Lodge of Freemasons.

The Sub-Dean, the Rev. E. J. Nash, with the Rev. G. A. Luscombe and the lay members of the Diocesan Council, proceeded to the main door of the Cathedral, which was closed. The Bishop, who was accompanied by his Chaplain, the Rev. J. J. E. Done, knocked at the door, and having been admitted, requested the Administrator to enthrone him. The lay members of the Diocesan Council, the Rev. G. A. Luscombe, the Sub-Dean, the Bishop and his Chaplain then proceeded to the chancel steps, the congregation singing the 122nd Psalm—"I was glad when they said unto Me, We will go into the house of the Lord."

After the Psalm Mr Lee-Bryce read the mandate issued by the Metropolitan of the Province for the enthronement, which included the certificates of election and of consecration. Thereupon the Sub-Dean took the Bishop by the hand and caused him to sit in his throne, saying the usual form of words, which includes this blessing:—

"The Lord preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth for evermore. Mayest thou remain in justice and sanctity, and adorn the place delegated to thee by God. God is powerful, and may He increase in you His grace."

The Sub-Dean then placed in the hands of the Bishop the Pastoral Staff, saying:—

"Reverend Father in God, in the name of the clergy and the laity of this Diocese, I now place the Pastoral Staff, the emblem of your episcopal office, in your hands. Long may you hold it, and rule this Diocese to the glory of God, and the edifying and well-governing of the Church. May the Good Shepherd be with you and bless you at all times and in all things. Amen."

After these ceremonies the Bishop and the clergy proceeded to the altar, the Te Deum was sung, and the concluding prayers for the Bishop were said by the Sub-Dean. The Bishop proceeded with the Communion Service, and was himself the preacher, taking for his text St. Luke i. 17. The offertory alms were given to the Fund for the Support of the Resident Military Chaplain at Enoggera.

The cope which was worn by the Bishop at the consecration and at the enthronement is the one which was made for the first Bishop of the Diocese, and it was left for the use of the Bishop by him. Bishop White also left the Pastoral Staff which he had used when Bishop of Carpentaria for the use of the Bishop of the Diocese, and so cope and staff were interesting symbols of the continuity of the Church in the Diocese.

The arrangements in connection with the enthronement were in the hands of the Sub-Dean, and we have to thank him for the care he took over them, a care which resulted in a very reverent function.

The Bishop was the preacher at Evensong on the day of the enthronement, and there was again a large congregation in the Cathedral.

Public Welcome to the Bishop.

The people of Thursday Island shewed their usual hospitality, and how hearty a Northern welcome can be, when they filled the Hall of the Institute on the night of Thursday, October 14th, to bid the Bishop and Mrs. Newton welcome to Thursday Island. The room had been gaily decorated with flags by members of the Garrison, and everything and everybody seemed very gay when Mr. Lee-Bryce introduced the Bishop in a happy speech, bidding him welcome in the name of the people of the Island. The Sub-Dean followed, and explained the procedure in the election of a Bishop of Carpentaria. There being no Synod, the election is in the hands of the Bishops of Queensland, who consulted the Clergy and Church-people of the Diocese, as far as it was possible to do so. The Sub-Dean emphasised the importance of the fact that the new Bishop is an Australian.

The Bishop then spoke, and thanked the people for their kindness to Mrs. Newton and to himself, which was of a piece with what had been their experience since the appointment was made. The sympathy and the kindness shewn by people in all parts of Australia, as well as from other parts of the world, was a proof of the great interest which was taken in the New Guinea Mission, of the staff of which Mrs. Newton and he had been members, as it was also an example of how the communion of Saints is a very practical truth. The Bishop expressed a hope that Mrs. Newton and he would be able to enter into the lives of the people amongst whom they had come to live—that was their wish—and he hoped to be able to follow, to some extent, the example set by the first Bishop of the Diocese. He hoped to be able to work at many matters, about which there might be a difference of opinion from the point of view of others; and he asked that people would try to look at them from his point of view.

After the speeches, the Bishop and Mrs. Newton were introduced to the people individually, and a very pleasant evening was spent with conversation, music and refreshments.

Confirmation.

The first confirmation administered by the Bishop was at Trubanaman, when Miss Ellen Alma Bridge was confirmed in the Church of the Ascension on Tuesday, October 26th, at 8 p.m. The candidate was presented by the Rev. F. H. T. Lane, Chaplain of the Mission Station, Trubanaman, Mitchell River.

Marriage Licenses.

The Bishop wishes the license forms issued in the name of the late Bishop of the Diocese to be used, and he requests that surrogates will make the necessary alteration of the name of the Bishop in the body of the license, and that they will initial the alteration.

The clergy are reminded that they may not marry a person who has been divorced, nor may they marry a man to the sister of his deceased wife, as such marriages are forbidden by the law of the Church. They are also reminded that the Church service should not be used unless both parties to the marriage have been baptised.

The Bishop's Visit to Trubanaman.

On the Tuesday after the enthronement, I left Thursday Island in the "Francis Pritt" to visit the Mission Station on the Mitchell River. On the whole the trip was a quick one considering the time of the year, and that on the return journey there were head winds. I left on October 19th, and returned to Thursday Island late at night on October 31st. It was on this last day that we had strong head winds, which meant a very heavy beat from Crab Island to the passage between Prince of Wales Island and Horn Island. It took four days to get to the station, and nearly five days to get back, and I was able to spend about four days at Trubanaman. When we arrived at the landing at Koongalara early on the Saturday morning a boy was sent off at once to the Mission Station with the mail, and to let the people know we had arrived. It was nearly 1 o'clock before Mr. Chapman got to the landing with the buckboard, and as he started from the Mission Station almost immediately after the boy arrived, there was not much value in the assurances that were given me, "That boy he go very quick, he walk very fast, suppose another boy go with him he run all the time. I think he get to station in half an hour. Suppose he leave 4 o'clock he get there half-past six." He must have taken three and a-half hours to do the nine miles!!

There were evidences of the drought all the way to the Mission Station. No grass, nothing green excepting the leaves of the trees, and here and there where there are depressions in the soil a sort of rough reedy green growth which Mr Chapman told me made visitors from cattle stations who crossed the reserve quite jealous. "It is a pleasure to see green grass again; you are lucky to have that," they say. The dust was awful along the track, which gets little use, and not only was it in clouds, but it is of a peculiarly adhesive nature, the worst one can imagine. It won't shake off, and it won't brush off. It must, I think, be a case of carpet-beating for your clothes, and firm rubbing with much elbow grease for your luggage. We saw some of the cattle belonging to the station as we drove through the reserve. They were a little distance away, but I was told they are doing well in spite of the drought. But then it must be remembered the reserve is very lightly stocked indeed, so there is rough feed, and in the lagoons a certain amount of green feed, the cattle can roam over a wide area, there is abundance of water, and, it seems, little danger of bogging. The milkers they have at the station are doing very badly, and unless there is rain very soon it will be necessary to turn them out to save their lives. When we got to the station we found some large poincianas in full bloom, giving a bright appearance—and the mangoes looking fresh and green in spite of the drought, and with good crops. It is remarkable that Mr Matthews has been able to train his people not to help themselves to the fruit, even when it falls. All is brought in, and when there is enough it is shared out. When one says all perhaps it may be not quite literally true, and it would indeed be strange were it an absolute fact. It is said one sex accuses the other sometimes of not quite playing the game, and "if you go to such a place you will see stones to prove it"; but it is fair to say that is no proof, for the children get a good many, and the accused sex, it happens, do go there to eat their mangoes, and the chances are rather that if they were stones of appropriated fruit they would not be where they are in evidence, so the charge must be taken as not proven, and at all events there is no doubt about the large number of mangoes that are brought in.

Everything was against the appearance of the station when I paid my first visit. No place in the country looks well in a drought—though if the water from the lagoon could be got on the ground Trubanaman would be as beautiful as a place in dead level country can be. The station is well and conveniently laid out, with the Church, the best building on the place, in the centre of all. There has been no money wasted on buildings, many of which are of native material—cabbage-tree palm walls and roofs, and except for the sleeping quarters of the white staff, all have mud floors—ant hill, I think it is.

The staff gave me a very hearty welcome when we arrived about three o'clock in the afternoon, and, after we had had something to eat, I left them to get through their mail, and went for a walk round the station. There are evidences everywhere of a good deal of ingenuity to adapt things, and to make the most of things, and all such means work. It said quite plainly "if we cannot afford to have what we want, to get things done we must find some other way of doing it."

There is the portable engine, which is going to be a very useful thing in time to come. It will work a saw-mill, and already there is a circular saw, and the frame for a vertical saw. It will irrigate land, and make it possible for food to be grown in the dry season, and even if there is not a drought, there is always a dry season in the year, when irrigation is necessary, and when, I fancy, with irrigation, better results can be got than even in the wet season, for then it is too wet. There is a pump fixed, but there is no piping, and the land rises from the lagoon, so it cannot be run by drains on to the ground. Here was an example of an attempt to overcome difficulties. Two of the members of the staff made themselves personally responsible for a quantity of galvanised roofing iron some time ago. This iron was bent half-round, and being supported on forked sticks, made a fluming from the pump towards the place where the ground is higher, and from where it was thought they could irrigate with drains; the joints were caulked with grass and mud, and the scheme promised well, and though it could not be considered a permanent thing, it would show what could be done, and careful people, who need proof that a thing can be done before they will help it to be done, would be satisfied, and a permanent scheme might be arranged for. But, owing to the War, galvanised iron jumped 100 per cent. in price, or thereabouts, and two Missionaries were not strong enough financially to stand that, so they tried by cutting the iron down the middle to make it go farther. Even so they had not enough, and while they did get further they did not get far enough, and besides they found their fluming was not big enough to carry the stream, so they got towards the place they wanted to get to. What is really wanted is piping to carry the water and for the irrigating to be done by spraying rather than by flooding the ground. Then the cultivation could be begun near the lagoon and gradually extended to the better land a little away from the lagoon. I suggested that enquiries be made to find out if the pump will force the water through the piping, but even if it does not, a small tank at the pump would give head enough for the water to be carried a long distance by the pipes, as the fall is very slight to the lagoon, and that an effort be made to get piping to irrigate a couple of acres or so. Then if it proves successful there can be extensions made every year, increasing the area and getting new soil into cultivation. I have gone somewhat fully into this matter because I think what has been done reflects great credit on Messrs. Matthews & Chapman, and also because it seems to me it is most important that something permanent of this kind be done to reduce the expense of the food supply—but still more, to encourage the Aborigines on the Station to live a settled life. We have to remember that the great difficulty of Mission work amongst the Aborigines is, that we have to change a nomadic race into settled agricultural communities. There cannot be the wide roaming and hunting there used to be. The supply of food, vegetable and animal, provided by nature, on which the tribes depended in old days, is perforce reduced, because the available area is reduced; the people must not hunt on stations and disturb the cattle. We have then to change the social habits as well as the religious habits of the people. What possible chance is there of doing this, if crops are to fail as they have done this year, owing to drought, or if in ordinary good years the food supply is limited to a few months of the year? Also, even if enough could be stored from the produce grown in the wet season, it is necessary that the people have work to do in the dry season as well as in the wet season; and the Gospel of Work is needed as one of the ways in which the people are to be saved in this world and in the next. During the time I was staying on the Station, I walked to Angeram, the little outstation about a mile and a-half from the head station, where some ten families live under the charge of Jack Geibo. A very great deal of labour had been done here, clearing, stumping, fencing, and ploughing, and the result nil—owing to the drought this year certainly—but any one must see that such an experience makes it difficult to get people to understand the benefit of hard work, and especially people who are not by custom and tradition an agricultural people.

There were questions to be discussed about the general management of the station, and also about the spiritual work. Both the Superintendent and the Chaplain had problems to be solved, and guidance and advice to be sought. There was the confirmation of the older Christians on the station; classes had been held for a long time past with a view to a confirmation "when the Bishop comes." Various things had interfered with the preparation of the people, and the indefiniteness was not helpful to Chaplain or candidates. I suggested that a class be formed of those it was considered advisable to present for confirmation, and I promised to come again at the end of November and confirm any that were ready then. Then there were others on the station who wished to be prepared for baptism. Some had been under instruction for more than twelve months, others not so long, others were now seeking to be prepared. Then there was a young girl who had come on a visit to Trubanaman from a cattle station some 70 miles away. She had come with her father rather more than a week before I arrived, for stores sent from Normanton by sailing vessel, landed near the Mission Station and stored in the Mission store. The daughter was to go to another cattle station while the father went home and came back for a second load. But the Chaplain learned that this girl had been prepared for Confirmation some time before, when she was living further South, but had had to leave there just before the Confirmation, and she wished very much to be confirmed, so it was suggested that she remain at the Mission Station and be prepared, so that if I came before her father returned she could be confirmed. I very gladly agreed to do this, when I found how well she had been instructed, and how earnest she was in her desire to be confirmed.

On the Sunday we had a celebration of Holy Communion at 7 a.m., Mattins at 9 a.m., when I preached to the people. After this service I spoke to those who should be candidates for Confirmation, and in the afternoon to those who wished to be baptized. Evensong was at 5.30 p.m., and again I preached. The services were very reverent indeed, and were very heartily joined in by the people. The pulpit is surely unique. It is made out of a very large log of wood, about six feet long, which stands upright on one end. The log has been cut down about four feet of its length, and a narrow piece left on, which forms the front of the pulpit. Then there is a footpace for floor, and a little lower another piece cut out to form a step to the footpace. A cross has been fixed to the front, and the whole is a beautiful brown colour, as though it had been polished.

On Monday I visited the school, where I found two dozen children being taught by Miss Quinan. Her children shewed, by their answers to questions, that they take in and understand what is taught them, but it is very difficult to find out how much they know. All the teaching has to be done in English, and some of the children do not know much of that language, and are shy of using it. They understand more than they get credit for sometimes, as was shewn by a little girl. The class was being taught the 23rd Psalm, and it was thought this little maid would not be able to do much, when one day after school she put her head in the window at the ladies' quarters, and volunteered to repeat the Psalm if that would give her teacher any pleasure, and she said it with hardly a mistake! But Miss Quinan has perhaps the most difficult and trying work, and yet it is one of the most important on the station, and so must be done. It would be a little less trying if the school material were better. Uniform copy-books, more grades of reading books and more copies, a decent blackboard—and such-like things would make a difficult piece of work less unnecessarily difficult.

On Monday night at 9 p.m., after all the children had gone to bed, we began a quiet day, to last till about 4 p.m. on the Tuesday. There were four addresses on the Church as the Training School for Saints, and there was a Service of Intercession at mid-day on Tuesday, besides a celebration of Holy Communion, Mattins and Prayers at 3 p.m. The people, children and adults, had been sent away for the day and were back for Evensong about 6 p.m. At 8 p.m. that day we had the Confirmation.

On the Tuesday morning I had the pleasure of marrying the Superintendent and the Matron, Mr. H. Matthews and Miss Phillips. There were two little bridesmaids with very black, shining faces and very white little dresses, and very large bouquets of poincianas, the only flower available, and they managed to stay during the marriage service and the celebration which followed.

I had to get away as soon after the breakfast as was possible, but there was much to be done in the way of writing letters and arranging various things, so it was nearly mid-day when the Chaplain was ready to drive me to the beach, and half-past two before we got under sail in the "Francis Pritt," on the voyage back to Thursday Island. We called at Mapoon on the way back, and I had a very enjoyable three hours on that Station with Mr. and Mrs. Hey and Mrs. Ward, who were of course kindness itself, and who sent me away laden with good things for the rest of the voyage. There was just enough time at Mapoon to make one wish to spend some time on the Station and to see the work on the out-stations. The impression one had was of very successful work indeed, done with very great thoroughness.

I enjoyed the visit to Trubanaman very much, and was much impressed with the capabilities of the aborigines. It is impossible to compare work amongst them with work amongst the people of Papua. Conditions are so very different in every way, but I gained an impression that there is something in the character of the aboriginal which is wanting in the Papuan, and which we used to miss in them. I can hardly say what it is. Almost I am inclined to think it is that there is more stability of character in the aboriginal. Of course he has not the quicksilver in his nature the Papuan has. He is of a much more serious turn of mind.

The health of the staff was very good indeed, even though Mr. Chapman was laid up towards the end of my visit. Still he managed to give away the bride. The whole tone of the station is very high, it seemed to me. I was glad to notice that Mr. Chapman is trying to get some knowledge of the language. I think it is a pity more has not been done in that way, even though English must be the working language. Some knowledge of the native dialect would be useful in gaining interest in the lessons and instructions, and also in awakening the intellectual faculties, and perhaps, too, it would have the effect of making the teaching something less foreign to the people taught.

General Synod.

We can place on record the fact that General Synod met in Sydney on October 13th, 1915, and this is really all that can be said about what has been an unfortunate and an unsatisfactory business. There were enough representatives to form a quorum, and in this the Diocese of Carpentaria did its duty, as there were three representatives of the Diocese present—the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, and Messrs. C. Bellamy and A. A. Yates. Synod met and satisfied the Determination fixing the time of meeting, no matter how the particular clause of the Determination is construed, so there can be no dispute on that point in the future, but it has been an unfortunate bungle, and the sooner it is forgotten the better. The Primate in his address spoke about the events which led to the undignified position of General Synod in the Session 1915, and then he passed on to speak of the War, and the special duty of the Church to be true to her calling at this time. Certain formal business was transacted, a resolution was passed deploring the steps which had been taken, and which had resulted in the position in which those present found themselves, and the Synod adjourned sine die. It seems that there is to be another meeting this year, the date of which has not yet been fixed, and some of us must be prepared to go South this year, for it is important that this meeting should be thoroughly representative, and there is sure to be important business before the Synod.

People talk sometimes of prayer being an attempt to persuade God to do what we want instead of what He wants; and people have sometimes said that prayer is foolishness, because it is trying to drag God down to our level. It is just the opposite. It is bringing us up into correspondence with God, and thereby making us effective. It is liberating the hand of God to do what He cannot do unless we will correspond. "Thy Will be done," our obstinate little wills bent into harmony with His Will.—Bishop Gore.

Repentance is the change of our attitude towards God from an attitude of indifference, and it may be opposition, to the will and purposes of God, to one of harmony with that will and purpose. So we become fellow-workers together with Him—a position of honour indeed—and it becomes possible for the Righteousness of God to be manifested in us who walk not after the Flesh but after the Spirit.

Victory in itself would not necessarily be a blessing, unless we learn the lessons which God is teaching us, and we listen to the call to repent, victory will mean that we are stronger than the strong, and that our material resources are greater—it will be the victory of the stronger of two who are of the same kind—a triumph of might and not of right—of the greater of material forces. So our pride would be fed, and there would be no moral gain. If we repent and honestly and humbly put ourselves on the side of right, being ready for the sacrifice that calls for, then victory will be a blessing. Without that it might easily be a curse.

The Call to Repentance.

In his address to Provincial Synod, the greater part which was printed in the last number of the Carpentarian, the Archbishop of Brisbane, the metropolitan of our own Province of Queensland, made a very earnest and impassioned appeal to the Church to consider the Call to Repentance which is sounding in our ears at the present time. Those who were present at the session of Provincial Synod at Rockhampton had no doubt at all that the really important business was the resolution moved in stirring words by the Bishop of Rockhampton, and seconded by Mr. Weatherall, one of the Brisbane representatives, accepting the call voiced by the Archbishop, and pledging the members of Synod to do their utmost in making the call a reality. In his address at the opening of General Synod in Sydney, the Primate sounded the same call, emphasising the duty of the Church to interpret the message of the time, which God has for those who will listen. The question the Church has to consider is whether she will be true to her calling, whether she will be a faithful witness, a true prophet, and deliver the message which she believes God has for us in these days. It is a message for the world at large, it is as unpalatable a message now as it ever has been, it is the primary message of the Church, the essential pre-requisite for all real advance in spiritual life. "Repent ye." It is the message delivered by Prophets and Psalmists of old, by the Baptist, by our Blessed Lord, by the Apostles. It is the message the Church has to deliver at all times, and with special emphasis at this time. But it must be a penitent Church that sounds the call to repentance, and every professing Christian is bound to consider how he needs to repent, and to learn the lessons which these days are teaching us.

And surely the terrible things we read of must make us think, and think seriously. How has it been possible there should have been this terrible upheaval of forces absolutely contrary to all we meant by civilization? We witness the bankruptcy of civilization which has banished Christian ethics, the absolute failure of any human powers to ennoble the race, or even to restrain evil passions, no matter how effective they may be materially, when these powers are divorced from a hearty acceptance of, and an honest attempt to act upon, the principles of Christianity. Let us be sure of one thing: the war and all the misery it has caused, and all the degradation of human nature it has evidenced, is due to the sin of man. It is sometimes loosely said, it is the way in which God is punishing the world for the sin of the world, and in a sense that is true, but not in the sense that God has specially intervened and has directly sent this terrible state of things by way of punishment, as we ordinarily use the word.

In the moral world, as surely as in the physical world, causes produce effects. It is so that God has ordered our human nature, in that way He works, and, as all things come from Him, so in a sense it is true of this war. God calls us into co-operation with Himself; He works through us, but not as mechanical but as moral agents; and our partnership is so real that we have no claim that God shall interfere to prevent the effects of our actions, to change the end to which the path we have chosen to follow trends. God has given us powers and faculties, and opportunities, God has taught us, He has warned us, what will be the consequences of certain lines of action. The responsibility of the choice rests upon us.

If we consider the days that were, the days that seem now so far away, but which even the young men and the young women amongst us have known, What were the ideals of life, what were the opportunities God gave us, and what was the use we made of them? Can we say the ideals were Christian, did we make such use of our opportunities as was in accordance with the will of God, with the fulfilment of His purpose?

There was great, wonderful progress made in the knowledge of nature, and in the harnessing of the powers of nature to carry out the will of man; there was advance in everything that tended to make life—the lower sensual life of the body—easy and luxurious; there was enormous increase in wealth, and to what purpose was it put? Man conquered nature, and bent her powers to do his will, man accumulated knowledge and power and wealth only that it might minister to his pride, only that it might be used for his own selfish purposes; selfish ease and luxury with their children, vice of every degraded form, were rampant. God was neglected, His claims ignored, His will and purpose forgotten. There was rampant materialism, there was blatant superstition. There was awful poverty side by side with enormous wealth.

Selfish pleasure, material comfort, accumulation of wealth, who can deny that these were the ideals sought in the days before the war. Christian ideals and Christian morals were despised—all that reveals the Incarnate Son of God as the Son of Man was despised and rejected. Humility, love, self-sacrifice, these were of no account in an age of haste to get rich, and to enjoy the pleasures money could give. Drunkenness, gambling, immorality, gluttony, wicked waste on mere sensual pleasure were not only sins in themselves, but were symptoms of the attitude of mind which worshipped the material and sensual and refused homage to the spiritual. And the neglect of duty to God was equally a symptom of rejection of His claims. When we consider the enormous wealth and power and the wonderful opportunities open to the Christian nations during the last fifty years, it is almost impossible not to believe that the Gospel might well have been preached to all nations in that time, had the Christian nations been sufficiently in earnest, and in accord with the will of God, who will have all men to be saved and to come to the knowledge of the truth; and how miserable was the offering made for the fulfilment of the purpose for which Christ died.

Now it is important for us to remember that while drunkenness and gambling, and impurity, and such like are terrible sins, they are also symptoms of a disease, and we have to be careful to remember that it is the deeper cause which we have to remove, Sin, the selfishness which rejects God, and His claim upon us. It is the attitude of mind and soul towards God that must be changed—there must be repentance. There is a very real danger that in denouncing and in fighting against particular sins, we forget sin itself in which we all share. Satan will use the denunciation of special, gross sins to soothe our consciences to sleep, or to awaken spiritual pride, to make me fancy that because this or that particular gross sin is not on my conscience there is no call for me to repent.

The War has come as the result of the worship of material things, of might, of selfishness; these have been rampant, spiritual things have been ignored, their claim denied, and because the lower has not been kept in subjection to the higher, there has been rebellion, and God has allowed the causes to work themselves out, and to appear before our eyes in all their hideous reality. Here is the result of human pride and self-will, of the rejection of the restraints of Christian teaching, of man divorced from God. The tree is known by its fruits, and perhaps only so could it be known. And each and every one of us who has failed in any degree in his own life to emphasise and to manifest the claims of God is in so far responsible for all that is happening in the world, and herein lies the call to repentance, a call that comes to everybody, but it comes with special force, and in the first place to those who profess belief in the claims which God has over man. It is not only because of the solidarity of the race, which means that all which individuals do affects the whole, but also because we have by our own sins strengthened the force of evil, and by our neglect of what is right, and true, and God-like, we have weakened the force of good. In so far as we have not been on the side of our Lord, we have been against Him. We need very seriously to consider our responsibility.

It is no doubt as true as anything ever has been in this world of human action, that our hands are clean in all that directly caused the War. We can humbly say that we are fighting for liberty and honour, for righteousness; but apart from the direct responsibility, and apart from our share in creating the atmosphere which made the upheaval possible, can we say that our consciences are altogether clear in the indirect causes which brought about the War? In the judgment that will be passed by history, in the eyes of God, can we deny all responsibility? It is fairly safe to say that the War would not have come at this time had the authorities in Germany been perfectly certain that we should step in to keep our pledged word to Belgium. Everything that has come to light so far seems to shew that our enemies absolutely and entirely misjudged other people; they shewed an utter incapability of estimating how a line of action would affect the opinion and the action of others. Doubtless, they were so obsessed with their own ideas that they judged others by themselves, and they were unable to see things from any point of view but their own. For this they are responsible, and they must take the consequences. But can we say that we are free from the responsibility of giving the German authorities reason, or at least excuse, for thinking we would not risk all for honour and truth and liberty? Have we shewn such care for these things in our political, in our commerce, in our social and economic life, as would give our enemy no excuse for thinking we would fail when the test came? Has our witness been as clear and as unmistakable as it should have been? In so far as it has not been clear and unmistakable we are responsible for the opinion held of us. Let us remember it was not a German but a very patriotic Briton who was so impressed with our worship of pleasure and excitement, our neglect of what is serious and vital, that he was moved to write of "flannelled fools" and "muddled oafs" as typical of our attitude to life. He was wrong perhaps in castigating the man at the wickets and the man at the goal rather than the crowds whose only idea of sport was to pander to their own excitement by gambling on sport and so kill sport. He was wrong, as it seems, in his estimate of national character, but if he and others could be wrong, had the diplomats of Germany no excuse for being wrong, and were we not responsible for their mistake?

We are all of us in some degree responsible for the sufferings and the crimes of these days, and these things are a call to us to consider whither we are wending. They are the voice of God bidding us know the tree by its fruits. Let us thank God that, on the one hand, what moves us most to righteous indignation are acts of inhuman barbarism and the murder of children, for which there is no excuse in the way of lawless excitement and the madness engendered by war; and on the other hand what touches our hearts, and compels our admiration, forces us with tears to bow down and do reverence, is not the example of marvellous organisation, the wonderful efficiency of a fighting machine, the marvellous results of applied science—not these things, but it is the acts of heroism and of self-sacrifice, examples of which are so numerous in these days. These things—indignation at barbarity, worship of self-sacrifice—mean that our hearts are capable of listening to the voice of God calling us to His side. Self-sacrifice, which is the appeal of the Cross of Calvary, still appeals. Let us thank God for this in no spirit of Pharasaic self-satisfaction, but in humble gratitude that we are still able if we are willing to hear the call.

We have so much to answer for that there is surely no room for self-satisfaction and self-righteousness, and if we are honest and sincere no danger of them. Surely we know that the Psalmist speaks the truth: "Except the Lord build the house, their labour is but lost that build it. Except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain." Surely we are learning to estimate at their true value in these days. Surely we know the answer to our Lord's question, "What doth it profit a man if he gain the world, and lose his own soul? What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

There was a call that came to all Christians on December 11th of last year to think on these things, a day of penitence and prayer, but let us remember that while such a day may be a beginning, it cannot be the end. Repentance must be long and continuous. It means constant and continuous effort to get and to remain on the side of God, to so train ourselves that our wills are in harmony with His will, that we are in correspondence with God, and so are fitted to do His will, to be fellow workers together with the Holy Spirit, Himself.

We repent not that we may secure victory, we may humbly feel certain and sure that victory will be ours, we repent not that we may come as cravens before the throne of God to avert punishment, we repent that we may be worthy to be the agents of God in the work He has for us to do, and so may do His Will, working in harmony with His purpose.

There has been great talk about the mobilization of spiritual forces, which means, I suppose, that something definite be done in the way of fasting, and prayer, and penitence by all of us, that we may be able to get definitely on the side of God, that we may truly repent. I would suggest these things for us to do:—

I. Keep the Fast of the Church more strictly, and especially the weekly fast on Friday; and see if there is not something in our lives we can deny ourselves at this time.

II. Try to know better the meaning of self-sacrifice as manifested in the Incarnation, the life and the death of our Lord. Read over again and again the story of the Passion in the Gospels, a portion every day. Get a little quiet time to do this. By that let us measure our lives.

III. Kneel down and say the 51st Psalm every day as an act of penitence, as a prayer for penitence.

IV. Make your Communion more frequently, and with special prayer that, through penitence, God will bring us nearer to Himself.

All Souls', Quetta Memorial Church.

On Sunday, November 28th, the Bishop of the Diocese dedicated two windows which have been placed in the Cathedral—one as a memorial to the late Deaconess Buchanan, the other as a memorial to Mr and Mrs Archer, who were drowned in the "Quetta."

The Deaconess Buchanan window is part of a memorial to one whose praise is in the Churches; and the influence of whose life and example it is impossible for anyone fully to appreciate. The window contains one figure which is said by those who knew the Deaconess to be a very good likeness of her. She carries a basket of fruit, fitly representing her life of charity and helpfulness. In the halo is the name of St. Catherine of Genoa. Bishop White used to say that there was a good deal of similarity between the medieval and the modern saint, not least in the independence of character which enabled both to work in ways not according to the conventionalities of their times.

The Archer memorial window was placed in the Cathedral by the senior members of the staff of the Bank of New South Wales. Mr. Archer was an inspector on the staff of that bank, and it speaks volumes for the respect and the affection he inspired that after 25 years his memory should still be fresh in the hearts of those who worked with him.

The Sub-Dean was the preacher at the dedication, and he preached on the offering made by the woman who anointed the feet of our Lord in the house of Simon the Leper.

There was a sale of work in connection with the Cathedral Parish on St. Andrew's Day. This is an annual event, and is the way in which the Parish raises part of the sum for Foreign Missions for which it is responsible.

Hymn.

[Written for the Dedication of Community Chapel of the Society of the Sacred Advent, Brisbane, by the Bishop of Carpentaria (Rt. Rev. Gilbert White, D.D.), now Bishop of Willochra, S.A.]

In hope and hesitation
Our humble seed was sown,
To-day to glad completion
The work of faith has grown;
With hymns and psalms exulting
Our thankful sisters meet,
Within His sacred precincts
Their Holy Lord to greet.
To-day all care forgotten,
We lift our hearts and sing
To Thee this house presenting
Our Saviour and our King.

Here may the Heavenly Father
With tender love divine,
On us His kneeling children
In benediction shine;
To-day we seek His temple
Our one true resting place,
Without the world's vain clamour
Within His peace and grace.
To-day all care forgotten,
We lift our hearts and sing
To thee this house presenting
Our Saviour and our King.

Within, the Heavenly Bridegroom,
His sacred Feast doth spread,
And here to faithful virgins
He gives the Living Bread;
Our weary soul refreshes
With that most Holy Tide,
Which once for us He lavished
From out His wounded Side.
To-day all care forgotten,
We lift our hearts and sing
To Thee this house presenting
Our Saviour and our King.

Here shall the Holy Spirit
In meditation's hour,
On those who pray and ponder
Descend in sevenfold power;
Correct with Holy visions
Our self-will and our pride,
And into strength and wisdom
Our fainting spirits guide.
To-day all care forgotten,
We lift our hearts and sing
To Thee this house presenting
Our Saviour and our King.

O Holy Blessed Godhead
Accept our gifts, our life,
And shield us from the menace
Of this world's care and strife;
Here may the voice of children
Rise upward more and more,
As they grow ever nearer
The God whom they adore.
To-day all care forgotten,
We lift our hearts and sing
To Thee this house presenting
Our Saviour and our King.

Torres Straits Mission.

I was able to visit most of the Islands in Torres Straits where the Mission is at work during the month of November. Mr Done was to meet me with the "Dogai" on Monday, November 8th, but winds did not suit, and he did not arrive at St. Paul's, Moa, until the 9th. We got away about mid-day with a fair breeze and anchored off a small island for the night, getting to Coconut Island the next day. Here there is a native teacher working under Mr Done's direction, and he has done something in the way of getting the people familiar with the service. Yorke Island was reached the next day, and here again we were able to have Evensong, and the people could join in the service to a great extent. A quick run got us to Darnley Island early in the afternoon on the Friday. This, next to Murray, is the Island with most people on it, and there was a fine congregation in the evening. We were anxious to get to Murray Island for Sunday, and so we took advantage of a good moon and got a few miles on our way during the night. It was well we did so as there was little wind on the Saturday, and we managed to get into the anchorage after dark. We went ashore and arranged about services for the Sunday, and on that day we had a busy time: Ante-Communion and Sermon at 7.30 a.m.; Mattins, 10.30 a.m.; Children's Service, 3.30 p.m.; Evensong, 7.30 p.m., besides a meeting of the churchwardens and interviews with a couple of men who are under discipline. I preached twice and Done twice. Here there were large congregations at all the services, and people joined very heartily in the responses. There is a native teacher here, Poi, who is very much in earnest, and there are two aborigines who were trained at Yarrabah, and who married Murray Island men. These two women have been able to explain the Church services to Poi, and to teach him some A. & M. hymns, and Poi has taught the people.

We left Murray early on the Monday morning, hoping we might get to Yam Island that night, but it is a long run and we had little wind that day and the next day, so we did not pass Yam Island till Wednesday, November 17th, and as it had been arranged that we should meet Mr. F. Walker at Mabuia on the 16th, we could not stop at Yam Island. We were already a day late.

We got to Mabuia early in the afternoon of Wednesday, November 17th, and found the Papuan Industries launch, the "Goodwill," very gaily decorated with bunting in honour of our arrival. At none of the places we had visited did the people know we were coming, so no preparations were made to welcome us—except at St. Paul's, Moa. But from now on we had a sort of triumphal progress, and we were right royally received by the people and presented with food and other gifts. Mr. Walker had nearly decided to give us up, and had made up his mind at mid-day that if we were not sighted after dinner that they should go to look for us for a few hours, and if we were not to be seen from the masthead, they would go to Badu and wait for us there. The "Goodwill" had arrived from Thursday Island on the Tuesday, and had brought Mrs. Newton and Miss Wilkinson from the Island. Mr. Walker had called at St. Paul's, Moa, and had picked up Mr. and Mrs. Luscombe there, to bring on to Mabuia.

The people of Mabuia were expecting us by the "Goodwill," and when she came in they were ready to welcome us, but the welcome had to be postponed! However, they were ready the next day, and right royal the welcome was. There is a new Church in course of erection here, and it will be a fine building when it is finished. It is here that Mr. Done intends to build his house and to make his head quarters. Next day we all went by the "Goodwill" to Badu, where we spent two nights as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Walker. We were able to visit Badu, and have services, and on the Friday to go across the strait between Badu and Moa, and visit the small settlement of Adam on the Island of Moa.

And then on Saturday we separated. Mr. Done went by the "Dogai" back to Mabuia for the Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Luscombe to St. Paul's by the "Banzai," and we came to Thursday Island by the "Goodwill," Mr. Walker kindly bringing us home. Visits were made to 7 out of the 12 islands, services were held at each place, and the people interviewed.

Arrangements were made for Mr. Done to begin classes for Confirmation at Mabuia, and Mr. Luscombe will take the classes at Badu and at Adam. He can ride across from St. Paul's to Adam, a distance of about 10 miles, and then he can get across to Badu by dinghy from Adam, and it is proposed to do the work at Badu and Adam in this way. It will save delays in the North-west Season, and will enable Mr. Luscombe to keep in touch with all three places. We hope to have the first Confirmations early in the year.

A very great deal has already been done in the Islands, and Mr. Done is to be congratulated on his work, and the people on their response. It was very striking to see how the people had become familiar with the Church service, and had given up talking in Church before and after service, and how nearly all knelt for the prayers. Mr. Done has done a great deal, but his visits for a few days at the Islands could not have had such result if the people had not been ready and willing to learn while he was away. The teachers in charge of the Government Schools have done much to help the people, and some of the people themselves have been able to get prayer books and to learn what Mr. Done shewed them when he visited them.

We owe a real debt of gratitude to Mr. and Mrs. Walker for their kindness and help.

Literature for the Soldiers.

There is a great opportunity for supplying the soldiers with some decent reading matter—and it is certain they will be glad of such, and it will appeal to them. It is a duty we owe to them to supply them with such reading matter. How can we do it? We do not want to multiply organizations. Send a contribution to "Good Samaritan," c/o The Church Standard, Daking House, Rawson Place, Sydney.

St. Paul's, Moa.

The Bishop visited this Mission in November. He arrived by the "Banzai" on Saturday, November 6th, and received such a welcome as only the people of Moa can provide. There was an avenue of palms from the landing to the Mission House, and the house itself had been decorated in honour of the visit with arches of coconut palm and with flags and with various other decorations. The people assembled on the beach, and before the dinghy came to the shore, they began a song of welcome in the native language, and this they continued while they led the Bishop and Mr. Luscombe up the avenue of palms to the Mission House, where Mrs. Luscombe was waiting to receive the Bishop. When all those present had been introduced the Bishop spoke a few words of thanks; prayers were said and he gave the blessing. The Bishop preached at evensong on the Saturday night, celebrated the Holy Communion on Sunday morning, preached at mattins and at the children's service in the afternoon, and also at evensong on the Monday night. He examined the school on the Monday, and was none the less acceptable to the children as a visitor for asking that they might have shorter hours in school on Monday and Tuesday while he was there.

Notes.

The Rev. W. A. Fletcher has resigned the Parish of Darwin and will be leaving for the South early in January. Mr. Fletcher has done good work, and we are sorry to lose him from the Diocese. He very kindly agreed to remain on a little longer so that the parish should not be vacant.

The Rev. Cyril Massey, curate of St. Luke's, Toowoomba, in the Diocese of Brisbane, has been appointed Rector of Darwin. Mr. Massey was trained at St. Francis' College, Nundah, for work in the Diocese of Carpentaria. He was ordained Deacon in 1913, and Priest in 1914, by the Archbishop of Brisbane.

The Rev. E. J. Nash, Sub-Dean of the Cathedral, and Administrator of the Diocese, returned to Thursday Island with the Bishop and Mrs. Newton by the "Mataram" on Sunday, Oct. 10.

The Rev. L. Ayscough resigned the Parish of Cooktown and left the Diocese at the end of October, 1915. His many friends will be sorry to hear that Mrs. Ayscough had been very ill, and this was the reason for the departure at short notice of the Rector and Mrs. Ayscough from Cooktown.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson arrived in Cooktown in the middle of November to act as locum tenens for a short time. Mr. Wilkinson represented the Diocese at the Consecration of the Bishop, at Provincial Synod, and at General Synod. It was rather unfair that he should have to cut his visit South short, but there was no one else available to take charge of Cooktown for the time being.

The Rev. James Tweedie has been appointed Rector of Cooktown, but he will not be able to leave the Diocese of Rockhampton till the end of March. Mr. Tweedie is well known in the Diocese of Carpentaria, and we are glad to welcome him amongst us again.

Mr I. Skelton, who entered St. Francis' College, Nundah, as a student to be prepared for ordination with a view to work in the Diocese of Carpentaria, and who had spent six terms in College, has enlisted. The late Bishop gave his consent to this.

The Rev. J. Parker was ordained Priest at the Advent Ordination in Brisbane. Mr Parker will be ready to take up work in the Diocese of Carpentaria when he is called upon to do so, but the Bishop hopes to be able to allow him to remain some time longer in the Diocese of Brisbane for further experience.

Mr. Cole, who worked so long and so faithfully at Yarrabah, and at St. Paul's, Moa, was ordained Deacon at the Advent ordination, 1915, by the Archbishop of Brisbane. Mr. Cole will remain in the Diocese of Brisbane for some time before returning to work in the Diocese of Carpentaria.

S.P.G.

"The Mission Field" is the monthly paper of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, and the August number is especially interesting to us in the Diocese of Carpentaria, because it contains an account of the visit which the late Bishop of the Diocese paid to the Island in May last, accompanied by the Sub-Dean and the General Secretary of the Australian Board of Missions. The account has also been published in the "A.B.M. Review" and in the "Church Standard." The late Bishop applied to S.P.G. for help to carry on the work of the Church in the Torres Straits Islands; but the Secretary has written to say they cannot make any new grants. The Society has renewed all the old grants, of which one is for the Diocese of Carpentaria, although there is a prospect of the income of the Society being reduced by £14,000 in 1916. Naturally the Society is appealing for more and wider support; and seeing what a nursing mother she has been to the Missions of the Anglican Communion, surely she will not appeal in vain.

Just after the Committee of S.P.G. had decided to renew all grants for 1916 for existing work, a decision which was an act of faith and of love, the Secretary received an urgent request from the Bishop of Chota Nagpur in India for help—a request which could not be ignored, and which arose out of the decision of the Indian Government to intern the German Missionaries in the Diocese of Chota Nagpur. The following is a copy of the letter which Bishop Montgomery addressed to the Church newspapers in England in view of this appeal:

Sir,—I beg that you will permit me to put before the Church a matter of extreme urgency.

The Government of India has interned the German Missionaries in the Diocese of Chota Nagpur for the duration of the War. The Bishop of Chota Nagpur has wired for eight clergymen to help him carry on necessary work as required by the Government. There are hundreds of schools, dozens of Indian pastors, hundreds of catechists. The schools have to be maintained under the Government regulations, and the various living agents have to be paid and the buildings kept in order.

The Government also urge for an immediate answer as to the number of men available for such work. It is, I think, of vital importance that we should send clergymen to fill these posts. The future of course is quite unknown. It is simply for the duration of the War that we are asked to help. We have, we hope, obtained three clergymen who know the Diocese and are prepared to go back at once, but it is possible that others may be only too glad to put themselves at the disposal of the Church for this responsible work. S.P.G. is prepared to pay all expenses. There may be older men who know Hindi, and who could supervise the German Missions in the simple and obvious ways which I have pointed out.

The matter is of first importance. I shall be thankful to hear of any who will go, and as soon as possible.

H. H. MONTGOMERY (Bishop),
Secretary.

The sentence in that letter which should not pass unnoticed is "S.P.G. is prepared to pay all expenses." But S.P.G. cannot coin money. The Society can only use what we give her to use, and that simple statement, that readiness to shoulder responsibility, surely appeals to us. We in the Diocese of Carpentaria owe a good deal to S.P.G., and it may be that there are some who will be glad to help the Society to bear this burden by sending a special subscription. The Bishop will gladly forward any that are sent to him.

Mission Notes.

Some twenty Christians at Taupota, in Papua, decided to go to work for a year, so that they might be able to give £3 apiece to a fund for roofing the Church on the Mission Station. That means about 50 per cent of their earnings for the year.

The Christians at Boianai, in Papua, were considering how they could help the Church. They have no money, but they bring food to the Mission for sale, and they suggested that a portion of the price be deducted and put into a Savings Bank account for the Church.

Two Papuan Christians, Francis Tutuana and Robert Madouna, who have been on the Mission staff as teachers for some years, are being prepared for the diaconate by the Rev. P. C. Shaw at Taupota.

On St. Matthew's Day, 1915—the day on which the Bishop of Carpentaria was consecrated—after the celebration in the Cathedral at Dogura, when intercessions were offered for the Bishop and Diocese of Carpentaria, a large party went some five miles up the river into the mountains to a place called Gelana, for the dedication of a Church, which had been built by the people themselves so that they could have services on Sundays. For years outdoor services had been held, and a large number of the people have been baptized and many have been confirmed. These Christians came to Dogura to make their Communion.

Very encouraging news comes from the Forrest River Mission in West Australia. The new launch has arrived, and is a great comfort and convenience.

A determined move is being made to supply Yarrabah with some of the equipment which is needed if satisfactory work is to be done there. Of all the Missionary work for which the Australian Church is responsible, that at Yarrabah is the most difficult in many ways, and in some ways it is very disheartening. All the more credit is due to those who are determined to do everything to make the work a success, and they have a special claim on the Church for help and sympathy—the claim of those who are doing the most difficult piece of work.

We have to thank Yarrabah for very real help in the Torres Straits Mission. There are two women living on Murray Island—Mary Murray and Edie—who were trained at Yarrabah, and after they were married they settled on the island their husbands belong to. From these two girls the native teacher, Poi, on Murray Island, has learned a great deal about the services of the Church, and he has been able to teach his people, so that when the Bishop visited Murray Island in November last, many of the canticles were known, and hymns from the A. & M. Hymn Book were sung. It was possible to have nearly a full Church Service, because of what Yarrabah girls had done.

It is a deep and wonderful thing to think about, that God should have thought it worth while to make a being like me a free being, a free spirit, and so truly to lend out His power, and so truly to make me His fellow-worker, His administrator, as that if I fail in my trust, some corner, some department of God's work goes amiss, and God stands aloof, and watches, and allows it. The whole wide world has gone strangely amiss through the lawlessness of human will. But God tolerates it: that is the value God sets upon freedom. He tolerates it, but He appeals to us. God can save the world, but only through us. You have a work to do, and the way in which you have got to do your work is in a great measure by praying.—BISHOP OF OXFORD, from the Church Times.

The evil and the sorrow and the misery of the world constitute in themselves a call to man to repent, but they are not a reason for repentance, and the removal of them is not the object of repentance. The object of repentance is the manifestation of the glory of God, and the manifestation of the Righteousness of God in us. It is important to have a true ideal to strive after, a right goal to work for. It is true that one result of repentance—and an immediate result—will be the removal of evil; but that is immediate and temporal, and if that were the object, when it had been attained, there would be nothing more. When the glory of God is the object, we have still to strive for that when the more immediate temporal object has been attained.

The Torres Straits Mission.

FIRST CONFIRMATIONS IN THE ISLANDS.

A very important advance was made in the work of the Torres Straits Mission when the Bishop of the Diocese confirmed the first candidates of those Christians who have been handed over to the care of the Church by the L.M.S. It was an event in the history of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria; and it was only right and proper that there should be present some from Thursday Island at the Confirmations. The Bishop, with the Sub-Dean and Mrs. Nash, Mrs. Newton, Miss Wilkinson, Miss McKee, and Mrs. Luscombe, left Thursday Island in the launch "Wenona" on Monday, January 17th. The trip was not to take more than four days, as the Bishop had promised to speak at a recruiting meeting in Thursday Island on the following Thursday night—and in the North-West Season, winds are not to be depended upon—so we hired a launch; also, the Sub-Dean must be back for Sunday services; and last, but not least, it is doubtful whether so many would have ventured on the trip if it had to be made in a sailing vessel. We left Thursday Island about nine o'clock in the morning, and as we had a very high tide, we were able to make nearly a beeline for Badu as soon as we were through the passage. We had not to worry about reefs, we had a fair wind, the engine ran "sweetly," and so we were only three hours forty minutes doing the distance. We had made up our minds that we really could not burden Mr. Walker (of the Papuan Industries) with so many people as were in our party, and we had arranged to camp at the Mission House in the village, but Mr. Walker would listen to no excuse and no reasons, and we submitted to be made comfortable, and he submitted to have his house managed by other people for a day. It is to be hoped that Mr. Walker, and others, will realise that we had qualms of conscience.

On the Monday night there was a service in the Church, when the Bishop preached on the visit of our Lord to the Temple when He was twelve years old. His advice was wanted about the presentation of certain of the candidates, some of whom had been giving a little trouble by their disobedience of the councillor's orders, the councillors being a civil body whose duty it is to regulate certain matters of discipline in the village life. Even at the risk of magnifying what was a venial offence into a sin, it was felt that these young people—none had left school—should be taught that they must submit themselves to their pastors and masters, and so their confirmation was put off. There were other cases not quite so simple, and there were quite a number of older people who then, or on Tuesday morning, said they did not think they were ready, and so would wait till another occasion. There was not time to discuss this matter, and to find out what was really in the minds of these, and at least it showed a sense of responsibility which was good, even if they had failed to realize the important part of Confirmation—the gift of the Holy Spirit—and that their reason, if a genuine one, was the best proof they could give that they ought not to withdraw. There will be other opportunities for them. So the class was reduced from 82 to 58—32 of those confirmed being males and 26 females—nearly all married people. Several boys who had attended all the classes had gone in to Thursday Island to sign on for work and did not get back to Badu till after the Confirmation. The Sub-Dean acted as Bishop's Chaplain, and read the lesson. Mr Luscombe read the preface and presented the candidates.

On Tuesday afternoon we had good weather again, and ran with a fair wind to Mabuiag in two hours and ten minutes. Mr Luscombe joined the party at Badu.

The house belonging to the Wyben Pearling Company at Mabuiag was placed at our disposal by the manager, Mr Adams, and the ladies camped there for the night and were very comfortable. Mr Done had come out in the "Dogai" to meet us—and followed us in to the anchorage. Mr Luscombe camped on the "Dogai" with Mr Done, the Bishop and Mr Nash on the launch.

Mr Done has done wonders with the Church—or rather he and the people have. In November last there were the bare walls, with wall-plates and a few rafters up. Now the roof was on—lining and fibro-cement slates—the concrete floor was down, with the steps to the Altar, an Altar has been made, and some of the windows were in. The Church is really a very dignified building of fine proportions. It is hoped that the dedication will be about the end of July; meantime the building can be used, and we were thankful to have it for use at the Confirmation.

There was service that evening, when the Church was quite full and the singing wonderfully hearty. Mr Nash was very much struck with the singing of the Magnificat to the well-known chant by Barnby. Mr Done had taught the people the melody only, yet some of the men had made out for themselves the tenor part as written by Barnby with one slight variation of no consequence.

At the Confirmation on the Wednesday morning, the Sub-Dean again acted as Bishop's Chaplain and read the Lesson, and the candidates were presented by Mr Done. There were 75, 32 males and 43 females. All of those who had been attending the classes at Mabuiag were confirmed. Immediately after the Confirmation the Bishop licensed two of those confirmed as churchwardens.

We got away from Mabuiag soon after 1 p.m. and had a good run to St. Paul's, Moa, but now we had a head sea, with wind and tide against us, and the boat rolled a good deal. That did not prevent everyone enjoying a remarkably good stew that had been cooked at Mabuiag. It was eaten under difficulties certainly, and there was not much left when all were satisfied—but then appetites were good and spirits lively all through the trip.

At St. Paul's a boat met us having on board three of the men who just missed the Confirmation at Badu, and it was arranged that they should be confirmed at St. Paul's on the Thursday morning.

We left Mr and Mrs Luscombe at St. Paul's when the rest of us started on the run to Thursday Island on the Thursday morning. Heavy rain that morning was the only thing in the way of bad weather we experienced on the round trip, and though that delayed our starting from St. Paul's we had no rain on the way to Thursday Island, and we were home a little after four o'clock in the afternoon.

Looking back over the trip, one cannot but be thankful for the privilege of taking part in the services. The hearty way in which the people joined in the services, and the reverence of the congregations, speaks volumes for the work that has been done, and the influence that has been gained by the two priests who have been responsible for the work, and it also shews how the people themselves have responded. The people listened with rapt attention to the two addresses the Bishop gave at the Confirmations, while the silence and the quiet movements of the people made the services still more solemn. There is an advantage in bare feet, and in the absence of rustling dresses. It was a pity that so many of the Christians who were not to be confirmed stayed away from the Confirmation services. Quite likely they had an idea that they ought not to be present, that only those to be confirmed had any right to be interested; perhaps, too, they thought they ought to be present as candidates for the gift of the Holy Spirit, and their consciences made them feel they would not be comfortable if they were present when they had not accepted the opportunity of receiving the Gift.

Those who have been confirmed will surely receive the benefit of the Prayers of the Faithful that they may use the power they have received from God—and those who have yet to be prepared for Confirmation need our prayers.

After spending two Sundays at Mabuag to give the people their Communion, Mr Done went to Darnley Island to prepare another class for Confirmation. This was to be towards the end of March, after the Carpentarian has gone to press.

Visit to the Gulf.

In making arrangements for my first visit to the Gulf parishes and to the Georgetown district, in December of last year, I intended to travel by the "Francis Pritt" to Trubanaman, Mitchell River, and to go on by the same boat to Normanton, after a Confirmation at the Mission Station; but word came from the Chaplain that the candidates would not be ready at the end of November, so that part of the trip was cancelled, and I left Thursday Island by the s.s. "Musgrave" on Wednesday, December 8th. There was a large number of passengers, and the accommodation of the "Musgrave" is limited; however, I was given a share in a two-berth cabin, in which two other passengers had berths. The settee, with a share of the end of the bottom bunk, was my allowance. One of the other occupants of the cabin kindly offered me his berth, but it seemed to be the wiser course to take a rug and a pillow and sleep on deck. The cabin came in useful as a place to dress and undress in, and that was possible if every one was prepared to take turns. It would have meant confusion otherwise, and there must be order and arrangement when life is lived under such conditions! However, the trip was a pleasant one; we had calm weather and a smooth sea. By three o'clock on Friday afternoon the "Musgrave" was anchored off Karumba; the tender was soon alongside, and we got away for the run up the Norman River by a quarter-past four, arriving at Normanton about midnight.

Mr. Hall was waiting for me with his sulky and drove me to the Rectory. As I had been foolish enough to travel without a mosquito net, and the mosquitoes are peculiarly vicious and very plentiful at Normanton, and there was only one net at the Rectory, and stores were closed, some one had to be at the mercy of the mosquitoes. It should have been I, but though we argued the point, it ended in Mr. Hall devising a scheme which did not protect him.

Saturday, December 11th, was the day appointed by the various Churches and Denominations in Queensland as a general Day of Penitence and Prayer. I found that the Pastoral and letters about it had not reached Normanton when I arrived. I had sent them away some ten days before I left Thursday Island, and they were travelling via Cairns or Cloncurry. At all events they arrived after I did, and after December 11th. No arrangements had been made for services, so all we could do was for the Rector and the Bishop to have intercessions and prayers in the Church during the day.

On Sunday, December 12th, I celebrated the Holy Communion at 7.30 a.m., spoke to the children in Sunday School, preached at Mattins and at Evensong. Mr. Hall very wisely has arranged to have the Sunday School in the morning, and the children remain for Mattins, and so they are being taught that there is some other duty for them on Sundays besides attendance at Sunday School.

For Monday evening the good people of Normanton had arranged a social gathering as a welcome to me. On the platform in the Shire Hall were one of the churchwardens, Mr James Scott, Dr Taylor (a son of Canon Taylor, at one time Rector of St. Stephen's, Newtown, Sydney), and Mr See, the C.P.S., besides the Rector of Normanton, who was in the chair. People were kind and enthusiastic, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. Mr Clegg, the Stock Inspector, was very energetic in various ways in making the evening a success, while of course it was the ladies of the parish who had provided the refreshments. Mr Hall took me to visit the hospital and some of the parishioners, but there was not time to do much in this way.

At mid-day on Tuesday, December 14th, I left Normanton by train for Croydon—where I was met by the Rector, the Rev. H. R. Longmore, and one of the churchwardens, Mr Chandler, who took me to the rectory. On Wednesday I preached at Evensong, and on Thursday evening there was a social in the Masonic Hall, when the people of Croydon gave me a most hearty welcome to their town. The Rector, the wardens, and the members of the Parochial Council were on the platform, which had been nicely decorated. There were so many people present that extra seats had to be provided, and the wardens regretted they had not secured a larger hall. The meeting was wonderfully enthusiastic and the people kindness itself. We were the guests of the Masonic Lodge that night. On Friday, Mr Longmore drove me out to Golden Gate to visit some of the people there, and on other days he took me to visit the hospital and various Church families in Croydon.

On Sunday, December 19th, I assisted the Rector at the early service, celebrated and preached at 10 a.m. (Mr Longmore went to Golden Gate for Sunday School and Service in the morning), addressed the children in the afternoon, and preached at Evensong, when there was a large congregation. On the Saturday evening I was present at a meeting of the Parochial Council.

On Wednesday, December 22nd, I left Croydon by coach at 4 a.m. for Georgetown; we got to Crooked Creek at 9 p.m., where we spent the night, and leaving at 5 a.m., we arrived in Georgetown on the Thursday morning at 10. Here I was met by Mr Moran, the Warden and Police Magistrate, whose guest I was during my stay in the township. Arrangements had been made for a social in the Shire Hall that night, and at Georgetown as elsewhere the people were as kind as could be. We made a change in the programme at Georgetown. Word came during the evening that four soldiers were coming to Georgetown by special coach to bid their relations good-bye, so it was decided to keep the social going, and to turn the end of it into a welcome for the soldiers.

We waited till after midnight for the coach, and when it arrived the soldiers marched through the hall to the strains of Rule Britannia. Speeches were made, "God Save the King" was sung, and some of us got home to bed a little before two o'clock to-morrow morning! There has been no priest resident in the Georgetown district since the days when Mr Hassell did such good work in the district. For a few months a priest of the St. Barnabas' Brotherhood paid regular visits about every six weeks or so, but for some time there have been no services held in the district excepting that Mr Longmore paid a visit from Croydon in the latter half of 1915. I had arranged to spend Christmastide in Georgetown, to give people an opportunity of making their Christmas Communion. The Church was blown down in a cyclone at the end of 1914, and we had to arrange the Shire Hall for services. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion on Christmas morning, Mattins and Evensong; and on Sunday Mr Moran drove me out to Durham—some six miles—and there we had Mattins and Holy Communion; back to Georgetown for service for children in the afternoon and for Evensong. At the children's service I baptized the infant son of Mr Moran, and during my stay I baptized another child. On Monday morning a sick woman at the hospital was able to make her Communion. It was possible to visit most of the people in the township, and also to see some of the outside people who were in Georgetown for the Christmas Races. On the Tuesday night there was a very good recruiting meeting in the Shire Hall, and on Wednesday I left by a special coach for Forsyth. There had been very heavy rain overnight, and the Etheridge had come down a banker. The rain continued during Wednesday morning, and the coach did not leave Georgetown till 2 p.m. We did not get to Forsyth till half-past six, too late to arrange for services, and the hall was to be used for a recruiting meeting on the next night, at which I had promised to speak. All that I could do at Forsyth was to visit the people. I found a number of unbaptized children, and I promised to arrange with Mr Freer, one of the priests of the St. Barnabas' Brotherhood, to have a service, so that these children could be baptized. Mr Freer was to pay a visit to Georgetown at the end of January. (Unfortunately, after all arrangements had been made, Mr Freer could not take the service, as he was suffering from eye trouble on his return from Georgetown).

The uncertain weather, and the risk of being detained by flooded rivers, made it advisable for me to return via Cairns to Thursday Island, so I had to intrude into and spend one Sunday in the Diocese of North Queensland, the strange boundary line making it necessary for me, after travelling in a northerly direction for some distance away from North Queensland, to cross into North Queensland, in order to get the direct route to farther North than the North!! However, I was able to take services at Mareeba, and found some kind friends who did not treat me as an intruder. I arrived at Thursday Island by the "Montoro," on January 9th, 1916.

Everything was depressing at the time of my visit—except the interest in, and the work done for, the Church. These things were inspiring. With a little help from Diocesan funds, the parishes of Normanton and Croydon manage to pay their way, in spite of drought and depression, and they do so because these are people who realise their duty and endeavour to do it. But, most of all, I was struck by the faithful work of Miss Platt, who has kept the Sunday School together at Georgetown during all the months there has been no clergyman, and the children reflect credit on their teacher, as I found out at the children's service. It is a pity that all the parents in Georgetown do not make use of this opportunity to have their children taught their religion.

Anzac Day.

FESTIVAL OF ST. MARK, APRIL 25TH.

When our troops landed on the Peninsula of Gallipoli, they did some things they never intended to do, and had no idea of doing. They made a new name for future generations of children to learn in their geography lessons, and they made a day for the people of Australia and New Zealand, and indeed the whole Empire, a day on which they may rightly be proud for the great things that have been done. The place where the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps landed on Gallipoli will always be Anzac to us and to our children, and the day will be Anzac Day.

Very soon we must celebrate the first anniversary of the landing. For many it will come with sad reminders of those who a year ago were full of life, and hope, and the joy of living, and on that day laid down their lives for truth, and honour, and liberty. Martyrs indeed, as St. Mark was, for a holy cause. These will be proudly sorrowful. There are others who have come back maimed or sick, for whom we have to care always. There are others who have been fighting for months, and by the good hand of our God are still able to fight. For all of us it will be a day brimming over with lessons of inspiration, of enthusiasm, of encouragement, a day to be fitly celebrated. A day to think over the heavy responsibility that rests upon us to make ourselves and our country worthy of the sacrifice that has been offered for us. There are other seemingly impossible things to be done in this world of ours, and the courage, and the self-sacrifice, and the faith in their cause and in themselves, which enabled the soldiers to do the impossible at that historic landing, will enable us to do the apparently impossible in making our civilisation worthy of those who dared, and died, and did.

April 25th is the day when we came of age and took our place—thank God it was worthily taken—among the nations of the world. From henceforth we must have a wider outlook, a more serious conception of our place and our duty, and a ready will to sacrifice ourselves in filling that place and in doing that duty.

We must celebrate that day, and we must do so in a worthy manner, and the Church must do her part in the celebrating of it. It would of course be altogether unworthy of those who died and of what they did, if the day were given over to junketing, to vain words and boasting. From the very first the Church must claim that the day shall be a holy day, when she calls her people to assemble and meet together to render thanks to God for the great blessing He gave us in men of our race with hearts and wills ready to sacrifice themselves at the call of duty; to pray that we may be worthy of the sacrifice that has been offered; that they who died and we with them may be perfected and fitted to take our place in the eternal kingdom of righteousness; to pray that we and those who come after us may be strengthened by the Holy Spirit, inspired to do our duty in that state of life in which it shall please God to call us, even if that be only something very commonplace and humdrum, when it is hard to feel any enthusiasm or the inspiration that makes self-sacrifice less hard. We will remember those who have died, and those who sorrow for them before the altar, we will then especially thank God and seek for courage to go forward. And they who mourn will be comforted by the thought that the Church values and remembers those whom God takes from earth as well as those who remain. There will no doubt be other services during the day, but at least there will be a celebration of the Holy Communion in every Church as an act of praise to God, an act of thanksgiving, and of intercession for those who died on Anzac Day and during the months that followed while our men suffered and fought and died on Gallipoli.

For this year—God grant it may be for this year only—Anzac Day will sound a call to those who from any cause have not yet volunteered, a call which surely no one can refuse to hear, a call to help in the triumph of a holy cause.

But Only Thou . . .

V. Give peace in our time, O Lord.
R. Because there is none other that fighteth for us, but only Thou, O Lord.
Book of Common Prayer.

But only Thou, O Lord; none else can speak it
That blessed word of peace, but only Thou
Through all the world with wistful longing seek it,
But seek in vain, because they know not how.
The mighty armaments of man's contriving
Amid their thunders wait for Thine award
For none can give an end to all the striving
But only Thou, O Lord.

But only Thou, O Lord; our human sinning
Has made the dread catastrophe to be;
And since there never can be any winning
Worthy the cost, except it come from Thee;
Therefore we turn to Thee, the All-forgiving,
And crave the peace of Thy absolving word,
For none can pardon all our guilty living
But only Thou, O Lord.

But only Thou, O Lord; we need no others
But Thee, Whose love transcends all bounds of space;
To be the Guardian of the sons and brothers
Whom we commit to Thy sufficient grace.
Thy Call they answered, prompt and free and knightly,
These dearest whom our love can scarce afford
And none can guard so great a treasure rightly
But only Thou, O Lord.

But only Thou, O Lord; our hearts are stricken,
Heavy with grief, sore with a great amaze;
No other Comforter can ever quicken
Those hearts to hope again in hopeless days;
No other 'mid the storms of wild surmisings
And surging doubts can bring us faith restored,
Can whisper "Peace," and calm our hearts'
uprisings,
But only Thou, O Lord.

Mission Notes.

There were 210 communicants when the additions to the Church at Vurawara were dedicated.

At Christmas time last year a number of old people in the districts round Taupota, in the Diocese of New Guinea, brought their charms to the Priest-in-Charge of the district, the Rev. P. C. Shaw, to be burnt publicly. The people at the same time said they intended to give up the use of enchantments. Nearly all the old people in New Guinea practised sorcery of one kind or another, some of them being held in great dread by the people. When such an one was known to be going to a feast, enquiries would be made—"Has he his bag with him?" In the bag he carried the dreaded implements of his trade.

The Roper River Mission had a trying time during the dry season last year. Their crops failed. The people were never short of provisions, but much of their field work was lost—and then there was a big flood which has done damage to the extent of £500. Fortunately no lives were lost.

"He that tarrieth by the stuff."

It was settled, after the expedition against the Amalekites, that they who were not able to take part in the expedition should share in the division of booty with those who had been on active service. The precedent was established then, and it became the regular rule of warfare that they who tarry by the stuff should share equally in the booty with those on active service. And after all it was only fair that it should be so. They who tarry by the stuff have their duty to do, and their part lacks much of what makes active service more inviting. There is little in the way of excitement, there is nothing to arouse enthusiasm, and yet the stuff must be guarded, it will be needed by those who come back from the battle, by the women and the children, by the generations to come, by those for whom those in the front are fighting.

In these days there will be no booty to be shared out such as there was in the olden days, no spoils of war to be divided by the victors, and we may well hope that there shall be nothing of the kind at all in any material sense. Yet we who cannot go, we who are too old, or whom the doctors will not pass, or who have some other duty even higher than that of dying for truth and righteousness, the women and the children, we are to share in the results of victory, in the liberty that will be assured for us and for those who come after us. But it is as well for us to remind ourselves that there is a duty laid upon us who tarry by the stuff, and that is the duty of guarding and caring for it. We dare not by slackness or carelessness let that be lost or destroyed which others are fighting to save, and which they and others will need when the war is over, and they return. The stuff we believe is worth fighting for, worth dying for, and if so it is worth guarding and caring for. It is our material wealth and sources of wealth, and it is a civilization sanctified by truth and righteousness, by moral and spiritual ideas and ideals. This is the stuff we are left to guard.

There is a solemn duty for us who tarry by the stuff to see that there is no waste of the material wealth, that we guard very jealously the wealth and the sources of wealth which are theirs and ours. We have to share in the sacrifice by practising economy in every way, by denying ourselves, by seeing to it that there is no waste of any kind. If we can do no more than tarry by the stuff, let us be faithful guardians of it.

Still more is it a solemn duty and a heavy responsibility that is ours to see to it that the civilization for which the best blood of our race is being shed, is a civilization worthy of the cost at which it is being preserved. The war is a war of ideas and of ideals—it is that which makes it of supreme importance, it is that which justifies us in calling it a Holy War. Our soldiers go to fight for, and it may be to die, in the defence of a civilization that is worthy of the name, which treats such ideas as truth and honour, and righteousness and liberty as essentials, they fight for the triumph of the spiritual and the moral over the material and non-moral, and we who tarry by the stuff have to see to it that our civilization is indeed of this nature. In so far as it is not, we have to make it so.

Can we honestly say it has been such; can we honestly say that spiritual and moral ideas have been allowed in the past their proper place and their due influence in politics, in economics, in industry, in our social life? We have not, it may be, consciously repudiated spiritual truths, we have not deliberately thrown them overboard, but we have rendered little more than lip service, we have given them what is little more than a formal recognition, we have not allowed them the influence they should have measuring their value by the price we think worth paying to preserve them, still less by the price that God Himself was ready to pay that they might be supreme in the lives of men. As a matter of simple honesty we are bound to render these truths the homage of really believing them, allowing them to influence our lives.

It is just because these spiritual truths are to be realities in our lives, because they and their influence is part of the stuff we are to tarry by, that is why priests ought to remain at their posts in these days unless they go to the front as Chaplains. It is of first rate importance that people should hear the call that comes from God in these days, that the children in our schools should be taught those truths which are of supreme importance.

There is a form of munition making not less important than shells, and the spiritual and the moral is the stuff that the Clergy are to tarry by. Apart altogether from any question of Canon law, the fact that there is something of supreme importance for the Clergy to tarry by is reason sufficient for the Bishops to refuse leave for priests to enlist. Of course there will be some people to sneer at any such argument, those who believe only in heaviest armaments and biggest battalions, into whose philosophy the idea of spiritual and moral forces does not find a place. The answer and the only answer the Clergy can give to such a sneer is such self-sacrificing devotion to their duty, to the work of intercession, of comforting the bereaved, of teaching old and young as will make them feel that there are other forms of self-sacrifice—it may be other ways of dying for an ideal—than enlisting in the fighting line.

In some ways there is a call to us who tarry by the stuff for more self-sacrifice and for more self-denial than even our soldiers are shewing, a call for the present, a call that will sound through the future, when the world has to be re-constructed, after truth and righteousness have proved victorious. It is harder to live up to an ideal than to die for one. There are no processions and marches—no bands playing, no outward show to help and encourage us, in the hum-drum daily duty of realising an ideal in actual life. We have to make, by the help of the Holy Spirit, our civilisation, in every department of it, more really Christian than it ever has been, that they who come back, be they maimed or be they whole, may know that we have not tarried indifferently by the stuff, and that they who have died may not have died in vain.

Our civilisation is stained by the blood of those who have followed Him who died that the civilisation might be possible. Reverently we may say His blood and theirs are on it; and because that is so, the appeal is insistent for us to reverence that civilisation which was worthy of such sacrifices being made for it.

Sirs, I charge you keep it holy,
Keep it as a sacred thing,
For the stain ye see upon it
Is the life-blood of your King.

In Memoriam.

ROBERT CHRISTISON.

Robert Christison, of Lammermoor, has done his work. His aim, he would say simply, was to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before. Queensland knows how well he worked!

Robert Christison was the son of the Rev. Alexander Christison, of Foulden, Berwickshire, and nephew of Sir Robert Christison, first baronet. He landed in Victoria as a boy of 15 while the Ballarat and Bendigo gold rushes were on, and into the adventurous times so faithfully recorded by Rolf Bolderwood.

It was in 1863 he came to Queensland, swam his horse ashore at Bowen, and explored west along the 21st degree of south latitude. From then always Queensland was his belief. He believed it to be the finest pastoral country in the world, and demonstrated his belief by taking up 2000 square miles—the property he called Lammermoor, after the hills of his birth-place. He believed in the Blacks, and, while befriending them, made them into first-rate shepherds and stockmen. And greatly he believed in Queensland's future. With the long sight of explorer and cattle man, he combined the far sight of the statesman, and exercised himself with State problems, publishing pamphlets on them as they arose. His favourite subjects were: Possibilities of Development, Imperial Federation, The Better Understanding of the Colonies in Britain, and The Closer Union with the Mother Country. He was a model station owner. He sought the collaboration of practical science, and was fond of quoting Virgil's Georgics. He did much to raise the standard of stock-breeding, and was for years patron of and largest prize giver at the Townsville Show. Recently he founded a chair for Tropical Agriculture at the young University of Queensland. All his life he interested himself in good works. Among his many generous gifts was an endowment of £1200 to the Diocese of North Queensland and the sum of £500 to the Diocese of Carpentaria. He gave also to the Bush Brotherhood of North Queensland, and he built the Church at Prairie.

To describe Robert Christison is to dignify any of that group of pioneers. They were grand men—the adjective applies as to a view seen from the heights of their own wild bush scenery—big, primal, wildly simple. No more telling of themselves or their deeds than the silent bush. There are few of them left now. Their obituary is also the obituary of the Early Days. They pass. But they were men who did their work. It's the men who make the land who make the nation.

General Synod.

It is almost certain that there will be a meeting of General Synod in October. The meeting will be an important one, and we must all of us be praying that the representatives of every order may be guided by the Holy Spirit, that the Synod may be led to do all that is needed for the honour of God, and the carrying out of His Will and purpose. When the war is over and peace has been granted to us, there will be many serious questions to be faced, many difficult problems to be solved. It will be a new world, and we must see to it that moral and spiritual truths have their influence and their due effect in the shaping of it. The Church must do her duty; we must pray that she may be led to know it.

Diocesan Conference.

The Conference should meet this year, but the Bishop has decided to postpone the meeting till next year. He is very sorry to come to the conclusion that this is the wiser course, and he hopes it will not cause inconvenience and disappointment. The meeting of General Synod will mean that the Bishop must be away from the Diocese for some weeks, and it seems more important that he should visit as much of the Diocese as possible before the Conference meets. The Archbishop of Brisbane, the Metropolitan of the Province, hoped to be able to visit the Diocese this year, and had he been able to come the Conference would have been called together at the time of his visit; but he cannot come this year as General Synod meets in October, and the priests who are to arrange about the General Mission, to be held next year in the Province, will be in Queensland this year. These two things make it impossible for the Archbishop to come North. It is possible he may be able to visit us next year, and if so we must have the Conference at a time when he can be with us.

The General Mission.

Some time ago, arrangements were made with a view of having a General Mission in the Province, that is to say, in the Dioceses of Brisbane, Rockhampton, and North Queensland, sometime during this year, 1916, but the War made it impossible for the preliminary visits of Priests from England to be made last year, so the Mission had to be postponed for a year. All being well, it will be held in 1917.

The objects of a Mission is the conversion of souls, the bringing back of those who have grown careless, the building up of the faithful, and the deepening of the love of those who are in earnest in spiritual matters. A Mission is a special effort, when the teaching of the Church, the needs of man, the love of God, are impressed upon us. The Gospel of Salvation is preached with the help of the Prayers of the Church for the Presence of the Holy Spirit in preparing souls to receive the message. It is a definite onslaught on the powers of evil by the Church of God. The fact that the message is delivered by a stranger, and he one experienced in dealing with souls, that intention and thought are concentrated on a definite effort; that prayers have been, and are being, offered for an out-pouring of the Holy Spirit; that there is a feeling of expectancy in the souls of people; all these things help to make the effort of the Mission an opportunity for God to use in blessing us. But it is of the very first importance that there should be preparation for the Mission. During the time, there will be a strong appeal to the emotions; if that is not prepared for, then there is a very great danger of people being carried away just for the time being, and the result a hardening of heart rather than a development of spiritual life. There must be an effort of the will along with the response of the emotions; there must be a feeling of expecting some blessing from God, something God is to give us, something God is to do for us; and we must be prepared to receive. So will the danger of emotionalism be guarded against, and the benefit of it be used. For this there must be careful, prayerful preparation. A Mission not properly prepared for may easily be an opportunity for the devil to do his work.

It is for this that the pioneers are coming to Queensland this year. It is expected that they will arrive in Brisbane about the end of June. They come as experts, to advise those who will be responsible for the arrangements in Queensland, they come too, that they may learn something about our conditions of life, that when they return to England they may be able to advise the Missioners who are to come, for the Missioners will need preparation, and that too for the special work of delivering the message of the Gospel, as we in Queensland need it to be delivered to us. The catholicity of the Gospel means that it can be so presented that it meets all the peculiar needs and temptations of all men no matter how diverse their conditions of life may be. It must be so interpreted that it meets these needs.

It is not at all likely that we in this Diocese can hope for a visit from one of the Missioners. The large centres of population in Queensland will more than take up all their time. What then has it all to do with us? people may say. Very much indeed. Because we are in living union with the Church throughout the world, because we are members of the Body of Christ, and what affects one part affects the whole. We shall be strengthened and blessed by the Mission even though no Missioner comes into the Diocese. We shall receive blessing from the quickening of the Church. If one member rejoice, all the members rejoice with it. Also the work of the Mission is for the honour and glory of God in the salvation of souls, for the satisfying of the love of our Lord, for the application of His Cross and Passion, and if there is joy in the presence of the Angels of God over one sinner that repenteth, what joy and happiness should it be to the faithful on earth in Christ Jesus.

Our union with the whole Church brings us great blessings, it also lays upon us great responsibilities, and it is our duty to do all we can to make this Mission a means of spiritual blessing to the souls of men. We can help in that by our prayers for those who will speak, and for those who will hear, for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit that God's purpose may be fulfilled—and He willeth that all men be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth—and so the Mission is one of the objects to be prayed for in our Intercession Paper.

Mitchell River Mission.

There was a baptism at Trubanaman, Mitchell River, when twenty adults were made members of the Body of Christ on Christmas Day, 1915. This is one of the most important events in the history of the Mission. Christmas was a very happy time, as it always is on a mission station, at Trubanaman last year, and it must have been an especially happy Christmas for all, and especially for the staff when so many of their people were admitted into the Christian family. The sacrament was administered by the Chaplain, the Rev. F. H. T. Lane, who had prepared nineteen of the candidates; the other, an old man, had been taught by Jack Geibo, a South Sea Island member of the staff in charge of Angeram.

At the end of January the Superintendent was asked to take Mr Wright, of Waterloo Station, to Normanton to see the doctor, as he was very ill and there was no possibility of getting to Normanton overland at that time of the year. Of course Mr Matthews was only too glad to do anything he could to help in such a matter, and the party went to Normanton in the mission boat, the Francis Pitt. They arrived at Karumba safely. A motor launch met the party there and took Mr Wright up the river to Normanton. Unfortunately on the return trip the mission party met bad weather, and the Francis Pitt was driven ashore a few miles north of the Staaten River. Both the anchors were lost, and it was impossible to kedge the boat off the lee shore. Mr Matthews then got lines ashore, and on the top of the tide dragged the boat as high as possible on the beach. She lies there quite safe, unless there is bad weather, but of course a good deal of damage has been done to her copper. That, however, was in bad order.

Mr Wright lived for nearly a fortnight after the party arrived in Normanton, and there is at least the consolation of knowing that everything that could be done was done to save his life. The family has undertaken to pay for the repairs that will be necessary. Mr Matthews does not say how he and Jack Geibo and the crew managed to get home from the boat. They must have had some 70 miles to travel in the middle of the wet season, but missionaries do not talk about that sort of thing—it comes in the day's work. The awful thing is "I have practically lost our boat!" The Chaplain in his letter just casually remarks: "They had a hard time getting back, and both Matthews and J. Geibo were visibly thinned and worn out when they got here." It does not seem to have struck the superintendent that he and his boys had done rather a fine thing. One might almost think that capable superintendents can easily be got, but how replace a boat when subscriptions to your Mission are falling some 50 per cent.! That was what Mr Matthews found from his A.B.M. Review when he got home, and so he wrote in rather a depressed frame of mind. The worst of it is we cannot cheer him up during the wet season, because we cannot get word to him that the Church will see him through.

Darwin.

The Rev. C. H. Massey, the newly appointed Rector, arrived at Darwin by the Montoro on Thursday, January 13th, and was inducted by the Rev. W. A. Fletcher, who acted on a commission issued for the purpose by the Bishop of the Diocese, on the following Sunday, January 16th. There was a large congregation at the Induction Service, and His Excellency the Administrator and members of the staff were present.

On Tuesday, January 18th, there was a social gathering to welcome the new Rector and to bid good-bye to Mr. Fletcher, who has done such good work for the Church for more than three years in the Northern Territory.

Mr. Fletcher did not get away from Darwin until February 11th, when he caught the Montoro for the South. Several boats passed Darwin without calling in January. Mr. Fletcher will act as Curate at All Saints', Petersham, for a time, that is the parish where he was Curate before he went to Darwin. His many friends in the North wish him all happiness, and are grateful for what he did for them.

After the War.

It is well that we should try and realise what the world will be after the War is over, and that we should begin now to learn the lessons from the past, and what the present catastrophe has to teach us, so that we may shape the world that is to be more in harmony with what God would have it become. To this end, the Central Board of Missions in England has arranged for the issue of Missionary Tracts for the Times, under the general editorship of Dr. J. O. F. Murray, sometime Warden of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, and now Master of Selwyn College, Cambridge. The first four of these have appeared, and if the series keeps up to the standard of them, it will be very helpful indeed; and, as they cost but a penny a-piece, it ought to be possible to give them a wide circulation. The series is published by S.P.C.K.

The first of the series is by the general Editor, and is intitled, "The Time of our Visitation." The author begins with the statement: "The War has brought us face to face with the fundamental facts of life"; and he points out how our whole view of the spiritual world is being reconstructed. These are facts of such first-rate importance that we ought to give them very earnest thought. Dr. Murray finds that there has been a fuller discovery of the meaning we attach to the ideas of God and of evil, and to the fact of death—to the call for sacrifice. He faces the question how faith in God can survive the shock it has received for many people; how we as Christians can answer the charge that the War means the failure of Christianity. The answer is contained in the moral view of God's dealings with men. The criticism implies that the Universe is not a mere mechanical machine, and that involves the idea of freewill for man. The reality of the gift of freewill, with all the consequences of its use and the dangers of its abuse, solves the difficulty, and the compelling force of the War forces us to realise this view of the relation between God and man. A moral governour of subjects endowed with freewill.

"Wars are at once the ripened fruit of man's uttermost rebellion against God, and the most drastic of His remedies." This is a time of Visitation, a time when God comes to teach us that we cannot refuse to walk in the Light without serious risk of falling. We cannot refuse to order our lives in harmony with the revealed will of God without danger of ruin. Nations and Churches have to learn this lesson equally with individuals. Perhaps the greatest lesson of all is that of the solidarity of the Human Race. "We are forced to acknowledge the fact of our corporate responsibility by finding ourselves involved in a common doom." Have we faced this fact: the sin of Germany in repudiating loyalty to Christ has involved the whole world in ruin? We as a nation and a Church have to search out what are our own sins, how we have failed to witness to the claim of our Lord on the loyalty of mankind. God grant we may learn and that we may repent. If we are honest we need not be afraid of self-righteousness, as we think how the war teaches us that when one member fails all the members of the race of man suffers. Our duty is to see that for the future we shall bear a more loyal witness to the claims of our Lord, and see that, as far as we are able to do so, other nations learn that "except the Lord build the house their labour is but lost that build it." The second of the series is called "The Holy War." In this the Rev. William Temple is concerned not with the war we are engaged in with the Central powers, except in so far as it is an analogue of the spiritual war against evil, the war to engage in which we were recruited at our baptism. In this spiritual warfare all the motives for the earthly war find their purest and most complete expression. It is a war of deliverance from evil powers; there are demands for heroism and discipline; there is joy and happiness and liberty for the vanquished. The price of redemption is the Body broken and the Blood Shed upon the Cross, and if the blood shed upon the battle-fields of Europe, and Asia, and Africa that we may live a free life here, is a debt of honour to us, how much more is that Blood shed on the Cross, to which we owe all our civilization, a debt for us, a debt whose claims we cannot ignore. Mr Temple draws some lessons from the war in the duty of preserving nationality and all it means, a lesson the Missions of the Church may well learn. Each has a contribution to the perfection of the Catholic Church; without them the Church would not be truly Catholic.

Miss Rouse, who writes the third of the series—"The World of To-Day and the Gospel"—is the travelling secretary of the World's Student Christian Federation. She emphasises the fact that Missionary work must be reorganised. There will be changes due to political rearrangement; there is one already in the fact that a German Mission in Southern India has been taken over by the Swedish Church Missionary Society, and we in Australia may find fresh calls for self-sacrifice in our duty to what was German New Guinea. We know that the Church in South Africa is making a noble effort to bear new burdens laid upon her in what were German colonies in South Africa,

But Miss Rouse thinks the great change will be in the development of "Native" Churches, and in the fact that in the future they will have to depend upon themselves more, for men and for self-support in material things. Everything that tends to develop a self-supporting branch of the Catholic Church is a gain, and most of all in reality of spiritual life. But while there may not be so much money for Missions, though even that is open to question, we think Miss Rouse is wrong in saying there will not be so many offers for Mission work after the War. The calls that have been made on the self-sacrifice of our people will awaken a desire, a readiness, to listen to the call of the King of kings for volunteers in the world-wide warfare against sin, and there may well be more offers of service than there have ever been. Miss Rouse points out one great gain to Missions from the War—Christianity will make its appeal untrammelled by its supposed alliance with, and its responsibility for, much that has passed as Western civilisation. If this proves to be the case, we shall be grateful for the shedding of what has been a hindrance. The Catholic Faith will have a better opportunity of influencing the various national movements in the East, and of combating religious revivals when it is free to appear, in very truth, Catholic. In that fight, on equal terms, no longer handicapped by much that is not Christian, there is more hope for the triumph of truth. Perhaps we may hope that the Church in Australia will be freed from the hindering effects of the "Nexus."

The fourth of the series—"The Building Power of Christ's Kingdom"—is by the Archdeacon of Sheffield, the Ven. H. Grosford Jones. The Building Power is the Spirit of Christ, which must be set free by Prayer, and for its effective working there must be Honesty, Temper, and Concentration. Honesty to admit our failures and the claims of all men, no matter how hard it may be to admit it, to share in the brotherhood of man. We have to face the fact for instance, that the German is our brother. It is a bold thing to say at this time, but it is true, and we have to recognise the truth. There must be a temper of affinity, and there must be concentration of effort. Granted these things in the souls of men, and the Spirit of Christ can rebuild our shattered civilisation on a surer foundation, and the building will be a lasting one. But as this Day of Visitation teaches us that there has not been honest co-operation on the part of man with God, so it warns us of the need for repentance, that there shall be honest and loyal acceptance of the claims of God, that His will may be accomplished, and all men come to the knowledge of the truth. There will be an undoubted call for more real missionary work on the part of the Church. The war emphasises that.

Taffs, 4/-, Mrs Crees (1915 and 1916); 2/6, Bishop Stone-Wigg, Miss Paige; 2/-, Mr P. J. Money, Mrs Zahel, Miss Weynton (England), Mrs W. J. Allom; 4/-, Mrs Allan (1915 and 1916); 6/-, Mr W. Butler (3 years).

The Bishop expects to be in Cooktown for Easter, and to induct the new Rector, the Rev. James Tweedie, before he leaves that town. There will be a Confirmation at Murray Island in May, and after that the Bishop hopes to visit Darwin and the Roper River Mission. Movements of the boat for the Roper are so very uncertain that no dates can be fixed. It is possible that the boat for the Roper will go from Thursday Island and not from Darwin.

Mr Vizard, a member of the Staff of the Roper River Mission, was in Thursday Island for a few days in January. He came from the Roper by the "Alcairo" to Thursday Island, and went on South by the "Nikko Maru." He will be on furlough for a few months in Victoria.

The Venerable Archdeacon Batchelor was a passenger by the "Aki Maru" from Japan to Sydney. Dr. Batchelor was present at service in the Cathedral on Sunday, February 27th. The boat arrived just before service, and it left at noon on that day. Dr. Batchelor will be doing Deputation work for C.M.S. in Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. C. D. Gillman, who was at St. Francis' College, Nundah, being prepared for ordination—with a view to work in the Diocese of Carpentaria—has enlisted, and was to go into Camp at the end of March. As Mr. Skelton enlisted last year, both the Carpentaria students have now obeyed that call of God, which is the insistent call at the present time. We cannot hope to have any students for Carpentaria at St. Francis' College, Nundah, till after the War. The Bishop could not accept any who are physically fit to enlist, and if men could not pass the doctor for the Army, they are not likely to be fit for work in the North.

Visit to the East Coast.

The Bishop left Thursday Island by the "Aramac" on Tuesday in Holy Week, April 18th, for Cooktown and arrived there on Wednesday evening. He was met on the Wharf by the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, who had been in charge of the parish since November of last year. There were several boys from the Torres Straits Islands on the Wharf, as some of the many boats that are working along the Barrier Reef were in port for stores, and had been detained by heavy weather.

The Bishop preached at Evensong on the Wednesday night, and on Good Friday he preached at Mattins, took the Three Hours Devotion, at which there was a reverent and attentive congregation, and nearly every one was able to stay for all the addresses; he preached again at Evensong.

On Saturday (Easter Eve) classes were held in the afternoon at the Roman Catholic Convent, where there are fifteen children of the Church of England. The Bishop gave all of them a lesson, and afterwards had a class for three girls who have been confirmed and who were to make their Easter Communion on the next day.

In the evening the Bishop also had a class in preparation for Communion for those Torres Straits islanders who had been confirmed at Badu and Mabuiag, and who were in Cooktown for Easter Day.

On Easter Day there were three celebrations of the Holy Communion, and the Bishop celebrated at 7.30 a.m. and 11 a.m., and he was the preacher at the 11 o'clock celebration. He had assisted Mr. Wilkinson at the 6.30 a.m. celebration when six Torres Straits islanders made their Communion. In the afternoon the Bishop addressed the children, and in the evening confirmed six candidates, who had been prepared by Mr. Wilkinson. The congregations all day were large and reverent, and the services inspiring. Sixty-five people made their Communion.

On Easter Monday visits were paid to the hospital, and to some of the parishioners. Anzac Day—which was also Tuesday in Easter week, and the Festival of St. Mark—was well observed, though the congregation at 11 o'clock was not so large as might have been expected, seeing that was the special service for the memorial of those who had given their lives for us on Gallipoli. Mr. Wilkinson was the celebrant at 7.30 a.m., when those confirmed on the previous Sunday made their first Communion, and the Bishop was the celebrant at 11 a.m. At this service the collect from the Burial Service was used with the collects for the day, and a special prayer was said after the prayer for the Church militant on behalf of those who died during the campaign on Gallipoli. The Bishop was the preacher at this service. In the evening at 7.30 there was a good congregation, and after Evensong had been said there was a service of Intercession, which was a very good preparation for the public meeting held in front of the Council Chambers at 8.30 p.m. At this meeting the Bishop proposed the resolution which was passed at all the public meetings held on that day throughout Queensland. The Mayor and the Town Clerk also spoke, and the telegram from the King, which was handed to the Mayor during the meeting, was read.

On Wednesday, April 26th, Mr. Wilkinson left Cooktown for Laura, to get ready for a tour through the Peninsula, and the Bishop remained in Cooktown till the arrival of the Rev. James Tweedie, on May 2nd. He took all the services on Low Sunday, and after Sunday School on that day, presented the children's Lenten Self-Denial offerings at the Altar. As only a few of the envelopes had been brought in on Easter Day, the offering was postponed till the next Sunday.

The Church people of Cooktown arranged for a reception, to be held on Tuesday, May 2nd, in the Rectory, as a welcome to the Bishop on his first visit since his consecration to the parish, and also as a welcome to the new Rector, the Rev. James Tweedie. Bishop Hevy (the Roman Catholic Vicar-Apostolic), the Rev. Father Hoynes, and the Methodist Minister, the Rev. Mr. Downs, were present at the reception. There were speeches, songs and recitations, all of which helped to pass away a very pleasant evening. The Rectory had been decorated with bunting, and the ladies of the parish had provided the refreshments.

On Wednesday, May 3rd, the Bishop left Cooktown for Port Douglas by the "Mourilyan."

He was met by the Rector of Mossman and Port Douglas, the Rev. Edward Taffs, and on Thursday travelled by tram to Mossman. Mr. and Mrs. Taffs were "at home" at the Rectory on Saturday afternoon, to give people an opportunity of meeting the Bishop.

The Bishop celebrated the Holy Communion and preached at 10 a.m. on Sunday, May 7th, spoke to the children (after Sunday School) about "The Heralds of the King," and preached at Evensong. There were large congregations at the services. While at Mossman the Rector took the Bishop to every part of the parish to visit the parishioners and the schools, and on the night of Friday, May 12th, there was a meeting in Lunn's Hall, when the Bishop spoke about "the War and its Lessons." There was a large attendance at the meeting, in spite of the fact that heavy rain began to fall about 6 p.m., which prevented many country people from coming to the meeting.

On Saturday the Bishop returned to Port Douglas. He was the celebrant at the 7.30 a.m. service, preached at 11 a.m., addressed the children at 3.30 p.m., and preached again at Evensong. There were large congregations at 11 a.m. and 7.30 p.m. The Rector promised to arrange for the formation of branches of "The Heralds of the King" at Mossman and Port Douglas; so there is good hope of the children being taught the important duty of working for and praying for the Missions of the Church. Monday was spent in visiting the hospital, the schools, and families at Mowbray, some seven miles from Port Douglas, and on Tuesday, May 12th, the Bishop returned to Cooktown. While at Port Douglas the Bishop was the guest of Mrs. Blackburn.

On Wednesday, May 17th, the Bishop celebrated Holy Communion at 7 a.m., with special intercessions for the Bishops who met that day in conference in Sydney. In the evening he spoke on "the War and its Lessons" at a public meeting in the Oddfellows' Hall, and on Thursday evening he presided at the Easter Meeting of the Cooktown parish. On Sunday, May 21st, he was the celebrant at the 7.30 a.m. service, inducted the new Rector, and preached at Mattins and preached again at Evensong. He left Cooktown early on the morning of Monday, May 22nd, for Thursday Island, where he arrived on Tuesday evening.

S. David's, Mossman.

Mossman and Port Douglas have suffered a good deal from various causes during the last four or five years. A cyclone in 1911 destroyed the Churches and damaged most of the buildings; in other years there have been a flood and a drought and a strike. All these things have thrown the district back, and have made the work of the Church more difficult, especially in the way of raising funds. About £700 was raised to re-build and repair the Church buildings after the cyclone. A small Church was built at Port Douglas and a house for the priest to use when he visits that part of the parish. Repairs were effected to the rectory and the hall at Mossman, where it was decided to build a stone Church. About £370 has been spent on the foundations of this Church; but that has exhausted nearly all the funds available. It seems that many people are afraid of the expense of building a stone Church; and of course, for such a building, it is necessary and essential that money be sunk in foundations, for which there is no apparent result. The sum of about £60 is available to continue the building; and if another £400 could be raised, there is every prospect of the building being finished, and Mossman will be the proud possessor of one of the most beautiful Churches in Queensland, besides giving as an offering to God for His service a building worthy of that service. As there is every prospect of a good crushing this season, perhaps we may hope that the people will provide most of the money needed to complete the building; and should any reader of the Carpentarian wish to help the rector of Mossman to finish a beautiful Church—for the building of which he has given much careful thought and manual labour—the Bishop will be glad to receive contributions, and pass them on to the committee. There has been much worry and anxiety over the building and much patience shown; Mr. Taffs is to be admired for his persistence in striving to attain his ideal, a building worthy to be offered to God for His service.

Notice to Surrogates.

On S. Matthew's Day, September 21st, the Bishop will enter on the second year of his consecration. Surrogates are reminded that licenses should be filled up accordingly on and after September 21st.

Meeting of the Bishops.

The three Archbishops and thirteen Bishops were in Sydney from May 17th to May 19th, to consult together on various matters of importance. There was a devotional meeting on the morning of May 17th, at which addresses were given by the Archbishop of Brisbane. No announcements have been made to the Press about the subjects which were discussed. The Bishop of Carpentaria was not able to be present.

Children in Convent Schools.

While I am very thankful that I have been able to arrange for some definite and regular instruction for the children of the Church who are at the Convent School at Cooktown, I feel that it is only right to point out to parents who are members of the Church of England that there are Church Schools to which they can send their children, where the children will receive definite Church teaching as a part of their school training; and where they will be living in a Church atmosphere, under Church influences.

The Reverend Mother at the Cooktown Convent was most willing to agree to what I wished done for the children of the Church of England who are under her care. I was able to arrange that the girls who have been confirmed should make their Communion once a month at an early service, instead of at the 11 o'clock service, which has been the custom; that all the children attend the 11 o'clock service every Sunday; that the Rector of Cooktown should have all the children for Church teaching once a week in the Convent; and that he should see the girls who are confirmed on the Saturday before the day on which they make their Communion, this preparation class and instruction being taken in the Convent. I want the parents of these children to understand that, while I am glad that it has been possible to make these arrangements, I myself look upon them as making the best of a bad situation. I do not mean to say a word against the Convent Schools, the work and the self-sacrifice of the Sisters who do the work, and the efforts made by Roman Catholics to enable them to do it are beyond praise. Her schools are the greatest glory of the Roman Catholic Church. Nor do I wish to suggest that anything is done directly in the way of influencing the children of the Church of England away from the Church. I believe the schools are excellent for Roman Catholic children, I do not think they are satisfactory for the training of the children of the Church of England in the most important part of that training, that which concerns their spiritual life.

Quite rightly the Sisters cannot allow the girls they are responsible for to be going out without proper supervision; and probably one great reason for parents sending their children to the Convent schools is the fact that they know the children will be well looked after in that way. This means that the children cannot attend many services, for the Roman Sister cannot take them to Church. It is difficult to arrange for their Church teaching. The Rector of Cooktown must take the classes in the Convent, and not in the Church. But even more important there is the indirect effect upon the girls who see their fellow scholars, who are Roman Catholics, having the privilege and happiness of Church services and instructions that they cannot have. The children feel that they are outsiders, and that must have the effect of making them feel unhappy, and it tends to make them either wish to join in services and teaching with the others, or it hardens their characters, and creates a feeling of "Don't care," and that just when they are at the most impressionable age. I felt the great importance of our children in the Cooktown Convent being able to feel someone cares for their spiritual welfare, and so they need not feel uncared for, unshepherded in spiritual matters.

The Church of England is doing something to provide schools for her children, where they can be trained in a spiritual atmosphere, which will be for their spiritual health, and where spiritually the children can feel at home. For the spiritual health of the children, and for loyalty to the Church, we may fairly claim that Church of England parents should send their children to their own schools. There are Church Schools in Brisbane, Toowoomba, Stanthorpe, Southport; and if parents in the North think these are too far away, there is a Church of England School for Girls in Herberton, which only needs support in order that there may be in a good climate a good school for girls in the North, where the girls will receive Church of England teaching, and will live in a Church of England atmosphere. I would ask that all parents who do not wish to send their children so far away as the Southern Schools, should write to Miss Wakeford, Church of England Girls' School, Herberton, for particulars about the school.

Torres Straits Mission.

The Bishop has paid two visits to the Islands of the Torres Straits since the April number of the Carpentarian went to press.

On Tuesday, March 24th, he left Thursday Island in the "Dogai" for S. Paul's, Moa, where he arrived after a very slow passage about 8 p.m. As the galvanised iron tanks at the Mission Station were near the end of their time of usefulness, it had been decided to put down a cement tank, and the Bishop wished to speak to the people on the Mission Station about this work. A very early start was made next morning, but the boy who was acting as pilot apparently thought a beacon showed the way the ship should go, and he directed the course for the beacon, which was hit, and the "Dogai" sat on the reef in the passage in front of S. Paul's, Moa! We did not get off till the tide rose about 10 a.m., so a start was not made till mid-day, and that night we did not get any further than Yam Island on the way to Darnley. We anchored at Yam late, and next day got as far as Yorke Island, where we had service in the evening. Very little wind on Friday meant that we could not get to Darnley that day, and when the tide turned we had to drop our anchor and keep what we had made. Early on Saturday morning we were at anchor off Darnley. Mr. Done had had a busy time for a little over a month. He had been taking classes in preparation for Confirmation every day, and sometimes two classes a day; he had also taken the children every morning in Church, as there was no school during the time he was on the Island. On Saturday afternoon there was a meeting of the Island people, to talk about various matters, the most important being the re-roofing of the Church and the building of an apse for a chancel. The iron on the roof is very badly rusted and it is important that a new roof be put on the building before next wet season. It was decided if possible to put on fibro-cement tiles. The Church is not big enough for the people, and so no room can be spared for a chancel, besides which an apsidal chancel will take the bare, square appearance from the building.

The people promised to do what they could to raise the money that will be needed, and the Bishop said that the coconuts on the Mission Ground could be stored and sold for the Repairs Fund; it was suggested that some of the men might get bêche-de-mer or trochus shell to be sold for the same purpose.

The Bishop had to interview some of the candidates, and it was decided to postpone the confirmation of two. There was a wedding the same afternoon, and then we had Evensong, and went on board the "Dogai" to sleep. On Sunday March 26th, 40 candidates were confirmed, 11 male, 29 female. Some of these were old men and old women, one or two of whom were not able to kneel. All the old L.M.S. Church members presented themselves for confirmation. In the afternoon nine babies were baptized, and at Evensong the Bishop spoke to the people about the Communion Service, and the duty of worship. There was a celebration of the Holy Communion on Monday morning, when the newly-confirmed made their communion, and some others who had lapsed began again to do their duty.

We left for Murray Island after the celebration, but as we had no wind we did not arrive till the next morning, and after losing so much time we could not stay more than a few hours before we left for home, and then we did not arrive in Thursday Island till Friday morning.

The next visit to the islands was at the end of May, when the Bishop visited Murray Island to confirm 110 candidates—39 male and 71 female. This was the first trip of the new boat, which has been built for the Torres Straits Mission. Mr. and Mrs. Done, with their two children, had been living in the Mission House at Murray for five weeks, and Mr. Done had had a very strenuous time with daily classes and interviews, besides making many alterations in the Church to fit the building for Church services. A number of men worked well in helping to get the Church altered, though many preferred to do nothing.

The pulpit was transformed into a very nice altar, and there was still sufficient timber to make a prayer desk. The rails in front of what was the platform were cut down to a proper height; and there were enough spindles to make the stem of a lectern, and the legs for a credence table. In the apse at the east end, an additional cement platform has been laid down as the foot pace for the altar, and another step in front of the communion rails to act as a kneeler; while the walls of the Church were lime washed, and the woodwork was painted. At the back of the altar is a reredos of plaited bamboo, which covers two inconvenient windows, and shows up the altar. Ornaments are needed to furnish the altar. At Murray Island, Mr. Done baptized eight adults, who were also candidates for confirmation. There was ground for serious doubt as to whether four of these had been baptized, so they received conditional baptism. This is the first occasion when there has been any doubt about the baptism of those who wished to be confirmed. On Monday, May 28th, 121 persons made their communion, and after the service the Bishop gave those who were confirmed the day before, memorial cards of their confirmation.

There was a wedding, and much packing up to be done by the Dones; and we got away about three o'clock in the afternoon; and after anchoring near a reef all night, we arrived in Thursday Island about 7.45 p.m., on Tuesday, May 28th—a very good trip, as the Bishop was away only five days, all told. The new boat behaved well, and is evidently fast, quick in more ways than one. Probably every boat has some peculiar motion of her own—a sort of individuality. Perhaps that is why nearly every one, crew included, paid tribute to Neptune on the way out, when we were travelling close hauled against a very stiff south-easter.

"The Herald."

The new boat for the Torres Straits Mission was dedicated on Ascension Day to the service of God by the Bishop of the Diocese, and she was called "The Herald." A few friends and the crew were on board—there is not much room for a large party—and the Bishop said a short office of dedication which had been drawn up by the Sub-Dean of the Cathedral. It had been intended to give the boat a native name, but unfortunately there are two languages in the Islands of the Straits, and it seemed there might be some jealousy if a word from either language was used, and the only common word that was suggested did not sound suitable, so it was decided to use an English name, and none could be found more suitable than the name which links the boat and her work with the angels who brought the first news of salvation, and with the very efficient and enthusiastic junior department of the Australian Board of Missions. "The Heralds of the King" are doing such good work that it seemed right to honour them by linking the new boat with their organisation in this way.

The boat, which is ketch-rigged, is forty-eight feet long and has a fourteen foot beam; draught about six feet. There is a very roomy and comfortable cabin forward of the mizzen-mast, and there is a lavatory divided from the main cabin by a bulkhead, and from the fore cabin by a bulkhead, each bulkhead having sliding doors. As there is a hatchway leading into the forecabin, and another aft of the mizzen-mast, when the sliding doors are open there is a draught right through the ship; while there is a sky-light, and there are port holes in the cabin itself. The cabin is beautifully airy and cool, except of course when the boat is beating, or when it is raining, and everything has to be closed down. The boat was built at Thursday Island, and the Mission owes much to Mr. Thomas May, of Bowden and Mackenzie, who gave liberally of his time and experience to supervise the building of the boat. May she be indeed the bringer of a message of peace and salvation to many souls in the Islands of the Torres Straits.

Mission Notes.

The new Church at Mabuiag is to be dedicated on or about Sunday, August 20th.

The Rev. G. A. Luscombe has begun classes in preparation for Confirmation at Adam, on Moa Island.

Six Torres Straits Island boys, who had been confirmed in January last, made their Easter Communion at Ohrist Church, Cooktown. Their boats had put in for stores, and one of the first things the boys did was to look for the Church in Cooktown.

Three boats with island crews have gone to New Guinea. The captain took letters of commendation from the Bishop. One was presented to the priest at Port Moresby, who arranged for a celebration of the Holy Communion for those who had been confirmed. The boats did not expect to be in Port Moresby over the Sunday. Eight boys made their Communion on Friday in Easter Week; and as they did not leave before the Sunday, a number of the crew went to the Sunday Services.

On Palm Sunday, April 16th, the Bishop of New Guinea baptized 83 adults and 35 children. The candidates were from four centres. On the same day the Rev. S. R. M. Gill baptized 103 adults and 27 children at Boianai. Many of the adults at both places were grey haired men and women.

On Easter Day there were 241 communicants at Boianai, and there were 280 at Dogura. At other stations there were doubtless large numbers, but news has not been received from them.

The Bishop of North Queensland has been on a visit to the New Guinea Mission. He was present at the annual conference of the white members of the staff in May, and gave the addresses at the Quiet Day.

On August 10th the New Guinea Mission will be 25 years old. The Rev. Copland King has been a member of the staff from the beginning. He, with the Rev. A. A. MacLaren, landed near Wedau on August 10, 1891. The Rev. Samuel and Mrs. Tomlinson arrived about two months later. All three are still working at high pressure on the staff of the Mission.

Mr Chapman writes in very good spirits from Trubanaman. He says their irrigation is a great success, and by its means there is prospect of better crops in the dry season than in the wet season. Two of the boys on the station have learned to plough and to drive four horses, and the younger ones seem to take an interest in agriculture. Mr Chapman wants varieties of yams and sweet potatoes. We hope to get some from the Torres Straits Islands for him.

The Professor of Poetry at Oxford, Dr. Warren, quoted from Bishop White's poem, "Australia," in a lecture he delivered at Oxford. Dr. Warren wrote to the Bishop asking for copies of other poems which he has written.

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XVI., No. 63. Thursday Island, July 1, 1916.

Some Lessons of the War.

It is of first-rate importance that those of us who cannot go to the Front should begin to think about the lessons the war has to teach us, that we may be prepared to face our duties and to shoulder our responsibilities in the new world we shall live in when the war is over, and in the shaping of which we shall have our part. It is no doubt impossible for anyone to say which will be the after-war problems that we shall be called upon to solve, it is possible for us to create an atmosphere and to develop an attitude of mind such as will help us to solve those problems, and to make the new world more worthy than the old. The immediate duty is not so much to decide upon cut and dried schemes for settling matters which may be quite different from what we forecast, as to prepare ourselves, and to educate ourselves so that when the time comes we may be ready whatever form the problems take. When peace comes there will be such a hurry to get business into its groove again, that there will be no time for thought; that time is now. There are certain principles for which we are fighting, and honesty demands that these principles shall be acted upon, and allowed their influence in every day life and duty, in the humdrum, unexciting days after the war. Principles that are true, and especially such as those for which blood has been shed, have a right to make their influence felt at all times.

For instance, we are fighting because we will be loyal to our word and to our obligations. "No matter what it will cost, England will be true to her word." That is a sentiment which should be written in letters of gold in every school and hall, business and meeting place in the Empire. But if that principle of loyalty to our word and our obligations is true, and is worth dying for, we are in simple honesty bound to act upon it in politics, in business, in industrial and in private life. There is no doubt at all that the tendency of life has been to shirk duties, and to refuse to acknowledge responsibilities when they became irksome and demanded self-sacrifice. Men were full of their rights and ever ready to claim them; keen about privileges, not so ready to acknowledge responsibility, yet privilege and duty go together. There is a change needed if we are to be really honest.

We claim to be fighting for the rights of the smaller and weaker nations. Serbia, it is felt, had gone as far as she could be expected to go, in submitting to the demands of Austria. She could go no further without sacrificing her existence as a nation. Belgium had a right to her liberty and to her existence, and Germany could not claim to override the rights of the small nation in order to gain her own ends. Honesty demands that this principle be applied to the weaker races with whom we come into contact in any way. We have not always done so, we have not recognised the rights of such peoples; we have not recognised our responsibility towards them. Honesty demands that there shall be a change.

We have had manifested the first and foremost place that discipline occupies in life. There must be self-control, and the individual part must be ready to sacrifice itself for the benefit of the whole. In all our life, in every department of it, we have been undisciplined, impatient of control, each seeking his own benefit or pleasure. We have had during the War to submit to discipline ourselves; and as an Empire, to practice self-sacrifice, self-repression. Our soldiers have had to learn discipline in a special sense to enable them to fulfil their purpose. Honesty demands that we submit ourselves to become more disciplined in the days that are to be than we have been in the past. A change is needed.

We have learned that the claim to honour and respect is one that rests on service. Not money, nor position, nor ability, but service rendered to the Empire marks the one who is worthy of honour. Our ideals have changed, our standard of values has been altered, and if this is rightly so now, it is difficult to see why it should not also be so in times of peace and prosperity.

Simple honesty then demands that we as a people should endeavour to learn the lessons the War is teaching us, and try to put those lessons into practice in everyday life and duty; and on the whole we of the British race are an honest people, we are sincere. Hypocrisy is not really one of our national characteristics, indeed if we pretend at all it is rather in the way of denying that our actions are the result of belief in principles—we claim rather less than more credit. It is not perhaps that we are a peculiarly humble people, but we think that anything in the way of claiming credit is bad form. The sacrifices that have been made by fathers and mothers, the blood that has been shed by our sons, all demand, and insistently demand, that the lessons of the War shall have their full force and influence in moulding the world that is to be.

All the lessons of the War are concerned directly or indirectly with morals, moral principles, moral forces, moral issues, ideas and ideals: these are the things which stand out, and in all there is a demand, which no one can fail to listen to, for a change from the attitude towards them before the War.

We who are Christians believe that moral principles are true because they are in harmony with the truths of religion, and the being and nature of God. Indeed they are essentially Christian principles that are at stake. We who are Christians believe that moral forces and moral ideas and ideals derive their effective power and driving force from the Religion of Jesus Christ, that self-sacrifice was consecrated by the Cross of Calvary. And so the demand for a change in our attitude is a demand for Repentance in the religious meaning of the term. There is perhaps no thoughtful person in the Empire who does not believe a change is needed, that the attitude towards all questions after the War must be different from what it was in the days that have been, and especially that moral principles, ideas and forces must be more in evidence. Not altruism, not patriotism, not philanthropy, can give to morals their living force, their driving power. These can only come from the Religion of Jesus Christ. The truest patriot is the one who is convinced in his own heart of the absolute claim which God has upon him, and is prepared because of that conviction to do all he can to bring about such a national repentance as will really turn us honestly and sincerely to the side of God, and that will be done most of all by prayer and effort to lead a life which in every department of it is guided and governed by the Holy Spirit. No matter what the cost may be, there is a call to every professing Christian to be true to his convictions, and to translate them into practice. Faith can still move mountains, but it must be such a faith as is real and sincere enough to influence our lives, which can strengthen us to pay the cost and bear the sacrifice, such a faith in our Blessed Lord and all that He has done and all that He is, that we are ready to follow Him who for the joy that was set before Him endured the Cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God.

Lines Written by the Bishop of Willochra.

A WOMAN'S CALL.

O Brother, will you go for me
To fight our country's foe?
The call has come across the sea:
O Brother, will you go?

For we are women, boys and old,
We do but what we can,
A soldier's arms we cannot hold,
We look to you—a man.

For home, for honour, and for right
We bid you strike a blow,
To save us from the foeman's might,
O Brother, will you go?

The men you know fought side by side,
They did what men must do;
On Anzac beach they fought and died,
And now they call for you.

And will you shame both them and me
By fear to face the foe?
The call is ringing o'er the sea,
O Brother, will you go?

G.W.

Anzac Day, 1916.

This may be sung as a recruiting song to the tune of Dundee (Hymns A. and M., 221).

"The current number of the 'C.M. Gleaner' gives an account of two Christian soldiers in the Chinese Army stationed at Ningpo who petitioned their commanding officer that they might be excused taking the oath of loyalty to the Government before the images of Kwan and Ngoh (two famous warriors of ancient days). The officer told them that non-compliance would mean death. They refused to sin against their conscience, and owing to the good character they bore, the punishment was reduced to dismissal from the 'ranks.'"—C.M. Review for April.

The "Francis Pritt."

When the last issue of the Carpentarian went to press, all that we knew of the "Francis Pritt" was that she was ashore somewhere on the beach between the Mitchell and the Staaten Rivers. Nothing could be done in the way of salvage until the end of the North-West season; the boat was on a lee-shore, and the risk of losing another boat in trying to salvage the one was too great.

There was some trouble in securing a boat to send down the Gulf for salvage operations, and we were afraid at one time that it would be necessary to send the "Dogai," which would have interfered very seriously with Mr. Done's work in the Torres Straits Islands. However, the "Coral Sea" was chartered, and she left Thursday Island on April 7th with a carpenter and all necessary gear to get the "Francis Pritt" off, if it was found to be possible to do so, and to get her ready to come to Thursday Island for repairs. The "Coral Sea" also took stores for the Mission Station, a most important thing, as the people were nearly out of most things and were looking out very anxiously for a boat from Thursday Island.

The "Coral Sea" made a slow trip down the Gulf, taking six days to get to the Mitchell, and the full moon tides about the 18th were missed. Mr. Matthews and some boys were picked up at the Mitchell River on Easter Day, and the "Coral Sea" got to where the "Francis Pritt" went ashore. The boat was found to be lying in exactly the same position as she was when Mr. Matthews and the crew left her in January, and excepting for the loss of some copper, no damage had been done.

Work was begun on Easter Monday, and by Wednesday the boat had been shifted fifteen feet towards the sea on rollers, and there was every hope that on that day the boat would be afloat, but things went wrong; timbers shifted, rollers would not work, and there was delay. "We shall get her into the water within a week, certainly. The little Jap carpenter is a brick to work. He would have us at it night and day, but however willing our spirits may be, our flesh is weak, we have to give in, and after supper and Evensong, we creep into bed and sleep the sleep of the weary till the daylight, when we are awakened by the carpenter moving about."

So Mr. Matthews writes: On Wednesday everyone worked till 9 o'clock at night, and on Thursday morning the boat was at the water's edge, when there was another delay.

The Malay cook went out shooting on the Thursday morning, and he had not turned up again at 4 p.m., and nearly all hands had to turn out to look for him, as it was feared he had got lost in the bush. No trace of the cook could be found before dark, but during the night he turned up at the ship. He said he had been very ill, and lay down in the shade a couple of miles away. He had heard the boys calling, but could not answer, as to call out gave him a sharp pain in the side. He seemed quite well on Friday!

On Friday, at 10 a.m., the boat was got into the water, and the weary people could wait for a tide to help in kedging her into deep water. The tide did not serve on the Saturday, and as the crew could manage everything, the "Coral Sea" was freed to return to Thursday Island.

Mr Matthews says that everyone worked splendidly, and considering everything, the job was most satisfactorily done. Three times the tide washed tons of sand back under the boat, and this had to be shovelled away. There was abundance of game to be got—kangaroos, and duck, and fish—and everybody worked in the best of spirits and temper. We owe a debt of gratitude to the crew of the "Coral Sea" for all they did.

The "Francis Pritt" arrived in Thursday Island on Monday, May 15th, and was got on the slip at the end of that week, when it was found that very little damage had been done. She will want caulking all over and coppering, and there will be various repairs. She was, however, due for much of these this year whether or no.

The cost of chartering the "Coral Sea," and of the salvage, comes to about £140, and the boat will need another £160 to be spent on her. We hope that the insurance people will pay part at least of the cost of salvage, although the boat was insured for total loss; and the estate of the late Mr Wright, of Waterloo, will help us to put the boat into repair. But as much of the money to be spent is for what would in any case been necessary this year, a good deal of the expense must fall on the Mission, and it is to be hoped that someone will be moved to help A.B.M. to meet this expense.

The boat will be as good as ever when all the repairs are completed; and we should be very thankful we have not to find £500 or more for a new boat, and still more that no lives were lost when the accident happened.

On Saturday, April 8th, the Bishop paid a visit to Port War. He was the guest of Mr. Mackenzie at Wanetta, with whom he stayed on Saturday night. Services were held at Port War. Evensong was said on Saturday night, and there was a celebration of the Holy Communion on Sunday morning. The services, which were wonderfully hearty and inspiring, were held in the mess-room.

On Sunday the Bishop went on by the "Dogai" to Booby Island, where he was the guest of Mrs. Norgate. Evensong was said at the pilot-station on Sunday evening, and there was a celebration of the Holy Communion on Monday morning. The Bishop returned to Thursday Island on the Monday, calling at Friday Island on the way.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishop's House on Thursday, April 13th, when the Bishop, the Sub-dean, Messrs. Lee-Bryce, Sullivan, and Mackenzie were present. A good deal of business was got through, and arrangements were made to present the Bishop with a signet ring for which contributions had been received from nearly every district in the Diocese.

Anzac Day.

News from the parishes tells us that everywhere in the Diocese the Church did her part in helping to celebrate Anzac Day worthily. There was a special celebration of the Holy Communion in every parish, and at some of the Churches the congregations were large, and the services most inspiring.

At most places there was an early celebration of Holy Communion as well as the Special Memorial Celebration at 10 a.m., when the Collect from the Burial Service was used with the Collects for the Day, and a special prayer in commemoration of those who had died on Gallipoli was used at the end of the Prayer for the Church Militant. The Bishop has issued advice to all the clergy of the Diocese, and recommended the form of service to be used, and as nearly as possible these recommendations were carried out.

The services at the Cathedral and at Darwin were very inspiring. The Cathedral was packed for the celebration at 10 a.m., and there was a large number of communicants then, as there had been at 7 a.m. At the 10 a.m. service there was a Church parade of the troops of the garrison on the island. The procession marched through the town before the service, displaying the flags of the Allies, and formed up again after the service, while the trumpeter sounded the Last Post.

At Darwin the Administrator and most of the public officials, as well as the Mayor and the Councillors, were present at the service at 10 a.m.

In most of the centres of population in the Diocese there was a public meeting in the evening, when the programme recommended by the Brisbane Committee was carried out, and the clergy took their part in the civil, as they had given a lead in the religious observance of the day. On the whole Queensland can be congratulated on the arrangements that were made and carried out for the observance of the first Anzac Day. It was a good model for any similar occasion in the future.

The alms at all the services in the Churches of the Diocese of Carpentaria on Anzac Day were given to the Soldiers' Help Fund, Brisbane. At Cooktown the alms at the Wednesday evening services during Lent were given to the same fund.

The Bishop of Corea writes in the Mission Field for April, 1916:—"The Native Ministry has taken root, and the ordination of one Japanese and two Corean deacons in 1914 was followed by the raising of one of them, Mark Kim, to the priesthood—our first Corean priest—on St. Thomas' Day, 1915. And side by side with this it is gratifying to note that the Christians are steadily maintaining their endeavours to create such a Native Clergy Sustentation Fund as will save the Church in Corea from the shameful expedient of making its Clergy dependent on subsidies and grants from England. There is, moreover, good reasons to hope for further ordinations in 1916."

Transport Chaplains.

The Chaplain General (Church of England) for the forces is the Archbishop of Perth, the Most Reverend C. O. L. Riley, and on him rests the responsibility of making arrangements for the supply of Chaplains for our soldiers, who are members of the Church of England. When War broke out the Archbishop offered to provide a Chaplain without pay for each transport on which no Church of England Chaplain was sailing. This offer was refused by headquarters on the ground of want of accommodation. The Archbishop has several times suggested that there should be three Chaplains on every Transport—one each for Church of England, for Roman Catholics, and for Nonconformists—and this has been refused, except on hospital ships, on which the Minister promised there should be three as above. Once again the Archbishop wishes to urge the claims of the soldiers who belonged to the Church to have their rights recognised. And he has written to know how many priests he can depend upon from this Diocese to supply the need, should the Department consent to what the Church claims for her sons. If the Department will grant our just rights, it is important that the Archbishop should know on whom he can call should the occasion arise. In response to his request, I have sent out the following letters to the clergy of the Diocese, one to ask the clergy if they are willing to go as transport Chaplains, should they be called upon; the other to explain to the parishioners what the position will be if the parish is to remain vacant for a time because the parish priest has gone to special war duty. I felt justified in taking a strong line, because of the loyal response to an appeal I made at the Eater meeting in Cooktown. Those present were quite prepared to let the Rector go, and would pay his stipend while on duty, and would do everything possible to keep up the services and the work of the Church during the absence of the Rector.

My dear.....

Would you be willing—if called upon—to go as a chaplain on a transport?

There would be no pay from the Government, except passage and mess expenses.

If you are willing to go, will you please call a meeting of your people and read to them the enclosed letter, and if arrangements can be made for you to be absent from the parish please let me know by wire as soon as possible, so that I can send your name to the Chaplain-General.

Yours sincerely,
HENRY,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

Bishop's House,
Thursday Island,
May 19th, 1916.

My Dear People,

I have had a letter from the Archbishop of Perth, who is our representative as Chaplain-General of the Forces. He asks me for the names of priests who are able to go as Chaplains on the transports, as he wishes once again to press upon the military authorities our right to have a priest to minister to the soldiers who belong to the Church of England. We are bound in loyalty to the Church, and for the sake of our own men, to do everything possible to provide chaplains: we cannot agree that the ministrations of Nonconformist chaplains are sufficient for our people. We do not ask for any stipend to be paid to these chaplains; all we ask is that they shall have their passages and their mess expenses provided, and seeing that the Church of England is the largest religious body in the Commonwealth, and that the majority of recruits are Church of England men, we are not demanding anything for which we have not a just claim.

I have written to ask your parish priest if I may send his name to the Chaplain-General as one who is ready to go if called upon, but this is possible only if you are prepared to make the necessary sacrifices. We as Churchmen must show that we are prepared to tax ourselves, to make sacrifices for our principles, and for the sake of our soldiers.

(1) You must be prepared to be content with such lay ministrations as can be arranged, and to use them loyally. I think it will be possible in every place to find a layman whom I could license as a lay reader, so that there would be always opportunities for worship so far as a layman can provide such. I would myself come to the parish when I could—but that would not be often—to minister the Sacraments, and we may be quite sure that our Heavenly Father will provide otherwise such spiritual blessings as our souls need, when we deny ourselves the ordinary means of grace for the sake of the Church and for the good of others. As we live in a Diocese of great distances, and our parishes are isolated, I would ask those who wish to be married to wait till the parish priest returns, but if for sufficient reason that is not possible, I would advise civil marriage before the Registrar, and when opportunity offers for the parties to have their marriage blessed by a priest. All our people know, I hope, that lay baptism is valid, and that in cases of emergency any Christian may baptise a child, the essentials being that water is poured on the child and the words used "I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," so no child need die unbaptised during the absence of the parish priest.

(2) You must be prepared to pay your parish priest his stipend while he is doing duty as a chaplain. It is important that the authorities should not be able to refuse our rightful claims on the score of expense, even if we may think we ought not to be asked to pay this. Let us tax ourselves for our principles. Our people have made a noble response to the calls on them to provide material things for the sick and the suffering and for the soldiers. I am sure you will respond to a call for the spiritual needs of our men, and for the principles involved in providing them with the ministrations of the Church.

I would ask you to remember that we, the Bishops of the Church, felt that we could not give permission for priests to enlist as ordinary soldiers; many of them were quite ready to do so had they received permission. It follows that they ought to be ready, and we and you ought to do everything possible to enable those who are called, to do their duty as priests. We as Christians believe that spiritual care and training are even more important for our men than the military training which is known to be essential. It is moral and spiritual force that is most important, and moral principles derive their effective force from the religion of Jesus Christ our Lord. All through life and in all experience this is true; it is especially true in what we honestly believe is a war for truth, righteousness, and liberty.

I do not know that we in this missionary diocese will be called upon to send any of our priests—the need may be supplied from other dioceses; but I feel that we are bound by every solemn duty to be ready if we are called upon, and we ought to do all we can to strengthen the hands of the Chaplain-General in his efforts to provide for the needs of our soldiers who are members of the Church.

So convinced am I of our duty in this matter that I am prepared to give leave of absence to every priest to go from the Diocese, excepting the one at Thursday Island and those who are working among the Torres Straits Islanders. As I have to be constantly travelling, there must be some one at Thursday Island to attend to Diocesan business in my absence. We have lately taken over the spiritual care of the Islanders in Torres Straits; it would be wrong to neglect the teaching of them; and moreover, there is not the same claim upon them for self-sacrifice in spiritual things for the sake of the Church and of our soldiers as there is upon Christians of our own race.

If we can by the grace of God make the sacrifices we are called to make in these days, the Church will be strengthened; and we may be sure that we shall receive blessings from these times of trouble and sorrow such as we can hardly realise. Here is an opportunity for us to show that we believe in the principles of Church order, an opportunity to realise ourselves what those principles are, and to make the world recognise them.

May God grant us grace to use the opportunities He gives us.

I am,
Yours faithfully in Christ Jesus our Lord,
HENRY,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

FINANCIAL POSITION OF THE O.M.A.—The income of the N.S.W. Church Missionary Association for the year ended 31st March, 1916, amounted to £7,419 5s. 7d., as against £6,652 13s. 9d. in the preceding year (which was itself a record). Owing to the extension of the work at home and abroad, the expenditure for the year also shows an increase, but the money received is sufficient to meet all liabilities.

The Sub-Dean.

The Sub-Dean of the Cathedral, the Rev. E. J. Nash, has accepted the offer of work in the Diocese of Willochra, and will be leaving Thursday Island about the end of September to take up his duties as Rector of Gladstone-cum-Laura, in South Australia.

Mr. Nash came to Thursday Island in answer to an appeal made by Bishop White, and he was licensed as Sub-Dean and Vicar of the Cathedral Parish on April 2nd, 1910, so that he has been in charge of the Cathedral Parish for more than six years. Bishop White asked him to come for three years. We have no right to complain that he and Mrs. Nash have decided to go to a climate less trying than Thursday Island.

Mr. and Mrs. Nash left a most delightful country living in England to take up work in this Diocese, and though we may well hope they have found some compensations, it is necessary to know what a country parish in England is like to realise the difference in life and work and in climate. It would hardly be possible to imagine a greater contrast than that between Leatherhead and Thursday Island.

It is of course quite impossible for one—a comparatively new comer into the Diocese—to say much of the work of the Sub-Dean and of Mrs. Nash in Thursday Island. I can only express my own gratitude for all the help he has given me, and I realize it all the more when I consider with dismay the many things which have depended on the Sub-Dean, and for which new arrangements have to be made. Perhaps no one—not even Bishop White—knows so much about the work of the Diocese as Mr. Nash does. All the business and all the business arrangements are at his fingers' ends. He was responsible for much of the administration even when the Bishop was in the Diocese, for the Bishop has to be absent so much from Thursday Island, and mails are so infrequent to outside places, that much must be left to the Sub-Dean, and he has never failed. Of his love for the Cathedral itself and his keen interest in all its associations, travellers who pass through the port know well. I have asked the commissaries to find a man to take the place of Mr. Nash. It is not an easy thing to do.—H.C.

Personal.

The Sub-Dean and Mrs. Nash returned from their holiday trip to Victoria by the "Aki Maru" on Monday, April 8th.

Mrs. Done and her two children arrived from Sydney by the "Aki Maru" on April 8th, and left by the "Dogai" on Tuesday, April 9th, for a short trip round the nearer islands. Mr. and Mrs. Done with their children left for Murray Island on Tuesday, May 16th. They had a rough trip out—the last trip of the "Dogai"—and after calling at Yam and Yorke Islands, Good Friday and Easter were spent at Darnley Island, and the party arrived at Murray Island on Easter Tuesday. After spending five weeks there, Mrs. Done and the children returned to Thursday Island for a day or two, and left for Mabuiag on Thursday, June 1st. The Wyben Pearling Company have kindly given their house at Mabuiag for Mr. Done's use while he is building the new Mission House on the island.

The Rev. C. Hall, Rector of Normanton, suffered from attacks of asthma during the wet season. Last year he was free from anything of the kind during the dry season, and it is hoped that he will be free from them for some months to come.

The Rev. James Tweedie was inducted by the Bishop as Rector of Cooktown on Sunday, May 21st. Mr. Tweedie has been licensed as a surrogate.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson left Laura for a trip through the Peninsula on Wednesday, May 24th. He hopes to visit all the cattle stations and the mining camps, and to get to Mitchell Mission Station about the end of August. He expects to be away three months on this trip.

Mrs. Luscombe is staying at Bishop's House in Thursday Island.

Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Walker, of Badu, were the guests of the Bishop and Mrs. Newton while they were in Thursday Island on their return from South by the "Aki Maru" in April.

Mr. and Mrs. Matthews from Trubanan are expected to be in Thursday Island on a visit in July.

Nearly all the young men in Normanton have enlisted.

Presentation of a Signet Ring to the Bishop.

As soon as the Bishop was appointed to the See, a desire was expressed to make him some suitable presentation from the Diocese, and it was decided to procure for him an episcopal ring. The Church Stores, Sydney, were commissioned to have the ring made, and it was blessed by the Sub-Dean, and presented to the Bishop during Evensong on Sunday, April 16th.

Nearly every district in the Diocese had contributed to the purchase of this most appropriate gift. There seems to be some doubt as to the exact meaning of the symbolism of the ring—whether it symbolises Authority, or whether it symbolises Faith—but in either case it is appropriate that the ring should come from the Diocese as a whole. Needless to say, the Bishop is very grateful for the kindness and thoughtfulness of his people. The stone in the ring is an amethyst, on which is engraved the arms of the See.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop left Thursday Island by the "Montoro" on Friday, June 9th, for Darwin. He expects to be two months in the Northern Territory and to be able to visit Pine Creek, the Roper River Mission Station, and other outlying places. On his return in August he will pay another visit to the Torres Straits Islands for confirmations, and to dedicate the Church at Mabuiag. At the end of August he hopes to visit the Mission Station on the Mitchell River.

At Croydon the Sale of work held on Easter Monday resulted in about £50 being raised for the Church funds.

Nearly every parish and district ended the year on March 31st with a credit balance to their accounts. The exceptions are Croydon and Mossman. The credit balances were not so large as at the beginning of the year in most cases, which means that income did not meet expenditure.

Thursday Island.

The Annual Parish Meeting was held on May 4th. The attendance was smaller than usual. The Churchwardens' report shewed a considerable fall in the income both from offertories and from the Treasury collections. The credit balance of £50 was due to the large balance carried forward from the previous year.

The Vicar nominated Mr. K. O. Mackenzie as his Warden, and the meeting elected Mr. W. M. Lee-Bryce as People's Warden. It was decided that only three non-official Councillors should be appointed, and Messrs. A. Sullivan, G. Clarke, and O. G. Oxley were chosen.

The Bishop gave a lecture in the Town Hall, Thursday Island, on "Some Lessons of the War." There was a large attendance of people, who listened attentively while the Bishop spoke for about an hour and a half on various matters which the War had brought into prominence.

The Bishop would be very glad if any subscribers to the Carpentarian who have the following numbers and can spare them would send them to him, address Bishop's House, Thursday Island. The numbers are wanted to complete sets for binding. A set is wanted for the Diocesan Library, and the Bishop of Willochra wishes to complete his sets. January 1908, January 1909, April 1909, October 1909, April 1910, January 1913, April 1914, July 1915, October 1915.

Some friends of the Bishop in England, who have been interested in the New Guinea Mission, have sent the Bishop a large supply of paper and envelopes—a very acceptable gift. The Rev. A. R. Chignell, the Organising Secretary of the New Guinea Mission in England, is responsible for the kindly thought.

"The first definite application in detail of the principle of self-support has been made in Mota. The principle has been clear from the earliest days of Bishop Patteson. The time had come when there should be further developments. The Mota people now entirely support their own teachers, and I hope they will have a small contribution to send to work outside their island. It has always been taught that among the first contributions the people of any island make is that which is sent for missionary work at a distance."—Bishop of Melanesia in the Annual Report of the Melanesian Mission.

The Bishop's Visit to the Northern Territory.

I left Thursday Island on Friday, June 9th, by the steamer "Mataram" to pay my first visit to the Northern Territory. The weather across the Gulf of Carpentaria was all that could be desired, and on the Sunday there were two services on board; the collection at Evensong was given to the Melanesian Mission as the day was the Festival of the Mission—the Feast of St. Barnabas—as well as Whit Sunday. We arrived at Darwin on Monday evening, and I was met by Mr Massey (the Rector of Darwin), the Churchwardens, and other officers of the Church. In the evening there was a meeting of the Parochial Council, when the members gave me a welcome to the capital of the Northern Territory. On Tuesday I called on the Administrator and had a long talk with him about work for the aborigines, in which His Excellency takes a great interest. That evening the people of Darwin shewed what they could do in the way of offering a welcome to their Bishop. There was a very large gathering of people in the Town Hall, when the Rector, Mr Barnes (Churchwarden), and Mr Roberts (Lay Reader), were more than kind in the way in which they expressed their pleasure in having their Bishop amongst them, and I took the opportunity of speaking of the lessons of the war and the supreme need of the teachings of the Church in these days. Unfortunately Mr Kelsey (the Mayor of Darwin) was laid up and could not be present. The Administrator and Mr Carey (the Government Secretary), and other of the Government officials, as well as Father Fanning (the Roman Catholic parish priest), the Rev. Mr Pratt (the Methodist minister), the Rev. Mr Watson (of the Methodist Mission, who was leaving at daylight the next morning to begin Mission work on Goulburn Island), were present at the social gathering. What the ladies had done at short notice—they had not known for certain that I was coming until a wire was received the previous Saturday—was marvellous, and there is no doubt about the appreciation of their work! Mr Massey saw that I had an opportunity of seeing everything that is to be seen about Darwin: and we visited the hospital, the compound for aboriginals, and the new meatworks which are being erected by Vestey Brothers, besides the gaol, the gardens, and some very beautiful spots on the various points along the harbour. There are few things more beautiful than the cliffs that are passed as one enters the harbour at Darwin.

On Sunday, June 18th (Trinity Sunday) I celebrated the Holy Communion at 10 a.m. and preached. Mr Massey had been celebrant at the early service. I spoke to the children in the Sunday School, and took part in a civic memorial service at the Town Hall in memory of and in honour of Lord Kitchener. A form of service had been drawn up and printed. The Methodist minister said the opening prayers, the Roman Catholic parish priest read the lesson, the Anglican parish priest said the closing prayers, His Excellency the Administrator gave one address, I gave the other and pronounced the Benediction. There was a large and representative gathering of citizens to do honour to the memory of a great soldier, a true patriot, a sincere Christian. I preached at Evensong.

Mr Carey (the Government Secretary) and Mr Worgan (the Chief Surveyor) were very kind in making arrangements for me to get to the Roper River Mission Station. It took a few days to get everything fixed up, and I left Darwin by train on Thursday, June 22nd, for Pine Creek. Mr Massey went with me as far as Pine Creek, as he spends the last Sunday in that centre every month. Friday was taken up in getting everything ready for a start, and we got away on Saturday morning for a journey that was to take nearly five weeks. We had a trap and four horses with all our tucker and other necessaries for the road. An aboriginal boy to look after the horses was picked up at Pine Creek, and we had to take him on the trap for a few miles till we picked up a horse, saddle and bridle for him at one of the survey camps. We could only be sure of the one team of horses to do nearly 700 miles, so we could not afford to lose any time, and it would be necessary to nurse them all we could. I was most fortunate in having with me Keith Marsh to be the coachman, cook, companion and guide. He knows all about horses and is a good driver; he knows all about the road, for he was working with surveyors on the Roper; he was never stuck in finding something to carry us through difficulties, and we had some on the road; he is an excellent cook and a good shot, so we fared well, and it is no surprise that we had a pleasant and a successful trip, made under the best of conditions. There was a Federal party in the Northern Territory to inspect the route for the railway, and to gather information about the need and the advisability of carrying the line on from the Katherine River to Mataranka (Bitter Springs). They travelled by motor car a much greater distance than we did in a much shorter time, but I do not know that they had a better time than we had.

At the Katherine, where there is a store, a police station, and a telegraph office, we had service on the night of Monday, June 26th. From here on the country began to improve—it had been poor from Pine Creek to the Katherine. On Wednesday, June 28th, we arrived at Maranboy, which is a mining centre (tin), and where there is a fine battery erected by the Government. There seems to be fair prospects on the field, but wages are high, and living is expensive, the cost of carriage by road teams from Katherine, over 100 miles, being very high. That will be improved when the line is opened to the Katherine, and things will be still better if the line is carried on. Indeed the hope for settlement seems to depend most of all on mining development. The people at Maranboy had suffered a very great deal from fever, indeed we found as we went along that there had been a great deal of sickness everywhere past the Katherine. It was partly due to hard living, and also to the fact that there had been an abnormal wet season; a very heavy "wet," but not a long one, and also to the fact that people do not know how to take care of themselves, will not take simple precautions, and do not act on advice as to treatment. I saw a man and his wife in a camp, both laid up with fever, the camp a few yards from a lagoon, with plenty of anopheles about, a family from New Guinea had lived there, and had had fever in the camp. Neither man nor woman had a mosquito net rigged—the man had his under his head as a pillow! We had met a motor car on the road with two patients on board being taken to the hospital at Pine Creek. The motor had been sent from Darwin to bring these men into the hospital.

We had a service at Maranboy, but it had not been possible to send word that we were coming, and many of the people were sick, so we had not a large congregation. Two days brought us to Mataranka, and on this road we saw the evidences of the high floods of January. Running down the valley of the Beswick, which is very wide with the course of the river winding through it, we saw flood drift nearly a mile away from the river bed, 12 feet in the trees, and we saw these signs of flood all the way down the Roper. The whole county must have been one great sea of water for miles and miles. I was not able to go to Mataranka homestead, which is four miles from the crossing of the Roper at Bitter Springs. We dare not put an extra eight miles on our horses. Mr. Palmer, the manager of the Government sheep farm, came out on Saturday morning, and he kindly took wires to send for me—this was the last chance of letting people know how we were doing. The manager goes out to the overland wire, about four miles in the other direction from the homestead—on certain days of the week—and gets into communication by telephone with the Telegraph Station. Mr. Palmer gave us a telegram for Mrs. Rogers, of Paddy's Lagoon Station—which is near the Roper Bar—and said he had sent on telegrams by native boys a week ago.

I had heard that messages were sent to Darwin to tell Mrs. Rogers her son—and only child—was laid up with appendicitis in Melbourne where the lad is at school; and I had suggested that later news could be sent to Mataranka for me to take on. Saturday brought us to Elsey Station—the homestead at McMinn's Bar—not the homestead which Mrs. Aeneas Gun has made famous, that has been moved twice since her day. Here we joined Mrs. Little, the wife of the manager, and her seven children—Mr. Little was away mustering.

We had prayers that night, and the next morning I catechised the children and gave them a lesson, and I was more than pleased to find that they had been taught something of their religion, and taught it well.

It turned out that the family had lived on the York Peninsula, and that Mr. Wilkinson had taught them when on his visits, and had got for them some books which they had read—Peep of Day and Line upon Line; also they have a good mother. Mrs. Little had been on Elsey for about ten months, and had had as hard a time of it as most women can put up with in a life time. She had had her husband down with fever and beriberi, all the children with fever, beriberi, and blight. They were flooded out on Christmas Day, and found just one small spot which the flood waters did not cover. Teams had been blocked, and they were short of rations for some months. Mr. Little had decided that Elsey was no place for a woman and children, so the family was to go back to Brisbane; they travelled on the same boat as I did on my return from Darwin to Thursday Island. Mrs. Little had two babies—twins—to be baptized, and I arranged to baptise them on the return journey when the father might be home.

We met Mr. Little a few miles from the Station, and he said he thought he would be able to let us have some spare horses to spell our own. It would mean riding, and we must go on to Hodgson Downs to get saddles and packs. He said he would bring the horses on to our camp that night, if he could get them. He did so, and we were able to leave our team at Hodgson while we rode the last fifty-two miles to the Roper Bar (Leichhardt's Bar).

At every place we heard of the sufferings and the sickness that had been caused by the abnormal floods, and the consequent privations—eight men had died on the road from Borooloola to Hodgson Downs, about 200 miles. The Elsey team had been away eight months, and we met it on the way to the Station. There had been a chapter of accidents. The Government steamer was burnt last year. Stores were sent in boats from Thursday Island last December. Heavy floods came—the highest known—just at the time the stores were landed; much was lost; teams could not travel, what could be packed on horseback was sent away, and the teams waited for the next steamer, which left Darwin in May, but which had to put back to port, and did not arrive at the Roper till the end of June, and at the Mac-Arthur till July. The flour that came in December was bad and made worse by the weather; most of the salt was lost, and for some time some of the people were living on a meat diet only.

The season had been abnormal, fever and beri-beri were worse than usual. Of course, if people would take the trouble, they could grow vegetables—some of the best I have seen are grown in the Northern Territory; and on some stations, and on the Mission Stations, they do it—but the ordinary white man will not be bothered, it seems, to take the trouble. He is satisfied with beef and damper and luxuries, in the way of some tinned stuff.

We arrived at the Roper Bar on Thursday, July 6th, and found no one at the Police Station, so I went on four miles, to Paddy's Lagoon, to give Mrs. Rogers the telegram I had brought from Mataranka. We got hold of a blackboy, and I sent him on to the Mission Station with a note to Mr. Warren, asking him to bring up the launch for me. I found the boys sent from Mataranka had not arrived at Paddy's Lagoon, and that Mrs. Rogers had received no news of her son. She herself had only arrived home the day before from a long trip, the second in three months, to take delivery of cattle; her husband was away, taking fats to Queensland. I had to warn her there was bad news for her, but she rose to the occasion, arranged to send boys away the next day with wires, and finally decided to go herself, a ride of about 130 miles each way across country, to get news. Telegrams came pouring in before she got away, from Mataranka, and from Daly Waters (about 230 miles), but nothing so late as what I had brought. She took her ride, and nearly knocked up her horses—but not herself—and had the satisfaction of hearing that her boy was well and back at school. As she went across country, we missed her on the return journey. When one thinks of what women do and suffer uncomplainingly in the Never-Never, one cannot wonder that the Anzacs are what they are, that they do not understand impossibilities.

The next day Mr. Warren came up in the launch—twenty-five miles—and took me to the Mission Station, where I spent four days. I was able to see a good deal of the work of the Station, some of the effects of the flood, the efforts that are being made to re-build the Station, and some of the discomforts, in consequence of the flood, which the staff put up with uncomplainingly. The work is very difficult, and the results disappointing. They have fifty-one people living on the Station, and seventeen of these are half-castes. There seems to be few aborigines in the district, and Mr. Warren thinks it may be possible to open another station on an island or on the coast, where there are more people to be influenced, and more hope of exercising discipline. The staff of the Mission has made a noble struggle in the face of very difficult conditions. The opinion seems to be that the aborigines are dying out on the River, and there are always difficulties, some of which cannot well be avoided, when the aborigines and the white race are in close contact. Apart from other evils, cattle must not be disturbed; hunting grounds and lagoons where there are lilies and fish, which the aborigines need, are shut off from the people, and there are disputes and difficulties and troubles. The only hope for effective work, which is especially difficult with the aborigines of Australia, is to get amongst them, where and before they are contaminated by intercourse with the vices of the white race, and there is some chance of strengthening the character to stand the shock of intercourse when it does come. At the same time, it is to be hoped that there will be a small centre on the River. It seems that the people have learnt to look upon the Station as a home, and a place of refuge for the old people to come to and spend their last days. Thirty-seven have been buried in the cemetery close to the Mission Station. It would be a work of Christian charity, and some slight repayment of a debt due by Australia, if there were a home for the old who have lost their means of livelihood and have nowhere else to end their days. It might be possible to take the younger ones away, where they can be better looked after, trained and taught, while all that can be done is done to smooth the pillows of the aged when they come to die. Whether the O.M.A. would feel justified in starting such a place is open to doubt. The point is, that there is a use for the present site to do a work of true Christian charity, while work of a more hopeful nature might be developed elsewhere. The work that has been done in the School is very good indeed, and shews that the aboriginal is capable of very real intellectual development.

On the Sunday I celebrated the Holy Communion for the staff, and on Monday night began a series of addresses in connection with a Quiet Day for the staff, which were continued on the Tuesday; and on Wednesday, July 12th, Mr. Warren took me up to the bar and we began our return journey to Pine Creek. I had a very happy time at the Mission station, and I came away with a very real sense of the devotion of the staff of the Mission. All the members were in fairly good health, though they had all had fever, and their good health is due to a great extent to the garden which provides vegetables. Perhaps people will realize how bravely difficulties have been faced and overcome when they know that the flood destroyed the garden and carried everything away. The sweet potato beds have all been developed from one sweet potato Mr. Joynt brought back in his pack when he returned from a trip to the Katherine to send away wires about the damage done by the flood in January last. The launch was invaluable during the time of the flood. Not only were all the staff and the children taken to a place of safety—to the cemetery, the highest piece of ground for miles around, as they discovered—but large supplies of stores were removed and kept safe from damage, and the Mission was able to give help to others who had lost more. The engine for the launch had arrived a couple of weeks before the flood and was landed without a shaft—it was over-carried to the East and has not turned up yet—but Mr. Warren made a shaft out of a crowbar, and with that the engine worked well; it was ready two days before the flood came down at its highest, and has been working well ever since. Mr. Warren has been for a long trip down the river—70 miles—and along the coast and to the Islands off the coast, having travelled about 500 miles. Mr. Joynt was away when I arrived at the station. He had gone to prospect for native tribes to the Rose River, 100 miles to the north of the Roper. We managed our return journey safely. At the Elsey I baptized the twin sons of Mr and Mrs Little. We had another service at the Katherine, and we arrived at Pine Creek with our horses nearly done, on Wednesday, July 26th. I stayed at Pine Creek for the Sunday services, for which Mr. Massey came down, it being his Sunday there, and returned to Darwin on Tuesday, August 1st, to find I had missed a boat to Thursday Island by about six hours! There was nothing to be done—except answer letters, and a big mail had been sent on from Thursday Island—but wait till the "Montoro" came in on August 10th, two or three days late. It was no good worrying about the fact that I had to get away to the Torres Straits Islands on August 14th; that there was a great deal to be done in the way of trying to learn some of the many things the Sub-Dean knows about diocesan matters before he leaves for Willochra; that if possible a visit had to be got in to Mitchell River before General Synod—eats up part of the year when one can travel in the North. One could only make the best of things, as the Missionaries at the Roper were doing under worse conditions.

I must thank the Administrator, the Government Secretary, and the Chief Surveyor for making it possible to do as much as I did in the Northern Territory on my first visit to that part of the Diocese. I saw a good deal, I learnt much, but only a small fraction of the difficulties of the work of the Church in those parts. There are problems to be tackled, and they can only be solved if we can find priests with a feeling of sympathy for lonely people, and who are willing to face difficulties and endure hardships as the Roper River Missionaries do, and as do those who are making a bold bid to use the waste places of the large slice of Territory the Commonwealth of Australia is called upon to develop. We can do nothing immediately; it is wiser to wait till the line is opened to the Katherine, and we see what developments may be in the near future, but the Church has to face the duty of ministering to the scattered people of the Northern Territory.

Bequest to the Diocese.

The late Mr. Robert Christison of Lammermoor, who did so much for the Church in North Queensland, and of whom an In Memoriam notice was printed in the Carpentarian of April 1st, 1916, left the sum of £600 in trust to the Bishop of Willochra, late Bishop of Carpentaria. The primary object of the benefaction was for support of a Bush Brotherhood in the Diocese of Carpentaria, but the Bishop of Willochra had certain discretionary powers allowed him in connection with the trust, and he has decided that Mr. Christison's wish will be carried out most nearly by applying the interest of the money to grants in aid of the stipends of the clergy in the Diocese of Carpentaria. We are very grateful for this help. On the whole the parishes loyally fulfil their obligations to the clergy, but the incomes are small, and anything that enables the Diocese to increase them is a real act of charity, an act of love.

Missionary Tracts for the Times

The Central Board of Missions in England has published, through S.P.C.K., four more of the series of "Missionary Tracts for the Times," and the latest number maintains the high standard of the earlier ones.

In No. 5, The Church, the Organ of Redemption, the Rev. Tissington Tatlow describes the failure of the Church to influence and to lead the nation. He points out that what is needed is the conversion of the Church, that we may be ready to receive the soldiers and sailors who have passed through spiritual experience. Clergy, Church-workers, Church officials, need repentance for their failures, that the Church may fulfil her purpose. The whole of life must be claimed for God, and religion must influence the whole. There is needed a renewal of personal religion, together with a fuller realisation of the corporate life of the Church.

No. 6.—Australian Missions and the War is by the Bishop of Willochra, who points out how the War has had an educating influence upon Australia, has widened our horizon, and made such things as freedom, honour, loyalty, practical realities; all this must have a great influence in changing the attitude of the Australian towards the responsibility of the Empire to the subject races, and so indirectly it will strengthen such secondary motives for interest in Missions.

The Bishop gives an account of the agencies for Missionary work in connection with the Church in Australia, and of the work of the various Missions. When he speaks of work amongst the aborigines, the Bishop speaks as an expert, and it comes as a shock to know that in his opinion not more than 5,000 aborigines come under the influence of all Christian Missions. He estimates the total number of aborigines as 55,000, so we are influencing less than ten per cent—and this is a very great advance on what was done 25 years ago.

The War has not affected finance, the sum raised in Australia for Missions has been increasing during the two years of the War. We may hope that some of those who have passed through real spiritual experience will offer themselves for the conquest of the world for Christ, and as we have been glad to save Australia, and have believed our country was worth saving, perhaps we shall realise the debt we owe to the remnant that is left of those to whom the country originally belonged. The Bishop sees a bright future for the work of the Church in the Torres Straits. He also gives an interesting notice of the work in New Guinea and in Melanesia, but the most important thing of all in his opinion is that Christianity should grip and hold "the East"—the opportunity for that is now—and for that most important work Australia has special responsibilities, because she is commercially brought into close contact with the East, and the Australian has special qualifications for the task.

In No. 7.—The Supply of Clergy, the Bishop of Lebombo demands a high standard of training for the Clergy, and great as the need is he will have no hurry over the preparation of the men who have found their vocation.

He warns us of the great danger of having different grades amongst the Clergy. The weakness of Missionary Colleges is that they do not and cannot supply men of experience, and yet it is just such men that the Church in new lands needs most of all. There is an important duty on the part of parents to discover and nurse a sense of vocation in their sons, and on the part of the Church to supply the means of training those who are found to have a vocation that they may do the work to which God has called them. The Bishop is convinced that the Church can discover vocations, can nurse them, can train those who are called. He has a noble vision of the whole Church striving to do this and succeeding, and of the consequences in the fuller realization of the honour and dignity of service for God and an eagerness to perform it. And the Priest when trained and ready to serve will, indeed, be under orders. He will not pick and choose his work to please himself, but being filled with a desire for the honour and glory of God, he will be ready to sacrifice his private feelings to that end, and will go where he is sent. The vision is a noble one and an inspiring one, and as the Bishop puts it before us we can feel that it is within the realm of practical politics, and indeed in our own Province of Queensland a real attempt is made to work it out.

The General Editor—the Rev. J. O. F. Murray—is responsible for No. 8 of the series—"A Missionary-hearted Church." The writer points out how important it is for us to realize the meaning of these days. They are days of Visitation. The Lord comes to save and to bless even through judgment—but there is also a danger lest we miss the opportunity and fail to respond, and the result of that is not merely loss of blessing but a hardening of the heart which leads to ruin. It is well to remember that a Divine Judgment is no occasion for a man to judge his neighbour. It is a call to him to judge himself, and that not mechanically but by an honest study of the facts. Mr. Murray points out the very real increase in Missionary interest and in intercession for some years previous to the War. He emphasises the widening of the horizon of the Church, and the realization of the fact that her witness was world-wide, and the War has suddenly made us realize that we have failed to Christianize ourselves—and that we are not ready to bear our witness, we are not instruments fit for God to use. So there comes the call to us to repent—to repent not only that we may be saved, but that we may be worthy to serve.

The Bishop-Elect of Ballarat.

The Reverend Canon Maxwell-Gumbleton, Vicar of Chippenham, England, and Hon. Canon of Bristol, has been elected Bishop of Ballarat. The Bishop-Elect is a graduate of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and has been working in the West of England since his ordination in 1895. He is forty-four years of age and is married; his eldest son is at the Front, and his second son is at Winchester College. If the Bishop-Elect can get out to Australia in time, he will be consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne on All Saints' Day, November 1st, 1916.

The Driving Force of Ideas.

Of the many lessons which we are learning in these days none is perhaps more important than the tremendous power ideas have upon human life, and conduct, and character. They are the forces which have the greatest driving power in their influence on men and women. And it is not at all necessary that the ideas should correspond to truth and reality, although, in the long run, they can only last, and remain effective in proportion as they are congruous with, or expressions of that which is eternally and absolutely true.

What is it which makes the German peoples so ready and so willing to make the enormous sacrifices they are making, to bear all that they are suffering, to face death unflinchingly? For we cannot but admit they do these things, and it has been a shock to some people to find that they do bear and suffer, and that, in many cases at least, uncomplainingly, gladly and willingly. Nay, perhaps even to a greater extent than we of the British race are doing. There are people who thought only true religion could give the power for self-sacrifice and devotion, and perhaps they were inclined to argue that power to endure and to suffer was a proof of the truth of the convictions held, and not on the fact that they are held to be true.

The German peoples have been taught, and they have become convinced, that they are "the people," that their form of civilisation is the form which is best suited to the advancement of the human race, that they are chosen by God for the purpose of bringing about the happiness of the race, and that they are justified in forcing their way, and of acquiring the supremacy they believe to be theirs. Their belief in themselves as the supermen, and in their kultur as the one thing necessary for the future of the human race, and in themselves as the chosen of God for the advancement of humanity, is the power which enables them to do, to suffer, to endure, while certain deductions from their beliefs justifies them in those acts that have brought them shame and dishonour in the eyes of all that have not lost faith in Christian ideals. The German peoples have been so definitely taught and drilled to believe these things, and their duty and their destiny to accomplish their ideals, that they are ready to suffer and to die for them; they look on those who thwart their will and purpose as enemies of the race, and more especially do they hate the British as the great stumbling block to the carrying out of what they believe to be true, and to the fulfilling of their destiny.

We on our part are equally but perhaps less consciously acting on ideas of liberty and truth and righteousness. These we desire to see victorious, to be the effective forces for the development of the race, and because we did not believe in the need to force them on others we did not want the war which became necessary for Germany, since only by force could her ideas and ideals conquer. The war was a necessity for Germany from the nature of her ideas, to force them on the world, it became equally a necessity for us, when it was clear that only by fighting in defence of them could our ideas be preserved. Probably also the war was a necessity for Germany, because the German people are more logical and felt driven to carry out their ideas in practical life, to find the objective reality to correspond to and express the subjective idea, whereas we being less the slaves of logic, were prepared to live and let live until we were forced to defend that which alone made life worth living.

If then ideas have such driving force, one which moulds character and controls conduct, and if for a period at least the driving-power depends not so much on the truth of ideas believed in as in the belief that they are true, it is of supreme importance that we should hold very firmly ideas which are true, and that we should teach our children that which is true. It is not simply faith but a right faith that is needed. Our characters are formed in harmony with the truths we believe, and our conduct will be such as corresponds to and is the consequence of the ideas we hold to be true. There is plain duty for every Christian to see that he knows and believes, and that our children are taught the definite truths, the "Christian ideas," which we so really believe to be true, that we call upon our sons to die for them, and upon all to suffer for them.

We must get rid of that playing with an invertebrate Christianity which has no place for sincere honest conviction. We must absolutely reject the common opinion, "It does not matter what a man believes so long as he acts rightly." We must have nothing to do with the suggestion that one religion is as good as another, and that there is no need to teach Christian ideas to Mahomedan or Buddhist or Confucian. We may hope that there will be an end to the wandering after the teachings of Christian Science, Theosophy, Spiritism, and other modern substitutes for Traditional Christianity. All religions are not equally true, and it does matter what a man believes.

After all it seems we may be thankful that the Holy Spirit has preserved for the Church that wonderful document, the Quicunque Vult, called sometimes The Athanasian Creed. We may be thankful for those warnings of the need of a right faith, and of the danger of rejecting the Catholic Faith—it is a real danger.

Our belief in ideas moulds our character and directs our conduct in correspondence with those ideas—by their fruits ye shall know them. The ideas must be true and eternal if the characters are also to be true and eternal. Faith is an endowment of Human Nature; it is a great force, a great power; it can remove mountains; but the direction in which it works, the result it attains, depends upon the ideas on which it is fed—that of which we are convinced, what it is that we believe.

Visit to the Torres Straits Islands.

CONFIRMATION AT ADAM.

The Bishop, accompanied by Mrs. Newton, Mr. Matthews, and the Rev. J. J. E. Done, left Thursday Island on Monday, August 14th, to confirm candidates at Adam, to visit these islands he had not been able to get to on previous occasions, and to dedicate the Church at Mabuiag. This last deserves an article to itself.

A good run on Monday afternoon brought us to Adam—a village on the Island of Moa, opposite Badu, which is about three miles away—by sundown. Mr. Luscombe, who had been busy for some weeks preparing candidates at Badu, Adam, and St. Paul's, came on board to say that everything was ready for us, that the Badu people had been told to be over early in the morning, and to arrange about the service. It was decided to have the Confirmation at 9 o'clock the next morning, and Mr. Luscombe was sure the Badu people would be over by then. As a matter of fact they arrived at 6.30 a.m.!! Mrs. Zahel told us she had been up at 4 a.m. to get the Badu contingent ready! Perhaps they feared it might take a long time to work through the channels, and they wanted to be on the safe side. They were. However people have spent two days trying to get across, and have then given it up. There were things to be done, and we could not have the service before 9 a.m., even though it meant keeping the Badu people waiting. There were 43 candidates—8 males and 35 females—two of whom were sick, and could not come. For the first time the Bishop had to use an interpreter, and Joseph Lui, the captain of the "Herald," was pressed into the service. He, fortunately, knows both the dialects of the Straits as well as English.

It so happens that the Government Teacher at Badu is a Torres Straits Islander who works under the direction of Mrs. Zahel, and does very good work, but it means the people do not learn English in the way they do on islands where there is a white teacher. Mr. Luscombe had found it necessary to use an interpreter in preparing the candidates at Adam.

We were away again by mid-day, and arrived at Mabuiag at 4 p.m. Mrs. Newton went ashore to stay with Mrs. Done while the "Herald" went on to Yam and the New Guinea islands. Mr. Luscombe had joined the party at Adam. After staying at Mabuiag for an hour, we got away intending to go first to Dauan; but it was very hazy, and we could not pick up the Brothers for some time. When we did we found we had kept so far to windward that it was better to make Yam Island first, which we did late at night.

Next morning, Wednesday, August 16th, we went ashore immediately after breakfast, had service in the Church, called to see Mrs. Smallwood, the Government teacher, visited the school and the village. The village is a beautiful spot in the angle between two hills, the houses built under the coco palms, and the whole place beautifully clean and well cared for. The children reflect great credit on their teacher, their writing especially being wonderfully good, as well as their reading, and they answered questions intelligently. Mrs. Smallwood is the only white person living on the island, and she has very few visitors. It is a lonely life, under trying circumstances for a woman, but she has been very brave, and has done good work in the school and in the village.

We got up anchor about mid-day, and sailed for Dauan, the middle island of the three which lie along the New Guinea Coast, and are close to it. We anchored during the night, and Mr. Done sent word ashore that we would be there for service during the morning. It is a relief to be able to get a congregation at a moment's notice, as it is possible to do on the Islands. Dauan is a high island, the hill rising to about 450 feet; there is little foreshore, and the village is small. There is no school, but the Government teacher comes from Saibai from time to time. We had service in the little native Church—the first we have seen in the Islands built of native material (the one at Coconut Island is a School-Church). The concrete buildings and the sawn-timber buildings on the other islands are very good, and it is a comfort not to have to re-build every few years, as is necessary with a building of native material; but, on the other hand, a "Native" Church is much more in harmony with its surroundings, and much more beautiful. After the service, there was a "reception" in the village. A plaited mat of pandanus leaf had been spread under the coconut palms, and two seats placed on it, one for the Bishop and one for Mr. Done. They took their seats, and from a little distance, a procession started, singing a chant of native words to the tune of "God Save the King." The procession wound round from the back to the front of the two seated on the mat; and, as each pair came to the front, gifts of coconuts and eggs were placed on the mat. Each coconut had a flower stuck into the end and kept in position by a little pin of wood. The coconuts had been husked. When all had placed their presents, the Bishop made a speech thanking the people, and saying how glad he was to be able to see them at last. When all was over, the children carried the presents to the beach and they were taken off to the "Herald." Again we got away by mid-day, and were at Saibi in two or three hours. This is a long, low, swampy island. The village, a large one, is built on a narrow strip between the sea and a huge swamp. The houses are well built and on high piles; and, as the long string of houses follows the curve of the beach, the effect is very fine. Here is the one really hideous Church building in the Islands, a huge barn of galvanised iron, built on high piles. The only thing of any dignity is the approach to the building from the ground. It is like a large gangway, the steps are so close together, and as it is very wide and made of large timber, it has a certain dignity.

We paid our respects to Mr. Niebel, the Government Teacher, and then had service just at dusk. There was a large congregation, with very hearty singing. Fortunately the building is in bad repair and there must be a new one built before many years. There was a meeting of the Churchwardens after the service to discuss the conduct of one of the number. The others complained that he either did not come to Church when he was responsible for the services—or he did not come when the others were responsible. It seemed a little difficult to find out whether he shirked his own duty because he felt he was not being allotted a fair share of responsibility, or that he did not set a good example when others were responsible. There was much talking, and the man against whom the plaint was laid said he had been sick and that that was the reason he had been away, and it seemed he had been sick, but the others were a little uncertain as to the kind of sickness. There was probably something else behind it all, and we may know some day. The only thing the Bishop could do was to say there must be no jealousy or ill-feeling between Christians, and that the Churchwardens must set a good example in every way. That they should meet together every Friday and arrange the work for the following week, and that the eldest in years should be treated as senior, and anyone who could not do his work should report to the senior and ask for someone to take his place. At Saibai a wooden jetty has been built, which is very useful at high tide for landing from and for getting into the dinghy, but not so useful, though it does save a good deal of tramping through mud and slush at low water. The tide was out when we went on board in the dark, and we found the tide had treated the jetty with supreme contempt, and left it, if not dry, at least high out of the water.

On Friday morning we made an early start for Boigu, the third of the New Guinea Islands. We had to pass Dauan again, and get further to the North-West. We were able to get to Boigu by 11 a.m., and immediately went ashore. There was not much time to spare as we had to get away before the tide neaped us. Boigu is a low island with a small population, and most of the few people were away. At Dauan we had met one of the Boigu Churchwardens who was on his way to Mabuiag with others of the Island. He came back with us to do the honours of the Island. There were only a few girls, old women and babies in the village. We had service in the Church—a native building which is nearly tumbling down. The people are building a new Church of native material, which promises to be beautiful. At Boigu, Joseph acted as interpreter for the Bishop. There is no school, the teacher from Saibai comes from time to time and gives the children lessons.

We just got away from Boigu in time. When we got to the "Herald" we found she was aground. However, the anchor dragged her into a little deeper water, and we managed to get through the channel, and to anchor under a low mangrove island during the night. We got under sail early on Saturday morning, and arrived at Mabuiag before mid-day, one of many boats that came to the anchorage that day. There were twenty-eight coming from all parts by nightfall, and there were more to arrive on Sunday.

The Bishop has now visited all the larger Islands of the Straits. Everywhere the work of the Mission is making itself felt. Of course the great change is in those Islands where Mr. Done and Mr. Luscombe have been able to prepare people for Confirmation. About the end of September, when he has been round to visit the other Islands, and to give those who have been confirmed another opportunity of Communion, Mr. Done hopes to spend two months in the New Guinea Islands—Saibai, Dauan, and Boigu—and to prepare the people for Confirmation. It will be very difficult work, as some do not know much English, and there are three Islands to be worked at the same time. He hopes to use Joseph Liu, the captain of the "Herald," as interpreter, and also to give some instruction on one Island while Mr. Done is on another. The people of Saibai understand English well, which is a fortunate thing. It is also most fortunate that Mr. Done is able to adapt himself to circumstances, and has a wonderful knack of overcoming difficulties.

When the "Wenona" went to Mabuiag to take a party from Thursday Island, several people took the opportunity of contributing to the happiness of the feast. Mr. Riley took some beef; and Messrs. Broadbent, Hocking, Sullivan, and Sun Chong sent out biscuits and lollies to Mr. Minnis (the Government teacher) to distribute amongst the children. Mr. Minnis was especially glad that someone thought of the children.

The New Sub-Dean.

The Bishop has appointed the Rev. F. W. Slade, Vicar of Broadmeadows, in the Diocese of Melbourne, to be Sub-Dean and Vicar of the Cathedral, Thursday Island, in the place of the Rev. E. J. Nash. Mr. Slade is a graduate of Trinity College, Melbourne, and was ordained Deacon in 1907, and Priest in 1908, by the Archbishop of Melbourne; and he has worked in the Diocese of Melbourne ever since his ordination. He was Curate of St. Paul's, Geelong, from 1907 to 1910; Vicar of Lancefield, 1910-1913, and has been three years in his present parish. Mr. and Mrs. Slade hope to arrive in Thursday Island about the end of November, and we can promise them a hearty welcome.

Dedication of the Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary,

AT MABUIAG, TORRES STRAITS.

Sunday, August 20th, was a great day at Mabuiag, for on that day the Church, which had been built by the people, and on which much labour and money had been spent, was dedicated to the service of God and the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Great numbers of visitors had come from the other Islands in the Straits; every Island sent its contingent, and help was forthcoming in food and in money. The people of Mabuiag had gone to a good deal of trouble to arrange for the accommodation of their visitors, who must have numbered some 600. Long rows of very comfortable shelters had been built of plaited coconut palm, near the shore. A sort of verandah in front, for general living space, meals, and such-like, with a private room behind, and all well sheltered from the wind. Some thirty people gave up their houses to accommodate the visitors, and of course many could camp on the boats, of which there were at one time as many as thirty-one at the anchorage. The village was beautifully clean, and the weather was perfect.

The Service of Dedication had been fixed for 7 a.m. but it was 7.30 before everything was ready, and the cross-bearer led the procession of visiting Churchwardens and Clergy round the Church. Mr. Done, who with the local wardens were inside the Church, opened the door when the Bishop had knocked three times demanding admittance.

The petition to dedicate the Church was handed to the Bishop, who caused it to be read. The procession then passed up the Church, the Mabuia wardens and Mr. Done taking their places in it, and the congregation sang the 24th Psalm.

The Bishop preceded by the cross-bearer went to the Font, Lectern, Prayer Desk, Altar Steps and Altar for the usual intercessions, and from the Altar declared the Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary to be dedicated, and set apart to God for ever. The Bishop was the celebrant at the Holy Communion and he preached the sermon, the Rev. J. J. E. Done was gospeller, and the Rev. G. A. Luscombe was epistoller. There were 227 communicants. The whole service was joined in reverently by the large congregation, and the singing during the administration was beautifully soft. Everything was done decently and in order.

In the afternoon there was a very fine open-air service in the village. It was quite impossible to get all into the Church who wished to be at the service. A number of hymns were sung, some in English, some in the Mabuia language, some in the Murray language. Mr. Done took the prayers, and gave one address, and two Torres Straits Islanders also gave addresses—one in the Mabuia and the other in the Murray language. It was an inspiring sight: some 600 or 700 people listening intently to the addresses and joining in the prayers and the hymns, and everyone and everything looked so clean, so bright and so happy.

Evensong was another wonderful service. The Church was packed, and the singing certainly tested the roof! The Church officials marched in procession. The lessons were read in English, and well read, by two Torres Straits Islanders; the people joined in the services, as they had done at the celebration in the morning, as though they had been used to the Church service all their lives, and yet but a little over a year ago they knew nothing of it. The Bishop was the preacher, and though the "Prodger" from Badu had come over with his stick of office, and had asked and obtained permission to act officially at Mabuia—he found little to do either morning or evening!

On Monday there was a meeting of the Mabuia churchwardens to decide what should be done with the collections at the Dedication Services. These amounted to £47 19s. 3d. It was decided that, after all the debts were paid, the balance should be divided into three parts: One third for Mission work outside the Diocese (one-half of this is to help the Taupota people in New Guinea to roof their Church), one-third for the building of houses for students at Moa, and one-third to be kept for St. Mary's, Mabuia. The Bishop took the opportunity of so many of the Churchwardens being present from the Islands to have a meeting of them to talk about the need of training some Torres Straits Islanders for the Ministry, and said he hoped such work would be begun at St. Paul's soon after Christmas. He asked the Churchwardens to consult with their people and see if it could be arranged for every Christian to give threepence a month towards the support of the students in the College. This was agreed to, and people of the Islands near at hand promised to plait coconut leaves for the buildings.

Mattins and Evensong were said on Monday and the dancing began in the morning. It would be impossible in the space the Editor could allow to give any adequate description of all that went on during Monday and Tuesday. The display of flag signalling by a squad of men who learned the signals from cards taken from cigarette packets when they were at work on the reefs; the dances from the various Islands; the drill of the Badu children; the feasting; the boat race won by the "Banzai" of St. Paul's because the "Mabuia," who was just ahead, dropped her jib too soon, thinking she had got to the post, and the "Banzai" passed her at the post. It was all very bright and happy, a scene of joy, and it all fitted in quite naturally with the worship of God and with thanksgiving for the dedication of the Church, indeed it seemed to be a part of the worship and thanksgiving.

Mr. and Mrs. Minnis were kept very busy with all the visitors, white and coloured, but the responsibility did not prevent their enjoying the time. They enjoyed the enjoyment of others, and everything seemed to be going on so happily, and there was so little to complain of, that Mr. Minnis had not to use much authority. The behaviour of all was good.

In Memoriam.

THE LATE BISHOP OF ARMIDALE: THE RIGHT REVEREND HENRY COOPER, D.D.

By the death of Bishop Cooper the Church in Australia has lost the services on earth of one of the ablest of her Bishops. The late Bishop was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, and was ordained in England, Deacon 1872, Priest 1874. After three years' work in Birmingham he came out to Australia in 1875, and was consecrated Bishop Suffragan of Ballarat in 1895. In 1901 he was elected Bishop of Grafton and Armidale, and when the Diocese was divided in 1914, Bishop Cooper elected to remain at Armidale. He looked forward to a further division of the Diocese, but has not been allowed to do that work. The late Bishop really shortened his life by the tremendously high pressure at which he worked, especially during the time he was responsible for the undivided Diocese in the north of New South Wales. From the time he arrived people wondered how long he could stand the tremendous strain of constant travelling, and of heavy work while he was travelling. He was a wonderful organiser, a believer in sound solid work, and he had no sympathy for mere show and effect, but he was an excellent judge of good work, and of character, and he shewed his appreciation of such. He will be missed at meetings of General Synod, for he was an almost ideal Chairman of Committees. There his grasp of detail was most useful in saving time and in expediting business. He was not an old man if life is measured by length of days, but he had lived long if a truer estimate of life is taken, and it is judged rather by what has been done, and the quality of it.

Transport Chaplains.

Three of the priests of the Diocese—the Rev. J. Tweedie (Rector of Cooktown), the Rev. Cyril Massey (Rector of Darwin), and the Rev. C. Hall (Rector of Normanton)—are available as chaplains when and if they are called upon. The Defence authorities have given permission for chaplains to be sent on every boat, but some of these are to be unsalaried, and will be away from their parishes from four to six months. The Bishop is very grateful to the parishes which have shown a willingness to sacrifice themselves for the benefit of the soldiers. Whether we shall be called upon to make good our offer remains to be seen, but at all events the Chaplain-General can depend upon the Diocese of Carpentaria to provide three chaplains—unsalaried—for transports.

General Synod.

The Primate has summoned General Synod to meet in Sydney on October 10th, 1916. The Bishop and the Sub-Dean hope to be in Sydney for the meetings of the Synod, to represent the Diocese of Carpentaria. The other representatives will be Messrs. Clement Bellamy and Arthur Yates, both of whom live in Sydney. It will not be possible for any other priest to get to Sydney to represent the Diocese; the qualification is that the priest must hold the license of the Bishop of the Diocese he represents. As the Sub-Dean will hold the license of the Bishop of Carpentaria until nearly the end of October, when his resignation takes effect, he will be able to represent the Diocese while he is on his way to take up his new work in the Diocese of Willochra.

Probably the most important business that will come before the Synod will be the Determination to re-organize the Constitution of the Australian Board of Missions. There are conflicting "interests" to be considered, and different conceptions of the way in which the Missionary work of the Church should be organized, means and workers provided, and the "home" Church kept alive to the responsibility that is hers. The Australian Board of Missions stands for the principle that Missionary work is a part of the ordinary normal work of the Church herself in her corporate capacity. The Church Missionary Association stands for the principle of individual help and personal responsibility. Can the principles be combined so that there shall be some real unity of operation? That is the question which Synod must try to answer, and it must not be forgotten that not only the work of organization in the homeland is to be considered, but the effect on workers, on work, and on the people to whom Missionaries are sent, of the principle underlying Missionary effort. The principles act and react in a way we hardly realize. It makes a very real difference whether a man feels he has the whole Church behind him or whether he has a section only—in other words, whether he represents the whole or only a part.

The Bishops are to meet for conference on several days before General Synod meets. And there is to be a great meeting on behalf of the Missionary work of the Church in the Town Hall, Sydney, on the night of Monday, Oct. 9.

General Synod.

There was a very full attendance of members—of Bishops, clergy, and lay representatives—at the General Synod, held in October, 1916. The only absentees from the Bench of Bishops were the Archbishop of Perth, who was visiting the Australian troops at the Front—the Archbishop of Perth is Chaplain-General of the Commonwealth Forces; the Bishop of Kalgoorlie, who was not well enough to come to Sydney; and the Bishop of New Guinea, who felt he could not leave his Diocese, as there are so few priests on the staff, and he had gone South for the meeting of Synod in 1915. The Diocese of Carpentaria was represented by the Rev. E. J. Nash, and by Messrs. A. Yates and C. Bellamy. We owe these two laymen a debt of gratitude for the time they gave, and the trouble they took when acting as our representatives.

For some days before the meeting of Synod the Bishops were in Sydney, and they met frequently to discuss amongst themselves various matters of importance. On Friday, October 6th, a quiet morning was held for the Bishops in St. Mark's, Darling Point, when addresses were given by the Bishop of Willochra, whose wise and weighty words undoubtedly had much influence on the actual work of the Synod, besides being wonderfully helpful in every way to those who were privileged to hear them.

The proceedings of Synod began with a celebration of the Holy Communion in St. Andrew's Cathedral, when the Primate was the celebrant, and the Bishop of Adelaide was the preacher. For part of the time the meetings were held in the Oddfellows Hall in Elizabeth Street, as the wet weather had interfered with the work of enlarging the Chapter House; but before the end the work on the Chapter House was sufficiently advanced for the meetings to be held there, and at the first meeting in the Chapter House there was a short service for the dedication of the extension of the building.

The Primate's address, as President, was delivered after prayers on the afternoon of the first day of Synod, Tuesday, October 10th.

A great deal of business was got through, and several Determinations were passed, the most important being the one which deals with the re-organization of the Australian Board of Missions—with this we have dealt elsewhere in this issue. A Determination was also passed altering the proportion of representatives for the Dioceses, and this treated the smaller Dioceses, such as Carpentaria, generously. Another is intended to enlarge the scope of the Australian Clergy Provident Fund, so that it may become possible for lay missionaries to be insured as well as the clergy. It is to be hoped that the Australian Board of Missions will be able to devise some scheme to take advantage of this, or to make some other arrangement. Other Determinations of less general importance were passed. Several resolutions of first-rate importance were passed, but unfortunately so much time was wasted during the earlier sessions, when there were wearying and dreary debates over questions of procedure, which were debated over and over again in one form or another, that questions of really vital importance were moved and seconded and passed formally.

One has shamefully to confess that matters of first-rate importance have to yield precedence to matters of mere procedure. It is to be hoped that there will be some reform which will do away with what is a disgrace to the General Synod of the Church in Australia. How can we expect that people will place first things first, if General Synod spends hours and hours discussing methods of procedure, and minutes discussing social and moral questions. Certainly if the time spent in discussion is a test of the importance of the subjects discussed, we cannot wonder if the public of Australia does not attach much weight to the voice of the Church. Some attempt at reform may come from a motion moved by the Dean of Newcastle, and passed by General Synod, which would facilitate business and allow matters of first-rate importance to be treated as such.

The Synod closed on Wednesday afternoon, October 18th, when the members who had been able to stay so long sang the Te Deum, as an act of thanksgiving, in the Cathedral, and the Primate gave the blessing.

The representatives from the other Dioceses owe the Church-people of Sydney a debt of gratitude for their kindness and hospitality, and especially to the ladies of the various rural deaneries, who provided dinner every night at one of the restaurants. There is no doubt, of course, as to the very real benefit and strength the meetings of General Synod bring to the Church in Australia. So real is the benefit and the strength that it is important that nothing avoidable should minimise them.

The G.F.S. in Thursday Island had a special meeting in September last, when the candidates were also present. The occasion was to bid good-bye and give a small present to Mrs Nash.

Obituary.

WILLIAM LEE-BRYCE.

By the death of William Lee-Bryce, which took place on December 1, 1916, the Church in the Cathedral Parish, Thursday Island, and in the Diocese of Carpentaria has lost the services on earth of a self-sacrificing son; the State has lost the services of a high-minded official; while there are very many people in the North who will feel that they have lost a kind friend who could always be depended upon for help and advice.

William Lee-Bryce had been in nearly every part of North Queensland in the Government service—in Croydon, Georgetown, Maytown, Cooktown, Herberton, and Thursday Island. He was for many years connected with the Mines Department, and was transferred to the Chief Secretary's Department when he was appointed as Government Resident at Thursday Island. Of the many offices he held at Thursday Island none was more important than that of Protector of Aborigines, and though this position entailed much travelling, and a great deal of work and anxiety, he never spared himself. He was keenly interested in all that has to do with the best interests of the aborigines on the mainland, and of the Islanders in the Torres Straits, and he was especially interested both as a Churchman and as Protector in the work of the Torres Straits Mission.

Mr Lee-Bryce was churchwarden of the Cathedral parish, and also a member of the Diocesan Council, and in both capacities he did loyal work, and that from the highest motives. He well maintained the tradition of the Government Resident at Thursday Island established by his predecessors. But most of all was his interest in the Church, and his appreciation of her blessings shewn by his regular attendance at Church and at communion. He was never absent from his place on Sunday morning if he were in Thursday Island. Our Church and our country can ill spare one of such high principles in these days.

May he rest in peace, and may those of us who are left to carry on his work be encouraged to do our duty from the same sense of responsibility inspired by his example.

To Mrs Lee-Bryce and her family we would offer our sincerest sympathy in their sorrow, and they will find a real comfort from the knowledge of the many people who have been helped, and their lives brightened from having known him who was to them most of all a devoted husband and a true father.

HENRY,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

The A.B.M. Determination of General Synod, 1916.

The Determination of General Synod Session, 1916, had two objects in view. First, to co-ordinate, as far as possible, the work of the Australian Board of Missions and the work of the Church Missionary Society—the Church Missionary Association, as it used to be called. The aim was to try and combine the personal enthusiasm of the latter with the principles of Church order expressed by the former. It has been expressed as the acceptance of the principle of the right to live combined with the acceptance of the duty of submission to Church order. It was a delicate business to carry through Synod a Determination of such a nature, for it has to be recognised that different sets of people hold different opinions very strongly—and rightly so, as they are convictions. The Determination was passed, and the fact that it was passed without any expression of feeling is due to a real desire for peace and unity within the Church; and it may be safely said that the one who was most of all responsible for calling out that desire for peace and unity was the Bishop of Willochra. In many ways, the Church owes much to him and his influence, but never was his influence so effective as before and during the time he was in charge of this Determination.

The fact that the new Board is a creation of General Synod, and that it is recognised as a final Court of Appeal in certain matters connected with the organisation of Missionary work in the Home Church, secures the principle of Church order, and implies that the Church is the Missionary Society. The definite recognition of the work of the Church Missionary Society as one of the ways in which the Church is to perform its Missionary functions, places that Society on a more recognised footing, and, on the whole, the first object is secured. Of course, no law of General Synod, or of any other body, can secure its object unless the law is acted upon in the spirit it expresses. The aim and the object of every Churchman should be to see that the Determination is worked as soon as it comes into force—not only in the spirit which it expresses, but still more in the spirit by which it was passed, the spirit of peace and unity.

The second object of the Determination is to make A.B.M. a more effective body; and there can be little or no doubt that this has been done. Instead of A.B.M. being composed of the Bishops, who can never all meet except at General Synod—and not always then!—the Board is made up of members, some elected by the Synod, others elected by the Bishops, and others may be appointed by organisations such as the Church Missionary Society. There will be a chairman, who will be the chief executive officer of the Board, and who will be able to organise and inspire the Church for Missionary work, without being hampered by too much detail of office work, as the present organising secretary is hampered, and he will be a member of the Board—the present organising secretary is not. The Board will be able to meet from time to time, and will deal practically with all questions which affect the Missions of the Church; it will be able to define a policy, in a way that was impossible, when the Bishops who formed the old Board had to be consulted by correspondence. There will, of course, be an increase in expenses of organisation, but this will be far more than justified by efficiency; and we may well believe that, while the actual cost of organisation will be greater, the percentage on income will be less, because the income will be very much greater, as a consequence of greater efficiency, and of more real life.

The great need is earnest prayer for the spirit of unity and brotherly love in all that has to do with the organisation of the Missionary forces of the Church, and for the guidance of the Holy Spirit for those who are responsible for the organising of those forces. We may be sure that, having made our organisation more efficient, the Holy Spirit will use our efforts and bless our work for the extension of the Kingdom of God.

The Right to Live.

Perhaps the most pernicious doctrine that has been preached in modern times is expressed in the claim, "I have a right to live my own life." It is the doctrine which has inspired many of the novels which turn on revolt from convention, which loosens the hold people have upon moral duties, and upon spiritual truth, and especially on the sacredness of marriage. The claim is specious because it appears to be true and indeed it can be defended if the terms are rightly defined. If to live is taken to mean the use of the powers with which we are endowed, so that he most really lives who makes the most use of his powers, and if it is remembered that the powers to be used are those of our spiritual nature no less than those of our intellectual and physical being, then it may be granted that every individual has a right to live his own life. He has a right to exercise all the powers of his nature. But unfortunately those who claim the right limit life to one department—and usually the physical. The doctrine is held concurrently with a low materialistic view of human nature, which sees only the animal side, or at best the intellectual side of that nature, and which ignores the spiritual.

The claim is a dangerous one because it appeals to rights while it neglects the correlative duties, and it is one of the weaknesses of fallen human nature that it is ready to emphasise rights at all times, but it is very loath to recognise the corresponding duties and responsibilities, whereas the real dignity of human nature consists in the recognition of duties and responsibilities, not in the claim of rights.

Combined with a low view of human nature, the doctrine is responsible for much of the spiritual and moral unrest amongst people of these days; it is the excuse for, and is used as the justification of, the attempt to gain a knowledge of life by experience. People want to know by experience what are the powers they have and what is the gratification which experience gives, to taste of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and more especially of evil. It is responsible for the dislike of and dissatisfaction with ordinary, every-day, humdrum duties, and it is important that men and women should understand what the claim to live one's own life really means.

We have no inherent right in ourselves to anything at all. Everything we have and are is a trust committed to us by God, and we hold it all as a trust to be used in accordance with the will of God. We may not use any one particular set of powers to destroy the effectiveness of some other powers. We need more and more to realise that man is a composite being—spiritual, intellectual, physical—and that for the full perfection of our human nature each and every part of that nature must be developed by the use of the powers that belong to it, and as the spiritual is the highest part of our nature, the lower must be subservient to it. The lower must be controlled and limited so that the development of the higher is not interfered with. If to live one's life on the lower level only means the higher is stunted, starved, and neglected, then we have no right to live that life only.

Once again, man is not an isolated individual who can live his life to himself irrespective of his influence on others and the influence of others on him. Man is a gregarious being, and for his full development he must live the life of a member of a society, but this means that he cannot make claims for rights which interfere with the rights of others. Their rights limit his rights. The claim to live one's own life is inherently selfish, and the selfishness is baldly enunciated when, as sometimes happens to the claim to live my own life, is added "in my own way." Here we have the doctrine expressed in all its bald selfishness, and yet how often is the claim made and acted upon.

As it is commonly understood then, the doctrine of a right to live one's own life is one that is false because it ignores the complexity of human nature, and it neglects the responsibilities which flow from the social side of that nature. It spells the ruin of man, and the disintegration of society, on no matter what basis society is formed, because it denies the true nature of man as an individual and as a social being. It is of course absolutely contrary to the teaching of the Church, which alone gives us the true ideal of Human Nature, and which exalts self-sacrifice as the essential for all true development of that nature.

The law of self-sacrifice not only means that we are to limit our rights by consideration of the rights of others, to recognise our duties to others and to fulfil them; it also means that in our own nature we are to see to it that each and every part of our nature is kept under control so that the claims of one part do not override the claims of another, and in its perfection it means that the whole of our being realises the claims of God, and endeavours after His Honour and His Glory. It so happens that in the love and wisdom of God it is only by living the life of self-sacrifice that the powers of our nature are most fully developed, and we become what we are intended to be. We most really live when we most fully live to God. Perfection aimed at means perfection missed, for He that saveth his life shall lose it and he that loseth his life for Christ's sake shall find it.

The Rev. B. S. Cole was ordained Priest at the Advent Ordination in Brisbane. Mr. and Mrs. Cole are to leave Brisbane for the Mitchell River early in April. Mr. Cole has been appointed Chaplain of the Mission.

Election of the Bishop of Armidale.

The Synod of the Diocese of Armidale met on September 21st, 1916, to elect a Bishop of the Diocese. The result was the choice of the Rev. F. Wentworth-Shields, Rector of St. James', Sydney. The Synod is to be congratulated in not going outside Australia for its Bishop; and those who are interested in the Missionary work of the Church will be glad to know that one so keen on Missions as Mr. Wentworth-Shields is, has been elected to the Bench of Bishops of the Church in Australia.

Confirmations in the Diocese of Armidale, N.S.W.

Immediately after General Synod, I left Sydney—on October 20th—to take Confirmations in the Diocese of Armidale. I was asked to do this by the Administrator of that Diocese—the Venerable Archdeacon Johnstone—before the new Bishop of Armidale was elected, and when it was not known how long the See would be vacant. Some of the parishes had been waiting a long time for Confirmations as the late Bishop was unable to travel for many months before he died. One or two parishes had arranged on two occasions for Confirmations and had had to put off the candidates at the last minute.

The first Confirmation was at Manilla, on Saturday, October 21st, and as rain set in that day it looked as though the trip was to be an uncomfortable one. Mr. Redhead, the Vicar of Manilla, is an old friend of Mr. Taffs, of Mossman, in the Diocese of Carpentaria. After the service, Miss Stoddart drove me half-way to Barraba, where I was met by Mr. Best, the Vicar of Barraba, who drove me on. The Confirmation at Barraba was on Sunday morning, October 22nd, and I preached at Evensong. On Monday it was still raining, and Mr. Best decided it was wiser to let me go by the service car to Bingera instead of driving me in the parish car. A more experienced driver and a stronger car was more likely to get through. When we were near Bingera we found one of the creeks up, and the muddy water made it impossible to judge the depth. However, the driver decided to try it, and we went through very gently but safely. It was a very wet night for the Confirmation at Bingera, and several of the candidates were not able to get in for the service.

On Tuesday it cleared; a service car took me to Warialda railway station, and from there I went by train to Delungra for a Confirmation in the afternoon. The Vicar, Mr. North—a college friend of Mr. Luscombe—drove me to Little Plains after the service for another Confirmation in the evening—and on Wednesday morning he drove me in to Inverell. Unfortunately the Vicar of Inverell (Mr. Gabbott) was away—he was taking one of the Missions in the Diocese of Sydney—but Mr. Smith, the Vicar of Bukkulla, took me out to his own parish in the Inverell parish car for a Confirmation in the afternoon, and back to Inverell for a Confirmation in the evening.

On Thursday I went by train to Moree, where there was a Confirmation in the evening of that day. Mr. Cauter, the Vicar of Moree, was to go to Bettalia, on the line to Narrabri, to speak at a Referendum meeting, but as he had a very bad throat, and the only hope of his being able to take his services on the following Sunday was by resting his throat, I offered to take his place. This was possible by leaving the train at Bettalia and going on to Narrabri by a goods train about midnight. There was a good meeting at which there was a little heckling, all in good temper, and the chief of the hecklers came to me after the meeting to say he did not intend to be rude in any way, and he hoped I did not mind. I am afraid the eloquence of the speakers was not convincing. I overheard one woman say as we walked away, "Well, I am not converted."

The luggage train got me to Narrabri about 1.30 a.m. on Saturday, October 28th, and as I had to leave for Wee Waa at 5.25 a.m., and the station is some distance from the town, there was not much time for sleep at the hotel, where we managed after some searching for the night porter to get a bed. I should not have found a bed at all only there was a fellow-passenger who took charge of me and who fortunately knew his way about the town!

At Wee Waa the Vicar, Mr. Sanders—another college friend of Mr. Luscombe—met me, and said the road from there to Pilliga was too bad, so we must go on to Burren Junction and get out from there to Pilliga for the Confirmation that afternoon. We were taken out in a car to Pilliga and back to Buckilbone Station, where we stayed the night. The homestead is a very old one, and it is said that the great Bishop of New Zealand, G. A. Selwyn, was staying at the station when the homestead was built, and that he helped in the erection of it.

On Sunday, October 29th, there was a Confirmation at Burren Junction, and we were driven back to Wee Waa in time for evening service, at which I preached.

On Monday evening there was a Confirmation at Wee Waa, and on Tuesday I took the train for Walgett. The Vicar, Mr. Wilde, had arranged a children's service for the afternoon, so I had an opportunity of speaking to them about Missionary work in New Guinea, Mitchell River and in the Torres Straits. There was a Confirmation in the evening at Walgett.

On Wednesday, November 1st, I travelled by train to Werris Creek—a long dreary journey with many and long stoppages—and got to Armidale on Thursday morning. The last Confirmation of the tour was in the Cathedral at Armidale on the afternoon of Thursday, November 2nd. Besides the candidates from the parish, there were a number from the two schools in the town—the New England Grammar School for boys, and the Armidale School for girls.

In all there were 13 Confirmations held, and 260 candidates were confirmed: 107 males, 153 females. At Walgett I baptized an adult, and at Pilliga an infant. I received a couple of donations for the work at the Mitchell River, and I was able to speak to the candidates at every Confirmation about the Missionary work of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria, so we may hope that there will be more interest taken by the Diocese of Armidale in the work of our own Diocese. I have to thank many people for kindness and hospitality. I managed to get my vote for the Referendum recorded, as an absentee, at Buckilbone.

Mission Notes.

On the night preceding the opening of General Synod a Missionary meeting was held in the Town Hall, Sydney, when there was a good attendance. The meeting had been arranged by the Australian Board of Missions and the Church Missionary Society. The speakers were the Primate, the Bishop of North Queensland, the Bishop of Carpentaria, the Bishop of the North-West, the Rev. G. H. Cranswick, and the Archbishop of Brisbane. Needless to say, the Archbishop sent the audience away fired with enthusiasm for Missions.

Nurse Louise Robson has resigned from the staff of the New Guinea Mission and has gone to England. She hopes to get some war work as nurse, and perhaps when the war is over she may return to New Guinea. She feels that there is a greater call for her services for the soldiers at this time.

The Rev. P. C. Shaw and Mrs. Shaw have been transferred from Taupota to Dogura, in the Diocese of New Guinea. This unfortunately means that there will be no priest in the Taupota district, where such good work has been done by Mr. Shaw in bringing back many fallen Christians who lapsed, partly because there was no priest living amongst them to give them the help and guidance they needed. It also means that the boarding-school for forty-six girls has had to be disbanded.

Miss Gertrude Robson, who is so well known in the Diocese of Carpentaria, writes very happily of her work at Warrigella, in the Diocese of New Guinea. She has lately been holding an examination of pupil teachers (Papuan), some of whom did very well in the examination. Miss Robson is inclined to think she estimated the knowledge of the pupil teachers too low.

Mr. Cyril Grant Lane has been collecting heifers from Stations in the Gulf for the Mitchell River Mission. Several Stations gave a number when they were mustering. It was expected that Mr. Lane would arrive at the Mission Station with about 100 head, a very great addition to the stock on the Station, and gifts for which we are very grateful. Mr. A. B. Wilkinson, of Sydney, was instrumental in getting the cattle for us.

Miss Sindall has been accepted by the A.B.M. as teacher for St. Paul's, Moa. Miss Sindall hoped to leave Sydney for the North early in January.

Miss Winterbottom, of the New Guinea Mission, is South, on furlough.

Miss Oliver, of the New Guinea Mission, who has been ill in the Samarai Hospital, has been transferred from Mukawa to Ganuganuana, and will be in charge of the school for half-caste children.

Miss Crone, of the Roper River Mission, came to Thursday Island by the "Goodwill" in October. Miss Crone, who is now South on furlough, is the nurse at the Roper River Mission. She was the guest of Mrs. Lane while in Thursday Island waiting for the boat to take her South.

Witness.

The duty of a witness is to convince others of the truth of certain facts, or the reliability of some person, to bring the truth about a person or about facts to the knowledge of other people, and so to convince people of the claims of the person, or of the truth of the facts. This duty of bearing witness is one which is laid upon all Christians, it is the duty of the Church in her corporate capacity, and it is the duty of individual Christians, a duty laid upon us by our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, a duty we owe to him, and also to mankind. "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me" is one of the duties he laid upon us during the last great forty days after the Resurrection before He ascended into heaven, and (on the one hand) He has promised that they who confess Him, i.e., bear their witness, before men, He will acknowledge before God, and on the other he has warned us that they who deny him before men, them will He refuse to acknowledge before God.

Many of the Missions that are being held in various parts of the Church are called missions of witness. They are the response of the Church in these days to the call to bear witness to our belief in God, and they are a call to Christians to bear their witness before the world to the claims of our Lord, and the effective reality of all that He has done, and all that He still does for man. It is a call to us to make our own faith in Him, and in His work such a reality that others will be convinced of His claim, and come to offer Him the worship which is His due, and to receive the blessings He has for them.

We are being driven to think more than ever we did before of the things that really matter, and very little thought is needed to make the claim of our Lord upon us for witness an imperative claim. When we think of who He is, the eternal Son of God, Almighty, eternal God by whom all things were made, the Lord of all things; when we think of what He has done for man, that of His love for man He laid aside His glory that He might take our human nature into union with the Divine nature, that He, all holy, came into contact with temptation, being in all points tempted as we are, but without sin; that He died upon the Cross that we might be saved from sin, and the consequences of sin; that He rose again, that He ascended into heaven to prepare a place for us, that He sends to us all that our souls need for our training for life in heaven in the direct presence of God; when we think of these things, and as Christians we believe them all to be true, we cannot fail to admit the claim our Lord has upon us to bear witness for Him before the world.

The trouble is that while we believe these things, we are not absolutely and wholeheartedly convinced of the truth and the importance of them, our belief is nebulous, undefined, and so it is not the force it should be in our lives. In days when we realise the claims there are upon our loyalty to our earthly sovereign and all that He stands for in our empire, we are driven to think of the claim upon our loyalty to our Heavenly King, and all He has done, and still does, for our eternal welfare. Because our Lord is what He is, because of all that He has done for man, He has a claim for witness which we dare not deny.

And the world has a claim that we shall bear witness to our Lord, and to the effective reality of what He has done. It is one of the glories of the medical profession that every discovery which a doctor makes is at once available for the benefit of mankind. In other departments of knowledge discoveries may be covered by patent for the benefit of the discoverer. All that our Lord has done for man is available for all men, and those of us who have discovered for ourselves how effective that work is for our souls health are bound to let others know. If doctors feel their knowledge is a trust for the benefit of the race, how much more should Christians realize that their knowledge is a trust for all men. Indeed it is one of the marks of a real appreciation of the blessings of Christianity that he who really knows is anxious that others should know, that they should share in what he has experienced.

From a consideration of the claims of our Blessed Lord, and from a consideration of the claims of our fellow men, there is an imperative duty laid upon all of us to bear witness. It is important that the claims should be kept in their proper order. First, for the sake of our Lord; secondly, and as a consequence of the first, for the sake of our fellow-men. Indeed the second is part of the first. The Honour of our Lord is most of all manifested in the salvation of souls, for so it is evidenced that His work is not in vain. Much of our failure in the Christian life is the result of our failure to keep our Lord and His claims in the forefront of our thoughts as the mainspring of our conduct.

There are many Christians who are not called upon to bear witness by word of mouth, though there may be times in the lives of all of us when we are bound to say quite simply, but quite unmistakeably: We cannot do this or that, say this or that, because we are Christians. All Christians are bound to bear witness by their conduct, and this is the most effective witness we can bear. If we shew that our belief in our Lord does influence what we do and say, if we shew that our reception of the Sacraments does influence our conduct, we are bearing a convincing witness—one which no one can gainsay. "See how these Christians love one another," was the argument which carried conviction in the early days of the Church; and change in character and conduct is still the most convincing argument for the reality of the power which produces the change. The world will never be convinced of the truth of what we profess to believe unless it is convinced by the sincerity of our witness.

Our Lord, our Saviour, our King, demands of us witness to Him and to His work. He has taken the tremendous risk of depending upon our loyalty to Him in bearing witness to commend His Person and His work to others. We might shrink from the responsibility were we left to ourselves, but He has promised that the Holy Spirit will be with us to enable us to bear our witness; and the lives of the Saints—the witness that has been and is being borne—assures us that the promise is fulfilled. What a change there would be in the world if all who profess and call themselves Christians would bear a true and faithful witness!

The Conference.

The Bishop hopes that the Conference will be held at Thursday Island in July or August. The exact date cannot be fixed at present, as it depends on the time when the Metropolitan is able to pay us his visit, and also on the dates of the steamers coming to and leaving Thursday Island. The Archbishop of Brisbane expects to be able to visit the Diocese at the time of the Conference, and we hope it may be possible for him to visit some of the Islands in the Straits, and also the Mitchell River Mission, but he cannot spare us more than a month. We must make the most of that time.

A Day's Wage Offering.

It has been suggested that the Australian Board of Missions should appeal for a Special Offering from the Churchmen in Australia during the coming Lent. The women and children have their Special Offering every Lent, and there seems no reason why men should not do something of the kind. The idea is to ask every man to devote one day's wage to a fund which the Australian Board of Missions could use as a Guarantee Fund or Emergency Fund, and the need for such a fund is very pressing.

From various causes, the income of the Board comes in at irregular intervals, and probably two-thirds of the income comes to the office in Sydney during the last two months of the year. But the expenditure is steady and regular, and the difficulty is to pay the bills as they come in during the first nine months of the year. If the Board had a reserve fund or emergency fund of say £3,000, this fund could be drawn on for advances to pay the accounts, and when the money is available, it could be replaced to this fund at the end of the year. It was found necessary for the Board to approach certain friends of Missions to guarantee an overdraft, so that accounts could be paid in the December quarter of last year. That ought not to be necessary; and even though there is little real risk, it is not fair to expect the Board to arrange for accommodation from the Bank, and for private individuals to be guarantors for the accommodation. It is important—for financial credit—that bills be paid punctually. This has been done for many years, but only by management which causes anxiety to those in the field—and they surely should be spared such—and to those who manage the business of the Board. When one considers the plain business wisdom of the scheme to provide such a guarantee fund, it must surely commend itself to every Churchman; and the fund could easily be raised if men who realise the responsibility of the Church for Missionary work, and who wish to see the finances on a sound basis, would make the effort suggested this year, and give one day's wage during Lent, as an act of self-denial, to strengthen the Missionary finances of the Church, and to relieve Missionaries and officials from needless anxiety.—H.S.

The Roper River Mission.

As the "Encounter" could not land the stores sent from Darwin for the Roper River Mission, they were brought to Thursday Island, and arrangements were made by Mr Lee-Bryce with Mr Walker for him to take them over in the "Goodwill."

Letters from the staff tell us how thankful they were to get the stores, the more so as they were near the end of their supplies, and were wondering what they should do for themselves and their children.

The members of the staff were in good health and spirits when the "Goodwill" left to come back.

Farewell to the Sub-Dean and Mrs Nash.

There was a large gathering of friends and parishioners in the Parish Hall, Thursday Island, on the night of Thursday, September 21st, to give Mr and Mrs Nash a presentation of a purse of sovereigns, and to bid them farewell on the eve of their departure from Thursday Island after a residence of nearly seven years in our midst. The chair was taken by the Bishop of the Diocese, who voiced the feelings of the residents in thanking Mr and Mrs Nash for all that they have done during their stay in the Island. He reminded the people that Mr Nash had not only been Sub-Dean of the Cathedral and Vicar of the Parish, but also Administrator of the Diocese, and as such a very great deal of work had fallen to his lot, not only during the vacancy of the See, but on those occasions when the Bishop is travelling through the Diocese. No one knew, not even the Bishop, so much of the administration of the Diocese as Mr Nash, and his business capacity, and his readiness to do everything in his power, had been a great help and comfort to Bishop White. For himself, the Bishop could never forget the help that Mr Nash had been to him during the year since his consecration, nor could he and Mrs Newton say how grateful they felt to Mrs Nash for all her kindness to them when they came to the Island in October, 1915. He assured the Sub-Dean and Mrs Nash that they would always be kindly remembered in Thursday Island, and that their friends wished them every happiness in their new work in the Diocese of Willochra.

The Bishop presented Mr Nash with a purse of 50 sovereigns, which had been subscribed by the people of Thursday Island as a substantial proof of their gratitude and goodwill. He explained that those responsible for the gift had felt sure that he and Mrs Nash could spend the money to a better purpose than anyone could do for them, and that this was the reason why the presentation had taken that form.

Mr Nash, who spoke with considerable emotion, thanked the people for their kindness to himself and to Mrs Nash. He expressed his regret at leaving Thursday Island, and said he once hoped to belong to the tribe of old hands in the place, but it was not to be. He could speak as one of the older people, and he gave some interesting reminiscences of the work of the Diocese during the time he had been in Thursday Island, speaking especially of the work of Deaconess Buchanan and her influence in the Torres Straits Islands.

"The boys from the Hill" provided some very good instrumental music for the evening. This was much appreciated, as were also some songs by Mrs Oxley, Mrs McKone and Mr Mackay, the latter also from "the Hill." Refreshments were provided by a committee of ladies, and as pleasant an evening was spent as could be expected considering the occasion.

Mr and Mrs Nash left Thursday Island by the "Nikko Maru" on Sunday, September 24th. Their departure was hurried owing to the Gulf boat being late, and it was necessary for Mr Nash to leave earlier than was intended to enable him to be in Sydney in time for General Synod.

Mr Nash was the celebrant at the 7.30 a.m. service on Sunday, September 24th, and he also preached at Mattins on that day, going on board the boat immediately after the service.

The G.F.S. and the M.U.

These letters stand for the Girls' Friendly Society and the Mothers' Union, two very important societies which can do a very useful work for the Church, and it is likely that they will be called upon to use all their influence in the future to purify our home life and our social life. It is almost impossible to conceive of any other societies which can do better work in this way. The first and most important thing is to preserve purity, and these societies are able to do that. Unfortunately there is much to be done to regain what has been lost, and that will be done most effectively by a high standard in individual life and in home life. This witness will be the most effective witness, the most efficient influence for good—and it is to enable this witness to be silently borne by characters that we need to strengthen these two societies in every possible way. I am anxious that in every parish in the Diocese there should be a branch of each of these societies, and that the branches should be real live branches. We shall need them, their work and their influence, if we are to combat the most dangerous tendencies of these days.

Unfortunately there is a prevalent idea that the work of the Mothers' Union is to interfere with the home life of other women, to dictate how they are to manage their homes, their children, and even perhaps their husbands! It may be that there are people who think it is their duty in life to so interfere with the business of other people. We find such in other spheres of life.

The object of the Mothers' Union is nothing of the kind, and the fact that some busybodies find membership an excuse for an opportunity for interference is no argument against the work of the Union. It is of supreme importance that mothers should have the strength that comes from united prayer and interest in their efforts to keep the most insidious evil from entering their homes. Here are matters, the sanctity of home life, the purity of the children, of supreme importance, these things are being undermined, the questions connected with them are difficult, they are not always faced, and much of the evil results from shutting our eyes to the evil. Mothers do need all the help they can get from community of interest, and other ways in which the Mothers' Union can help. The standard will be kept at its highest level; the danger will be countered only if we use every help that God gives to us. If mothers would combine together, and strengthen themselves by prayer and sacrament, and by such mutual help as they can give one another, they would be able to raise the standard of purity, and bring blessings not only to their own children but to the country at large. The Mothers' Union is a Church Society which recognises the need of seeking the help of God in Prayer and Sacrament to keep the standard on the highest Christian level.

The work of the Girls' Friendly Society is somewhat different, and yet the object and aim is the same. It is necessary that girls should have sympathy and guidance and help that they may honour themselves and be honoured by others. The temptations and the dangers are great; the help needed is equally great. There are times when the girls' heads are full of a great deal of nonsense; when they need to have high ideals of duty kept before them; and when they need just the sympathy and support of others who are trying, with the help God gives, to be what God would have them be.

We need for our girls a sane idea of life and duty; they will get that only if they associate together with others who have sane ideas. The mutual help and strength that comes from such association cannot be over-estimated, and when to that power of association is added common worship, common prayer, and reception of the Holy Communion for a common object, then we may hope that the ideal will be attained.

There are signs that we are to be called upon to make a determined attack on what, most of all, is ruining our human nature and degrading our manhood and womanhood. Let us be ready for defence—for the preservation of our homes and our girls—and we shall be able to do effective work in fighting against the evil. We have to set the standard and insist that it shall be lived up to; and we have to remember that, to a very great extent, men are what women expect them to be, and that no one can raise the standard of social life so effectively as the women of the nation.

HENRY,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

The Bishop preached at S. Paul's College, at Christ Church, at S. Jude's (Randwick), and at the Cathedral while he was in Sydney for General Synod.

The Bishop paid a short visit of three days to the Richmond River, after his tour for Confirmations in the Diocese of Armidale. He preached in S. Bartholomew's, Alstonville, on Sunday, November 4th, and addressed a crowded Missionary meeting in the Parish Room, Alstonville, on Monday, November 5th. The Parish of Alstonville is one of the most enthusiastic in supporting Missions in the whole of Australia.

Mrs Newton was present at an At Home given by Mrs Rayment, when gifts for Missions were brought by many people. Mrs Newton spoke to the people about the Missionary work in the Diocese of Carpentaria.

Mrs Newton was present at a meeting of the Christ Church, S. Laurence, Sydney, Mothers' Union, and spoke to the mothers about the Missionary work of the Church.

The Coal Strike.

The Coal Strike in November last was of special concern to the people in the North. It meant the cutting-off of that part of Australia from communication with the South, and a very great danger of the shortage of supplies at the most serious time of the year. The Mission Stations must have supplies in December to last for the four months of the north-west season. Our experience with the "Francis Pritt" last January makes us very loath to have the boat out again in the north-west season. And what is true of the Mission Stations is also true of all the Cattle Stations in the Gulf and the Peninsula. Fortunately, it was possible for the "Musgrave" to be sent up early in December, so the people may not be out of stores during the wet season.

The Bishop was held-up for three weeks in Brisbane by the Coal Strike, and that meant he was not able to get to Mossman for the Confirmation that had been arranged for November 19th. The Confirmation at Cooktown had to be postponed till December 7th, when five males and nine females received the laying on of hands.

Visit to the Mitchell River.

The Bishop, accompanied by Mr and Mrs Matthews, left Thursday Island in the "Francis Pritt" on Saturday, September 2nd, for Trubanaman.

A strong tide prevented our getting past Woody Wallis Island that night, so we had to anchor there, and we got away at daylight the next morning. A pleasant if somewhat slow run down the coast got us to Koongalara by 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, September 6th. Mr Matthews shewed himself a good cook, and it was proved to him that his fried chips were all that could be desired when his fellow-passengers ate them just as fast as he could cook them. It was felt that it would be unfair that they should not be eaten crisp and hot instead of waiting for sufficient for three, when the frying-pan was small—to wait for relays meant the loss of freshness and crispness. It is to be hoped that he appreciated the appreciation of his fellow-passengers.

A boy was sent off from the beach with the mail and a note asking for transport to the station. About midnight we got away from the beach on the Lochnagar buggy, which had been brought down for us by Mr Chapman. It was a glorious moonlight night for the drive to the station. Here it might be noted, for all who may be interested, that we were able to get to the station in comfort, and again to the beach for the return journey, because Mr Simpson, of Lochnagar, has placed his buggy at our disposal. This was necessary, as the station buggy was in bad order as to its wheels. One wheel had been taken to Thursday Island to see if anything could be done to it, and the decision was—nothing could be done. The buggy has done excellent work for many years, and it is not of much use now. Perhaps someone would give the Mission a good strong tray buggy. It is an important item for the comfort and convenience of the Mission, because the station is about nine miles from the beach, and passengers cannot always walk that distance, especially if they are women who have had a bad time for four or five days on the "Francis Pritt"—not an enjoyable experience, nor one fitted to make one ready for a long walk. Of course there is the dray, but then walking would be better. Also a trap makes it just possible during the dry season to get to Normanton if the trip in the "Francis Pritt" is not to be faced. However, that by the way. At all events we do not want to impose on the goodness of neighbours, kind as they are.

The cultivation at the Mission Station is disappointing, and most of all to Mr. Chapman, who has put much hard work into it. A good deal of food—cassava and sweet potatoes—has been grown, and the irrigation scheme has done good, but the crops are not what Mr. Chapman hoped for. He believes that by experimenting he may yet find out how to grow much more food. It may be that the soil is not good enough: it may be that there is something wanting in the soil, which when supplied would make it possible to get good returns. One of the most encouraging things is that Mr. Chapman has got some of the young men interested in the work of the farm.

There is a decided improvement in the school, the result of a year and more of continuous work. Miss Quinan has an aboriginal boy as pulpit teacher who takes the infants, and she has more time for the others.

On the Saturday there was a fine sight. About one hundred camp natives were carrying the stores up from the landing. Bags of sugar or of flour carried on their heads by a long string of natives, all in the best of humour, was splendid. But best of all was the evident trust and confidence they all had in the superintendent. They knew him as one to be absolutely trusted. Bread had been cooked for them, and when one man was offered some just before going back for a second load he said quite naturally, "I have had mine." No idea of pointing, or of taking advantage of the fact that Mr. Matthews had forgotten he had already given him his allowance.

On Sunday, September 10th, there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 a.m. and at 10 a.m.; 3 males and 5 females were confirmed. One of the women was very ill, but she would not miss her confirmation in spite of pleurisy! The service was very reverent, and the people listened very attentively to the addresses. Some of the children wondered why the Bishop carried a yam stick at the service!

In the afternoon 16 children—10 boys and 6 girls—were baptized. Most of them had been under instruction for some time, though they were quite young. These children had been brought to the Station to be placed under the care of the Mission, and those responsible for them had assured the Superintendent that they would be left under the care of the Mission for some years. It was felt that in these circumstances they ought to be baptized, but it means that the Church in Australia must see that they are fed; the members of the staff, who stood as God-parents, will see to their spiritual care and instruction—they can be depended upon for that.

On Sunday night the first of the services for a Quiet Day for the Staff was held, and the services were continued through the Monday till 3 o'clock in the afternoon. All the Christians were present at the celebration on the Monday morning, and they sang "There is a green hill far away" softly and reverently, without any help, during the administration. The Bishop gave addresses at the services on the interview between our Lord and the woman of Samaria.

On Wednesday, September 13th, there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7 a.m., when those confirmed the previous Sunday made their first Communion. Mr. Lane, the Chaplain, was the celebrant. That day the Bishop intended to leave for Thursday Island, but he postponed his departure for one day, as Mr. Wilkinson was expected on a visit to the Mission. Unfortunately, he did not arrive till the following week—after the Bishop had left.

On Wednesday night a man arrived at the Station, bringing with him an aboriginal woman whom he wished to marry. The rules of the Aboriginal Department, in the State of Queensland, do not allow a white man to marry an aboriginal without a special permit. This man had for months been trying to get the necessary permission, and possibly the delay was intentional, to test his earnestness. At last he had secured it, and he came to the Mission to be married. The difficulty was, of course, that the woman was not baptised. The Bishop and Mr. Lane interviewed the parties, and the Bishop warned the man that he had his future to consider, and that the marriage might be a hindrance to him, and also that he had to consider his own people. The man said he had faced the matter, and he wished to be married. It was found that the woman had always lived with white people, had never been in the camp; she had been with good women, and had attended services when a minister visited the Stations she had been on. The Bishop decided that she should be baptised, if her husband promised to give her instruction, and to use such books as Mr. Lane could provide for that purpose. Mr. Lane spoke to her that night about the meaning of baptism, and found she could say the Lord's Prayer and knew something of Christian teaching. She was baptised in the early morning. The form of Conditional Baptism was used, as it was felt by the Bishop that it was just possible she had been baptised as an infant, when under the care of the white women who had brought her up and cared for her. The husband-to-be acted as godfather. Later in the day, they were married, and Mr. Lane found a number of suitable books for the man to use in teaching his wife.

The Bishop had to go into some questions of discipline, and, sad as these are, these have their bright side, for it becomes evident that there is a real awakening to a sense of sin—and after all it is not those who think they never fall but rather those who realize they do—who are making progress in the spiritual life. This awakening to a sense of sin was plainly evident in some cases, for the first knowledge of the fall came to the members of the staff from the confession of those who had sinned. It is possible that more useful teaching can be given to those who have fallen, than the more general instruction that is normally all which is possible. To put one's finger on a definite sin is more helpful than a general instruction which must be more or less abstract.

The Bishop left the Mission Station on Thursday, November 14th, and he took Mr and Mrs Lane and their baby boy with him to Thursday Island. Mr Lane had resigned his position as chaplain, but had left the date of giving up his work to be decided by the Bishop. It was sad to decide they had better come away just after the Confirmation, so that the Station will be without a priest till after the wet season; but as Mr and Mrs Lane are not to stay on, it did not seem right that they should run the risk of another wet season, especially for the boy.

When we got to the beach we were told that the captain had not been able to get the Francis Pritt out of Trubananman Creek. The tide was too low, and there was not any hope of another tide till the new moon, in about a fortnight's time! That sounded cheerful. We were neaped, and tides are rare things in the Gulf—queer things which "no feller can understand." Still, we could not be kept there, something must be done. The Lanes had bidden their sad good-byes at the Station. We could not go back. The Bishop set the crew to work to take out all the ballast. He put in some sticks on the beach to try and see what the tide was doing. He watched for the change; there did not seem to be much, and at daylight he went out to sound the channel. The Lane family, to whom boats of any description are an abomination of the worst kind, preferred to remain on the beach all this time. On sounding the channel it was found there were some doubtful patches, but as a nice fair breeze came off the land during the morning with an ebb tide, it was decided to try and get out. When the boat was near the shallows all those on board were sent out to the jibboom, and after one or two bumps we found ourselves in deep water.

We were not long in getting the ballast on board—as well as the Lanes, with their impedimenta—and by mid-day we were under full sail for Thursday Island. It was a good trip on the whole; we were in Thursday Island in four days. Consideration for the feelings of others makes it most unkind to refer to such incidents as there were. All that need be said is, that of the Lane family, the best sailor is the baby, the worst, the father!

An Interesting Episode.

The following account of an unexpected addition to the farewell to the Sub-Dean and Mrs Nash is taken from the Parish Gazette for Oct., 1916. Towards the end of the evening there was a special request that the "coloured" parishioners should be allowed to take part in the farewell, and this part of the proceedings of the evening is so interesting that it seems a pity that the readers of the Carpentarian who do not get the Parish Gazette should not know of it. Also it is right that people should know how grateful the "coloured" people are for the kindly feelings which Mr Nash has had for them. It was not known that any such wish existed in the hearts of these people, or there would have been made some provision for them to take part in the evening as a matter of course:—

"During the evening Mr S. Simon, on behalf of the coloured races of the Straits, by request of Mr T. Toulasik, made a very telling speech, and asked Mr and Mrs Nash to accept a few small gifts, which were to be taken to the vicarage next day. As this was the first time we had had a speech of such length from the coloured races at such a gathering, it is here given in full:

My Lord Bishop, Rev. Nash, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I have been requested by the coloured parishioners to speak on their behalf, and the very sudden departure of the Rev. Nash has just been heard, and therefore they do not like to miss this opportunity to express their gratitude and love to Mrs Nash and himself, before they embark. Personally, I am sorry that Rev. Nash has to depart from our midst, for he was indeed a magnanimous minister. His many-sided qualities are well known, and his ever-ready Christian sympathies have made him popular. One special instance is worth repeating, and that is that some time ago, on a cold dark midnight, while he must have slept, the Rev. Nash goes forth to the bedside of a sick and dying person. He went voluntarily, as he knew that the person was very ill, and though the invalid was not a Christian, yet our beloved Rev. Nash stayed there—there by the side of a non-Christian about to pass the Great Divide. Such, ladies and gentlemen, was Mr Nash. Though he goes away and be out of sight, the coloured peoples will ever remember his manifold acts of kindness, and the paternal sympathies of Mrs Nash and himself. I must also say that the coloured parishioners of the Torres Straits and S. Paul's, Moa, have hurriedly arranged a present for their beloved pastor, and though it is not here to view to-night, it is now at a certain Malay gentleman's house, and I suppose most of you know him. He is Mr Thomas Toulasik; in fact, he is the organiser of it, and you must pardon my comically expressing it, when I say that the whole of the presents will be paraded to the vicarage to-morrow. I hope I have not kept you long, and in saying good-bye to Rev. Mr Nash I can do no better than to quote the lines of an old poem, from which I would take and add some appropriate words of my own:

Dear rev. sir, thou can'st not know
How much we grieve at thy parting;
Or how your deeply treasured words
Our heart is still repeating.

And while we ask in trusting faith
That no rude storms may press thee,
To thy own prayer, the best of all,
Our hearts repeat, God bless thee.

God bless thee wheresoe'er thou art,
His richest gifts bestowing,
And may thy cup of life with joy
Be filled to overflowing.

Oh, may the everlasting arms
In tender love caress thee;
Dear rev. sir, thy prayers are ours,
We breathe it now, God bless
Mrs Nash and thee!

That is all I have to say, dear precious sir, so I will say good-bye to you and Mrs Nash.

Mr Simon's speech was warmly applauded.

The next morning Thomas Toulasik, John Savo and Willie Lower brought to the vicarage two carved M.O.P. shells on brackets, two polished M.O.P. shells, three pairs rough M.O.P. shells, one nautilus on stand, salt cellars, pin tray, spoons and forks, butter knives, general collection of small shells, dugong tusks, M.O.P. shell heart on chain for Mrs Nash, M.O.P. shell cross and links for Mr Nash.

The following letter accompanied the shells:

Dear Rev. Sir—We, the coloured parishioners of the Torres Straits and S. Paul's, Moa, beg to approach you with this humble offering, on the eve of your departure from our midst, and we hope you will appreciate these things as a token of our never-fading love towards Mrs Nash and your worthy self. Owing to your sudden departure we were unable to arrange a better and more fitting demonstration of our gratitude for your kindness towards us, and at present many of the boys are away at sea, but we sincerely hope you will not be annoyed at our poor but heartfelt present. Your kind and gracious nature has always touched us, and though we grieve at your departure we pray that God in His mercy will spare Mrs Nash and yourself for many years to come for the glory of His Name. May God bless you, wherever you may be, will always be the coloured peoples daily prayer for you. We now wish you and Mrs Nash bon voyage and good-bye.—We are, dear rev. sir, your loving coloured parishioners of the Torres Straits and S. Paul's, Moa.

The Rev. H. F. T. Lane was in charge of the Cathedral parish after the departure of the Rev. E. J. Nash.

The Rev. Cyril Massey has been called upon to go to Rabaul as Chaplain to the Forces. This means continuous service as Chaplain, and not merely transport duty. Mr Lane will take charge of the Parish of Darwin. Mr Massey expected to leave Darwin on December 6th, 1916. We wish him every happiness in his new work.

The Bishop and Mrs Newton were the guests of Mr and Mrs C. Bellamy, the Union Bank, Haymarket, while they were in Sydney for General Synod.

Miss May McKee and Miss Mills, having completed ten years' membership of the G.F.S. in Thursday Island, were the recipients of mementoes of the fact. The mementoes were given by the Brisbane branch, and are signed by the Archbishop (the President of the Brisbane branch), as well as by the Bishop of Carpentaria and the President of the G.F.S. for the Diocese.

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson visited the Mitchell River Mission in September. He writes to say he was struck at the improvement, especially in the spiritual atmosphere of the Station.

We have to thank Colonel Burns, of Messrs. Burns, Philp & Co., for a donation of £50 towards the expenses of repairing the "Francis Pritt." This gift is very acceptable indeed, and helps to relieve the financial strain caused by the heavy expenses incurred last year for the vessel.

Confirmations at Saibai, Dauan, and Boigu.

The Bishop left Thursday Island on Monday, Dec. 11th, in the "Herald," to take the Confirmations on what are sometimes called "The New Guinea Islands," the three islands Saibai, Dauan, and Boigu, which lie along the coast of New Guinea, at the Western end of the Papuan coast line. The two extreme islands, Saibai and Boigu, are about fifteen miles apart, Dauan lies in between but close to Saibai—the islands are about five miles from the coast of New Guinea. Mr Done had spent some weeks preparing the people for Confirmation, and to do that he was constantly travelling from one to the other in the "Herald." We had to run to Mabuiag on the way out to leave Mrs Done and the two children there. We put them off at their home at 2 a.m. on the Tuesday morning, and were under weigh again at 4 a.m. Wives of Missionaries have to put up with inconveniences as much as—perhaps more than—their husbands. Just fancy being landed at two o'clock in the morning with two children, after being away from home for a fortnight, when the house was shut up, and then for your husband to leave you straight away to do the best you can! We are not always quite so inconsiderate, but on this trip the Bishop was very much hurried; owing to the delay caused by the Coal Strike he was later than had been arranged. It is not good to keep the island folk waiting about when they should be out on the reefs fishing. The boat for Darwin might be in any day and take Mr Lane away from Thursday Island before the new Sub-Dean could arrive. Perhaps it was a judgment on us for our rush and hurry, at all events we were floating with the tide, within sight of Mabuiag, for nearly two days after our very hurried visit, and we did not get to Dauan until nearly midnight on Wednesday.

On the morning of Thursday, December 14th, we had the Confirmation in the little Church (built of native material) at Dauan. Mr Done presented fifty-one candidates—twenty-five men and twenty-six women—which meant that nearly all the adults on the Island received the laying-on of hands. After the Confirmation, three of the men who had been confirmed were licensed as "Churchwardens;" none had been appointed here by Bishop White. We got on to Saibai early the same afternoon, paid our respects to the Government teacher, and had service in the Church at night. Here, as elsewhere, Mr Done has done wonders in adapting the building for Church service, and the people had shewn a good deal of taste in decorating the east end with designs in plaited mats, which were hung on the wall behind the Altar; but the building can never be more than a barn-like structure. During Evensong an adult woman was baptised by Mr Done, and the Bishop preached the sermon. A good deal of arranging had to be done after Evensong about the Confirmation to be held the next day; and while he was waiting, the Bishop sat on the steps leading to the Church. He felt something wriggle past him on the step, and wondered at the cool cheek of what he thought was a lizard. He was tempted to put his hand behind him to feel what it was that was moving, but it was fortunate he did not do so, as a minute or two afterwards Joseph, the Captain of the "Herald," who was standing near with a lighted lantern, called out, "snake, snake, on the steps!" Mr Done happened to be coming down the steps; he jumped, and the Bishop moved rapidly. The beast was seen to crawl to a heap of stones, and Mr Done managed to hit him, or something else, with a big stick; but we saw no more of the creature.

There were ninety-six candidates confirmed on Friday, December 15th; of these forty-three were men and fifty-three were women. One of the men is deaf and dumb, not so born, but there are several people who can communicate with him by signs. He had had Christian teaching when young, before he was afflicted, and his friends had been able to explain to him the meaning of Confirmation, and to pass on to him some of the teaching Mr Done had given them. It was arranged that when this man's name should be called out—the Bishop calls the names of all the candidates, each one answering "I do" to the question in the Confirmation Service—his neighbour should attract his attention, and he should raise his hand to signify his answer. The Confirmation was held at 8.30 a.m., and by 11 a.m. the "Herald" was on the way to Boigu. There was very little wind during the afternoon, and when the tide turned we had to anchor about a mile from the village. During the night a good wind sprung up, and we got the vessel under sail and to the anchorage.

The people at Boigu have a new Church of native material which was not quite finished, and the people were not ready for the dedication, but it was decided to use the building for the Confirmation.

Three of the candidates had gone away the day before to fish—and as we were late in coming and people must get their food, we could not blame them—also two of the women were ill. They came to the Church door, and we had a fire made close to the Church near which they were able to sit during the service. These people like to sit over a fire when they are sick. The Bishop came out of the Church to confirm these two women immediately after those in the Church were confirmed. There were twelve males and twenty-four females confirmed. At Boigu the people do not understand English, so the captain of the "Herald" acted as interpreter for the Bishop. After the service three of the confirmed men were licensed as Churchwardens, and then there was a presentation of food to the Bishop and Mr Done. They sat in state upon chairs, with a large plaited mat before them, and the people of Boigu—old and young, male and female—marched in procession, carrying yams, and coconuts decorated with flowers, and singing a native chant. The offerings were placed on the mat, and then there was some speechifying, Joseph acting as interpreter for the white folk, and as orator for the people of Boigu. It was a pleasing little ceremony of welcome and friendship.

There were some little matters to be attended to. The people had complaints against one man who had been in authority in the Church at Boigu; he had been out fishing on Sunday; he had talked "too strong" to the people; he had induced a boy to join himself to his side of the family, and to work for him instead of for some one else. As the boy is a grown man and married, it seemed that he was quite able to choose with what section of the village he should live, the talking too strong probably meant that the offender had been energetic in urging that the Church should be built—the fishing on Sunday, in so far as it was objectionable, had taken place many months ago.

However, as this man was one of those who were away when we arrived, the Bishop decided that he would not on that visit license him as Churchwarden. There may be, and often is, something behind objections which no white man can hope to understand, and it is always wise to wait and see what the developments and revelations are to be.

We had just got on board the Herald when a canoe arrived with the three candidates who had been fishing. The Bishop decided to go ashore again, and confirm these three. Very soon the Church was filled, and the men received their confirmation. Even though the Bishop hopes to visit Boigu to dedicate the new Church in May, it did not seem right to postpone their confirmation till then; they might have to sign on when the north-west season is over, and it might be a very long time before they could be confirmed.

We got away from Boigu about 2 p.m. that Saturday afternoon, and we hoped we might get to Mabuiag during the night for the Sunday, but we had very little wind. Then we thought we might make Dauan early enough to have a service in preparation for Communion, and spend the day there, giving the people their first communion, but as we drifted on and on, even that became less and less likely till at last the tide turned, and we had to anchor about 10 p.m. in the open sea.

About 2 a.m. on Sunday morning there came up a very heavy squall of wind and rain. We got up our anchor and ran before the the squall. It was so thick we could see nothing, but we knew our whereabouts and kept on. By daylight we were far past Dauan, and there dawned a hope of our getting to Thursday Island in time for evensong. We had heavy squalls all day long, but they were favourable, and we anchored at Thursday Island a little before 6 p.m. It was raining in torrents, and Mr Done decided to remain on board and say evensong with the crew. The Bishop got ashore in time for evensong in the Cathedral, but very few people indeed faced the rain. We found the boat for Darwin in port, and Mr Lane had been on tenterhooks for fear she should get away on the Sunday before the Bishop got back from the Islands.

The Cathedral Parish.

[THURSDAY ISLAND.]

A meeting of the parishioners of the Cathedral Parish (All Souls', Thursday Island) was held on Thursday, December 21st, 1916, to elect a Churchwarden in the place of the late Mr W. M. Lee-Bryce and for other business.

A motion, recording the appreciation of the parishioners for all that the late Mr Lee-Bryce had done for the parish, was passed. Mr Geo. Clark was elected Warden, and the vacancy on the Parochial Council, which the election of Mr Clark as Warden entailed, was filled by the election of Mr Head. There was some discussion about the finances of the parish. It was decided to ask for increased support for the Society of the Treasury, so that the contributions should amount to £10 per month. Arrangements were completed for the welcome to be given to the new Sub-Dean.

The Rev. F. W. Slade and Mrs Slade arrived in Thursday Island by the St. Albans on Christmas Eve, Sunday, December 24th. They were the guests of the Bishop and Mrs Newton for a few days, while the Vicarage was being fixed up, furniture unpacked, etc.

There was a large gathering of parishioners and others in the Institute on Thursday evening, December 28th, to welcome Mr and Mrs Slade. The Bishop and Mrs Newton met the people at the door and introduced them to Mr and Mrs Slade. During the evening the Bishop told the people that Mr Slade is an Australian born and bred, the graduate of an Australian University, that he had had a business training before his ordination, and that he had come to the North because he felt that he and Mrs Slade were more free to come to the outposts of the Church than many others were. They had come from a real sense of duty; he was sure they would stay from a sense of pleasure and happiness. Mr Slade thanked the people for the welcome that had been given to Mrs Slade and to him. Various friends contributed musical items, and as usual

"boys from the hill" were much to the fore—and of course the ladies had provided an abundance of good things in the way of refreshments.

On Sunday, December 31st, the Bishop inducted the Rev. F. W. Slade as Sub-Dean of the Cathedral, and Vicar of the Cathedral Parish, during Mattins.

Darwin.

The Rev. Frere H. T. Lane, who has been appointed priest-in-charge of the parish during the absence of the Rector, the Rev. C. H. Massey, on military duty, arrived in time for the Christmas services. When it became known that Mr Lane is a married man, and that Mrs Lane would be coming to live in Darwin, matters in connection with the Rectory came to a crisis. The ladies of Darwin were quite sure that the Rectory was not fit for a woman to live in—it would do so long as a man only had to be thought of. For some years everybody had been dissatisfied with the building. The Church people were ashamed of it, the health authorities were restless; before the war, a movement was begun towards putting up a new building, but when war put up prices it was decided to wait for a more convenient time. All this was explained to the Bishop when he visited Darwin last June, and at the welcome given to him he said he would not at all object if the authorities gave notice that the building must come down. The notice has been given, and a meeting was held on February 5th to consider what was to be done. There was a good attendance of parishioners, and the matter was considered from every point of view. No one seems to have moved that, as the crisis was caused by the priest-in-charge being a married man, an unmarried priest should be appointed! The possible solutions were two, to rent or to build. To rent even till after the war meant that money would be paid away which would otherwise be reducing the debt if money had to be borrowed; to wait till after the war would probably mean that the building could be put up more cheaply. Very wisely the meeting decided to face the matter boldly and to build, and promises were made in the room which showed that the Parochial Council could rely upon the loyalty and generosity of the parish. When ways and means were being discussed, and the seriousness of the position was revealed, one of the parishioners casually remarked that he held a sum of £200 on trust for building a new Rectory! the result of an effort made some years ago. This, he thought, would be a welcome piece of news. It was decided to ask the Diocesan Council to lend a portion of the money needed, and the meeting was adjourned for a fortnight to give time for application to be made to the Bishop about a loan.

The Conference.

The Conference will meet in August, but the exact dates cannot be fixed until the running of the boats is better known. The Archbishop of Brisbane is expected in Thursday Island about August 9th, and the dates of the Conference meetings will depend on the arrival and the departure to the South of the Gulf boat in August. It is pretty certain that the boat will run, but who would be so brave, or rash, as to foretell her dates five or six months ahead! We always expect her, when she arrives.

Provincial Synod.

A special session of Provincial Synod was summoned by the Metropolitan of the Province, the Archbishop of Brisbane, to meet in Brisbane on February 2nd. The Bishop and the clerical representatives of the Diocese of Carpentaria were not able to be present, and asked for leave of absence. Messrs G. F. Pearson and J. P. Cook, both of Brisbane, were our lay representatives. The purpose for which the Session was held was to accept certain Determinations passed by General Synod in October, 1916, and more especially that one which dealt with the re-constitution of the Australian Board of Missions. The Determination will come into force as soon as two-thirds of the Dioceses of the Church in Australia have accepted it. According to the Constitution of the Provincial Synod of Queensland, that body is empowered to accept or reject Determinations of General Synod on behalf of the Dioceses within the Province. The Determinations were accepted by the Provincial Synod, which means that the five Dioceses of the Province have agreed to the reconstitution of the A.B.M., and as several of the Southern Dioceses have also accepted the Determinations, the new Board of Missions should be able to get to work very soon. The Session in Brisbane was perhaps the shortest on record, the business was finished in a couple of hours.

Military Chaplains.

The Bishop of Carpentaria offered three of the priests working in the Diocese for service as Military Chaplains—more especially for duty on Transports. All three have now been called upon.

The Rev. C. H. Massey, Rector of Darwin, has gone to Rabaul as Chaplain on continuous service. He passed through Thursday Island on Monday, Dec. 11th, 1916, and news has been received of his arrival at Rabaul. The Rev. Chas. Hall, Rector of Normanton, was called up in January. He left Normanton on January 23rd, a little earlier than would have been necessary if it had not been for the risks of delay in the wet season. It was fortunate he did get away then, as the next week the coach from Croydon to Forsyth was blocked by a flood in the Gilbert River. News has been received from Mr Hall that he had wonderful experiences on board ship. The telegram ended with the words, "sea-sick," but—judging from the context in a short message—the experiences seem to have been more pleasant and inspiring than those words suggest; they were connected with the services on board.

The Rev. James Tweedie, Rector of Cooktown, was called up in February, and he left Cooktown on February 28th to take up his duties. Mr Tweedie will probably be kept in Brisbane, to act as Camp Chaplain there,

There will be great difficulty in supplying services for Normanton and for Cooktown while the parish priests are away from those parishes, and the difficulty is the greater because, so far, no one has come forward in either parish to act as lay reader. The Bishop was at Normanton for the last Sunday in January and for the first Sunday in February, and he also spent the first two Sundays in March in that parish; and he hopes to be at Cooktown for the month of April. He will give all the time he can spare to the two parishes who have sent their priests for duty as Chaplains.

Fortunately Rev. H. F. T. Lane was free to go to Darwin as Priest-in-charge of the Parish, and this is the more fortunate in that Mr Massey is on continuous service, and may be away from the Diocese till the end of the war.

St. Peter's, Normanton.

The Bishop was in the Gulf for four weeks during January and February, and on Sunday, Jan. 21st, the third Sunday after the Epiphany, he confirmed six candidates at Normanton (three male and three female), who were presented by the Rev. Charles Hall. The confirmation was held at 8 p.m. after evensong had been said, and there was a very large and reverent congregation.

On Monday evening, January 22nd, the ladies arranged for a social gathering in the Town Hall to bid good-bye to Mr Hall, who was leaving for a few months to take up duty as a Transport Chaplain. It was not known that Mr Hall would be going till the afternoon of the previous Saturday, so there was not much time to make arrangements, yet the gathering was perhaps one of the most successful that has been held in Normanton for many a long day. That is due to the energy of the ladies of Normanton, and to the fact that the Rector is respected by everyone, and everyone is glad that he has an opportunity of doing something for the soldiers.

The Bishop spoke of the reasons why Mr Hall was going, and called upon the Church-people of Normanton to see that all Church organization was kept going while the Rector is away. He asked the people to consider it a duty to the Church and to the Empire to keep everything in order, even though they had no parish Priest for a time. He also spoke of the call there is for material and individual self-sacrifice and for the spirit of mutual trust to be cultivated.

Father Smith, one of the Roman Catholic priests from Croydon, who was present on the platform, also spoke, and Mr Hall thanked the people for their kindness in giving him such a hearty send-off. He said the Bishop had given him very little time to make up his mind, and he had no opportunity of wishing his friends good-bye, so he was the more thankful for the opportunity the ladies had afforded him of seeing them all before he left. There was a musical programme to be got through, refreshments were provided by the ladies, and the young folk finished off the evening with a few dances.

A meeting of the Parochial Council was held at the Rectory on Thursday, January 25th, when it was decided that the regular collections for the Society of the Treasury should be made every month. The Bishop, who was present, said that Mr Allom had undertaken to be responsible for the Sunday School during the Rector's absence, and that he, the Bishop, would spend as much time as possible in the parish, but he warned the Council that should Mr Tweedie be called up he would have to consider the claims of Cooktown as well as those of Normanton. It was decided to pay the Rector's stipend to the Bishop while the Rector is away, as the Bishop could open an account in Mr Hall's name, and send him money from time to time if he needed it. The Diocesan grant is to be paid to the same account.

The Bishop addressed a public meeting called to form a Recruiting Committee on Friday, February 2nd. It is difficult to see where more recruits are to be found in the Gulf. Nearly every available man has either gone to the front or been rejected by the medical officer.

St. Margaret's, Croydon.

The Bishop arrived in Croydon from Normanton on Saturday, January 13th, and he spent a busy week carrying out the engagements which the Rector of Croydon had made for him.

On Sunday, January 14th, there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 a.m., when the Bishop was the celebrant. Mattins was said at 11 a.m., and at 11.30 the Bishop confirmed twelve candidates—four male and eight female. There was a service for children at 2.45 p.m., at which the Bishop gave the address. After a drive of five miles, he preached at Golden Gate, at Evensong (at 5 p.m.), and drove back again to Croydon, to preach in the Parish Church at 8 p.m.

On Monday he visited the hospital and some of the parishioners, giving an address on the New Guinea Mission in the evening. On Tuesday evening there was a meeting of the Parochial Council, when the Bishop congratulated the members on the fact that they had every prospect of ending the year with a balance to their credit, and also on the fact that the crosses on the gable ends of the Church had been repaired. On Wednesday, various parishioners were visited; and in the evening the Bishop gave an address to Church-workers. On Thursday evening there was a social in one of the public halls, when the Bishop gave an address on the peace proposals that had come from Germany and America. He said that, on the whole, he was glad that the proposals had been rejected by the Allies, because there was no hope for a lasting peace until Germany is really defeated, and we cannot honestly say that yet; but not only is Germany not ready for a permanent peace, but the Bishop doubted whether we are. And certainly, it does not look as though the people of the Commonwealth of Australia have learned the lessons which alone will enable them to bear the burdens that peace will bring. On Friday the Bishop was to have returned to Normanton, but the flood waters were still over the Railway bridge across the Norman River, so the train was put off till the next day. Mr Longmore left Croydon for the Georgetown district on the Friday, and the Bishop, after spending that day in visiting some of the parishioners in Croydon, left that town by train at an unearthly hour on Saturday morning—although, according to the Prime Minister of Australia, it was already six o'clock! There is no doubt that the Rector of Croydon works very hard himself, and he believes others should do likewise. At all events, he is to be congratulated on the healthy state of the parochial finances. The town and district is at its lowest—at least, anything lower means extinction. More than 250 people left the goldfield during 1916. The population is down to about 600, and yet the Church finances are really sounder than when there were 10,000 or 12,000 on the field! Did the parish ever have a credit balance at the end of the year before in all its history?

Georgetown.

The Rev. H. R. Longmore, Rector of Croydon, paid a visit to the various centres in the Georgetown district at the end of January, and during the first part of February. He managed to get as far as Forsyth and held service at most of the places along the road. Travelling was very difficult: the rivers were up and the roads in a bad state for any sort of travelling, and a push bike is not the best way of getting about, especially during the wet season. The visit would not have been paid at this time only that a couple had sent to Mr Longmore to come and marry them. Love may laugh at difficulties, but has any poet or romancer found that the difficulties are removed from the path of the parson who is called upon to marry the lovers? It was a sense of duty that induced Mr Longmore to undertake a journey of more than seventy miles, and to cross flooded rivers and push his bike along boggy roads and through water. Having gone so far Mr Longmore thought he might well go sixty miles further to give people an opportunity of worship and of receiving the Sacraments. There does not seem much hope of finding a priest for the Georgetown district for some time to come.

It may be remembered by readers of the Carpentarian that the Church at Georgetown was blown down in a cyclone some years ago. The iron of the roof has been used ever since to cover the seats and other furniture, in order to protect them from the weather. Arrangements have been made to store the furniture and the old iron has been sold. The money will be placed in the Savings Bank, to be a little nest egg for use at some time when happier and more prosperous days come to Georgetown. We may want to re-build the Church, or to make some other arrangements about a building in which service can be held. At present the Shire Hall is used when a visit is possible to the township.

Training College.

ST. PAUL'S, MOA.

The most important step in advance, in the work of the Church in the Torres Straits, was taken when the Bishop admitted four men to be the first students of the Training College for a native ministry in the Islands at St. Paul's, Moa. The Rev. J. J. E. Done took the Bishop out to St. Paul's in the "Herald" on Friday, February 9th, but as there was very little wind, it took nearly 24 hours to do the 30 miles.

On Sunday, February 11th (Sexagesima Sunday), the students were admitted as members of the College after the Creed during the celebration. The four men stood before the altar, and the Bishop, taking each one by the hand, mentioned his name and said "I admit you as a student of St. Paul's College, Moa, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

After the celebration a procession was formed of the students, the Rev J. J. E. Done, the Rev G. A. Luscombe and the Bishop, one of the students carrying the Cross. The procession went first to the lecture room and afterwards to the house that has been built for one of the married students. At each place the Bishop said Prayers of Dedication of the Building. Two more houses have to be built, and then there will be sufficient accommodation for the first students.

The names of the four men are Joseph Liu, Poey Passi, Avin Ware, and Bawia. Three of them are married men; two of these are living in the village—one, Joseph, with friends, the other, Avin, in his own house, but he wishes to build close to where his fellow-students are living. Attached to the Lecture room are two cubicles, one of these will be used for the student who is a single man, the other for two lads who are to come to Moa as Postulants. They are about eighteen years of age, and will act as pupil teachers in the school. Miss Lindel will give them special lessons in the afternoon.

The houses are built of native material, walls of plaited coconut, roofs of grass, but the lecture room has a sawn timber floor.

The students will have lessons on four mornings a week from the Rev. G. A. Luscombe, who has been appointed Principal of the Training College. They will spend a good deal of time in the gardens—in a week they had got a large piece of ground planted with sweet potatoes. It is hoped that from the gardens and the sea, most of the food required will be obtained. The Mission is responsible for the feeding, clothing, and housing of the students and their families, in all some eighteen people. The number may vary at any time, as some of the children have been left with relations on other Islands. It is estimated that the cost of upkeep will be about £100 per annum—a good deal depends upon whether the gardens turn out well or not.

The work in the gardens will be made a great feature in the life of the students, not only as a means of reducing the cost of living for them, but to get them into the habit of working in the gardens with a view to the future. Unfortunately the people in the Islands are neglecting their gardens, and becoming more and more dependent on imported foods. It is not at all likely, nor is it to be desired, that the Island people should be able to provide the native priests with such an income as would enable them and their families to live on imported foods, and priests must themselves grow in their gardens enough food to enable them to live on a small income. There will be the further gain that the Church will set her face against the neglect of their gardens by the people. Also the native priests will not become too much of a distinct class. Their work in the gardens, and the fact that they to such an extent support themselves, will help to do away with the danger of their lording it over their people. The distinction between priest and people will arise from a distinction of function in the Church. Again, as the ordinary teaching in the schools is done by teachers appointed by the Government, there will not be enough employment to fill up the whole of the time of the priests even on the larger Islands, and we cannot hope for them to become students in a real sense all their lives; it is most important that they should have some other occupation, for idleness means moral ruin in a very short time for such people.

The ideal before the Mission is that there should be a priest on every Island where there is a population of more than fifty people. It is quite impossible to do that with white men if it were advisable. The priest will teach the children the faith and the duties of their religion, take the daily service, administer the Sacraments, and exercise his pastoral office, so that the people will have frequent opportunities for worship, Communion, and for regular services. There should be a celebration of Holy Communion on every Island at least on every Sunday. The priest, being of the people, will help them to realize that the Church is not some outside, extraneous foreign organization, but that they are the Church. Careful supervision of the native priests will be needed for many years, and such could be the work of a white priest who would not be tied to get to the various Islands at certain times to give the people the Sacraments, but he could be always on the move, advising, directing, controlling the native priests. The Bishop will be at once the centre of unity for the Church in the Islands, and the point of contact between the Church there and the Church in other lands—while the unity with the whole Church should be symbolised and expressed by the interest taken in and the help given to the work of the Church in other lands. There are other ways, too, in which Unity and Catholicity could be expressed and emphasized. The Mission has had to be content with a lower educational standard for the first students than would be desired. But on the other hand the men are much older in years than the ordinary candidates for Holy Orders. They have graduated in the school of life, if not in a University of Letters. Three are deliberately giving up what from a worldly point of view are better prospects, the fourth was trained for a teacher under the L.M.S., and has continued as a lay reader since the Mission was handed over to the Church, and indeed this man and one of the others were being trained for the Ministry under the L.M.S. régime. They were both anxious that they should not miss their vocation even though they might have to wait for some years. So one remained as a lay reader, and the other consented to be captain of the Mission schooner because it was pointed out to him that in that capacity he would be a very great help to the Missionary who would be responsible for beginning the work of the Mission under the new conditions. No one but Mr Done knows how great has been his help during the eighteen months Joseph was captain of the boat. As time goes on the Church will reap the benefit of the education given in the Government schools on the Islands, in that those who offer for service will be better educated and more capable of benefiting by the teaching given in the Training College, and if it can be arranged for such postulants to be used as pupil teachers, and tested by other work before they are admitted to the College as accepted candidates for Orders, the standard of character and of education could be kept at a high level.

COLLECT FOR ST. PAUL'S COLLEGE, MOA,
TORRES STRAITS MISSION.

O God, our Heavenly Father, Who art the Author and Giver of all good things; bless, we beseech Thee, all places where men are being prepared for service in Thy Holy Church; and especially the College at St. Paul's, Moa.

Send Thy Holy Spirit unto all who teach, and all who are taught; and especially do we pray for Geoffrey Archibald Luscombe, Priest, and for Joseph Lui, Poey Passi, Avin Ware, and Bawia, Students.

Move the hearts of all Thy people that they may be ready and willing by prayer and almsgiving to strengthen Thy Church in the work of preparing those whom Thou dost call to serve Thee, to Thy honour and glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Spirit, ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Anzac Day.

FEAST OF ST. MARK, APRIL 25TH, 1917.

For the second time we are to keep the Feast of St. Mark as a national day for Australia. Perhaps it will come about that St. Mark will be our Patron Saint. On April 25th, 1915, we definitely and deliberately took our place in the world with all the responsibilities and duties of a larger life, of one which reaches beyond the boundaries, not only of the Commonwealth of Australia, but of the Empire. On that day we showed that we are prepared to do, and to dare, and to suffer on behalf of ideas and ideals which are essential to the welfare of the human race, without which Kulture is mere barbarism, and civilization cannot exist. We can never go back to the small, provincial life and interests that were sufficient for most of us in the days before the war.

The ideas and ideals of Anzac Day are spiritual and moral. They are Christian in their origin; they speak of the superiority of the spiritual over the material, and they call for self-sacrifice to maintain them. The greatness of the sacrifice is the measure of their worth, and the Church must be ready in every way to associate herself with the celebration of the day. Indeed it is only through the Church and her sacraments that the nation can receive the spiritual strength to enable her to live up to the ideals of Anzac Day. Last year the religious significance was emphasized in Queensland. Let us see to it that it has its place again this year. Last year we thought most of all of those who had willingly offered themselves even unto death, and of those who mourned for them, for the actual sacrifice was very near to us. This year let us honour them by making a more definite effort to translate the ideas into practice, and to follow the example of self-sacrifice they have given who died that for others life on earth might be worth living. If we are to overcome the difficulties, and to solve the problems that will face us after the war, we shall need a vision of unity, of the grandeur of the whole, the pettiness of the sectional; we shall need a spirit of mutual trust, and honesty of purpose, a readiness to sacrifice self, and party, and sectional interests for the good of the nation. Anzac Day speaks of these things. May we have the grace so to realize their worth that we strive after them.

Consecration of two Bishops.

The Rev. W. F. Wentworth Shields, Rector of St. James', Sydney, was consecrated to be Bishop of Armidale on the Feast of St. Thomas, Dec. 21st, 1916, in the Cathedral Church of St. Andrew, Sydney. The sermon at the Consecration was preached by the Bishop of Bathurst. The new Bishop was enthroned in his Cathedral, St. Peter's, Armidale, on Holy Innocents' Day, Dec. 28th, 1916.

The Rev. Canon Maxwell Hompay Maxwell-Gumbleton was consecrated to be Bishop of Ballarat on the Feast of the Circumcision, January 1st, 1917, in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's, Melbourne. The sermon was preached by Bishop Green. The new Bishop was enthroned in his Cathedral, Christ Church, Ballarat, on January 4th, 1917.

The Right Reverend Frederick Goldsmith, who had been Bishop of Bunbury since 1904, resigned the See and left Australia in February to take up work as the Vicar of a London parish. Bishop Goldsmith worked for very many years in West Australia, as Dean of Perth, and afterwards as Bishop of Bunbury. He was the first Bishop of the first Diocese to be formed out of the old Diocese of Perth, which included the whole of West Australia. There are now four Dioceses in that State.

The Revised Lectionary.

A Committee appointed by Convocation in England has drawn up a revised Lectionary, and has also made a selection of Psalms for use on Sundays and Holy Days. It has been suggested that this selection of Lessons and Psalms should be used for two years with a view to deciding upon its being retained for permanent use. Improvements of real value are more likely to be suggested by use than by mere theory. A resolution recommending the use of the Lectionary and Selection of Psalms was passed by General Synod in October last, and the Bishop authorizes such use in the Diocese of Carpentaria. Copies of the Lectionary can be obtained from the Church Book Depot, Church House, Ann Street, Brisbane.

Diocesan Council Meeting.

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held at Bishops House, Thursday Island, on Friday, February 16th, 1917. The Bishop presided, and Messrs A. Sullivan and R. O. Mackenzie were present. The Rev. F. W. Slade, Vicar of Thursday Island and Sub-Dean of the Cathedral, was appointed to the Council in the place of the Rev. E. J. Nash, who had resigned all the offices he held in the Diocese when he was appointed Rector of Laura-cum-Gladstone, in the Diocese of Willochra. Mr Geo. Clarke was appointed in the place of the late Mr W. M. Lee-Bryce. Mr Slade and Mr Clarke took their places at the meeting, and Mr Slade was elected Secretary of the Council. A motion was passed expressing appreciation of the work of the late Mr Lee-Bryce as a member of the Council, and the Secretary was asked to send a copy to Mrs Lee-Bryce. The Council appointed a small Sub-Committee to be responsible for dealing with all moneys which are received from the sale of cattle on the Mitchell River Mission Reserve, and it was decided that all such moneys should be placed to a banking account, and kept distinct from other Mission and Diocesan Funds. The Bishop reported that he had received a letter from the Parochial Council at Darwin, in which the Council asked if the Diocese would advance some money on loan to enable the Council to build a Rectory at Darwin. It was decided to advance a sum not exceeding £350 on certain conditions. A good deal of other business was got through, and the Council adjourned.

Arrangements were made for a sale of work in aid of the Australian Board of Missions, to be held in connection with the Cathedral Parish, Thursday Island, on March 26th, after this number of the Carpentarian had gone to press. Hitherto this annual effort has been made about the month of November. The departure of the Rev. E. J. Nash, in October of last year, and the unavoidable interregnum, made a postponement necessary. The parish felt that the sale should be held before the end of the financial year, so that its contribution to Missions for the year would not be below the assessment agreed to at the last Conference. It is intended to revert to the old time next (financial) year.

The Territorials in India.

The following encouraging letter has been received from the Rev. P. T. Martin, of the Diocese of Chota Nagpur:—

"The sojourn of our Territorials in India is likely to lead to important results, especially in the Mission Field.

"The old army was splendid, but when it was called away early in the war, and Territorials arrived soon after its departure, the latter did not take over all the old traditions. There was a break—in time it was probably a fortnight. The new men have that wholesome curiosity about things Indian which their better education has engendered. Many of them are studying the peoples about them and their ways. Their courtesy in the bazaars and fair treatment of natives generally have won for them golden opinions in many centres.

"Large numbers of these men are keen Churchmen, communicants, choirmen, servers, members of C.E.M.S., etc. During leave it is, I believe, no uncommon thing for them to pay visits to some Mission in which they have friends, or know they can find a welcome, and in this way they are obtaining a first-hand knowledge of Missionary methods and organisations, and the actual acquaintance in some instances of Indian Christians, workers, and schoolboys.

"Four young fellows helped for a few months in Ranchi, Chota Nagpur. They were members of a Territorial Company (then stationed at Calcutta), which was composed entirely of students of the St. John's Training College (for teachers), Battersea, and the St. Mark's College at Chelsea. These did excellent work in English in the S.P.G. and Lutheran High Schools (for native boys) in Ranchi during the first difficult months when the German schoolmasters were interned and the Diocese of Chota Nagpur was short of workers. They were very keen and entered thoroughly into the life of the boys. I should be almost surprised if none of the four offered later to work as a Missionary.

"From other parts of India one has heard of the keenness of such men and of the regard in which they are held by Indians. I look forward with very great hope to the first year 'after the war,' for then, I think, will be the time when many, now serving in France and elsewhere, will find their vocation for work in the Mission Field, and among them probably not a few who are now, or have been recently, seeing the actual working of Missions in India.

"On the Imperial aspect it is scarcely necessary to dwell, for it is so very obvious that a body of men who are looked upon by Indians as 'sahibs,' and are acting up to that title, must enormously strengthen the bonds of Empire in India."—From The Mission Field.

Mrs Newton returned from South to Thursday Island by the St. Albans on Sunday, Dec. 24th, 1916. She was accompanied by Miss Inman.

Church Schools for Girls.

The Sisters of the Sacred Advent have had two very good and very successful High Schools for Girls, one in Brisbane, the Eton High School, and the other at Stanthorpe, St. Catharine's High School. Arrangements have been made for the Sisters to open another school for girls in Townsville, for the convenience of the parents of Church of England children in the North. It is to be hoped that the Sisters will receive every support in their venture, and that Churchpeople will send their daughters to a school where the children can receive their Church teaching, and have all the benefits of a good secular education, in a religious atmosphere.

There is also a school for girls at Heberton, the Principal of which is Miss Wakeford. This is a Church of England school, and as Heberton has a very fine climate, and Miss Wakeford is an experienced teacher, parents in the North who belong to the Church of England should support this school. There should be room for very many more such schools in Queensland.

The Mission.

During this, the second quarter of the year 1917, the Missioners, who are coming from England and from various parts of Australia, to deliver a message from God, will arrive in the Southern Dioceses of the Province of Queensland, and the Mission, which has been planned and prepared for with so much thought and prayer, will begin. It will take many months to visit all the places that are asking for a Mission, and even so we, in the most Northern Diocese in Queensland, cannot hope to share directly in the movement at this time. Indirectly, we shall benefit of course—for are we not all members of the One Body. By interest and prayer we must take a share in the work of the Mission; and perhaps the Conference in August may suggest some way in which we too may receive a message from our Lord, such as our souls need, and take part in the effort to draw nearer to God and become more really His children. There is no doubt at all that the Church needs strength and guidance, if she is to do her part in helping to reconstruct the world that is to be in the days not very far distant. This really means that all who profess and call themselves Christians—each individual man and woman—must realise who and what they are, the purpose for which God has placed them in the world; their duties and their responsibilities, no less than their privileges and blessings. We have, each and all, to be ready to do and suffer. No good will be done so long as each one waits for another. There is needed a spirit of expectation, and this the months of preparation has no doubt awakened in many souls. Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do? The answer will come during the Mission, if the question is being asked with earnestness and humility; and then, after the Mission, there will rest upon us the duty of doing the Will of God, which has been revealed to each of us. What we call the Mission, that is, the period when the messenger sent by God is delivering the message, is, after all, but a part, a very necessary and important part—but only a part—of a larger effort. There has been the time of preparation before; there will be the time of development, of growth in strength and grace, after the messenger has delivered his message. Let us, during these months, pray that all may have ears to hear and hearts to understand the message, and the grace of perseverance to live the message, and so bear such witness as will convince the world of the power of the Gospel to save the world.

Mission Notes.

The Bishop has accepted the Rev. A. MacFarlane, Th.L., as a member of the staff of the Torres Straits Mission. Mr MacFarlane has been working for some years in the Mallee Country, in the Diocese of Ballarat, so that he has done some "roughing it" on land. In the Straits there will be "roughing it" of another kind. Mr and Mrs MacFarlane, with their baby, hope to arrive in Thursday Island about the middle of April, and to spend a month at Yorke Island (Masig) while Mr MacFarlane is preparing the candidates for Confirmation there. At the same time Mr Done will be busy with the candidates at Yam Island, and after the Confirmations he will go to Darnley Island to give Mr MacFarlane what help he can in getting the Mission House fit for habitation. Mr and Mrs MacFarlane are to live on Darnley Island, and he will have Darnley, Yorke and Murray Islands under his care.

Mr Chapman, of the Mitchell River, Trubanaman, Mission Staff, was in Thursday Island to see the doctor in December last. The doctor allowed him to return to the station, even though it meant going by the last boat before "the wet," and there would be no chance of Mr Chapman getting away for nearly four months. So we presume the doctor thought the treatment he suggested and the medicines he gave Mr Chapman would prevent a relapse.

A letter came through overland from the Mitchell in January, and Mr Matthews reported all were well at the Mission. There was a very successful branding early in December, 1916, and the natural increase of the herd of cattle was very satisfactory. In a few years by natural increase there should be 1,000 head on the reserve. But the Mission hopes to increase the herd more rapidly by securing breeders.

The Rev J. J. E. Done hopes to go to the Mitchell on a visit in April, when he will take Mr and Mrs Cole and their children to the station. The Francis Pritt could not manage so many passengers, as well as their luggage, and the stores for the Mission.

Miss Sindel arrived in Thursday Island by the "Mataram" in January, and went out to St. Paul's, Moa, the next day. Miss Sindel is in charge of the school at St. Paul's, and has nearly fifty children on the roll.

The Rev. F. R. Elder, one of the priests on the staff of the New Guinea Mission, passed through Thursday Island early in December on his way South on furlough. Mr Elder has been in charge of the station at Emo, on the North-east coast, for nearly three years; he is a nephew of the Rev. Copland King, who went to New Guinea with the Rev. A. A. Maclaren when the N.G. Mission was founded in 1891. Mr King is still at work in New Guinea.

Miss Winterbottom, of the New Guinea Mission staff, who had been on furlough in New South Wales, returned to New Guinea in February.

The Bishop of New Guinea expected to visit Rabaul in March.

A priest from the Diocese of North Queensland is to go to New Guinea to join the Mission staff after Easter. This will help to relieve the strain. Unfortunately, though other offers were received, they could not be accepted at the time, as the finances of the Mission did not allow of further responsibilities being undertaken.

Four boys are in training for the diaconate at Dogura, and the Rev. Peter Rautamara is being prepared for his ordination to the priesthood.

Miss Robson, after spending a few weeks in Samarai, was so much better in health that she decided to give up the trip to Australia she had contemplated, and she has returned to her work at Wanigela, Collingwood Bay.

For the Men at the Front.

Lord God of Hosts, whose mighty hand
Dominion holds on sea and land,
In peace and war Thy Will we see
Shaping the larger liberty.

Nations may rise and nations fall,
Thy changeless purpose rules them all.

When death flies swift on wave or field,
Be Thou a sure defence and shield!
Console and succour those who fall,
And help and hearten each and all.

O, hear a people's prayers for those Who fearless face their country's foes.

For those who weak and broken lie,
In weariness and agony—
Great Healer, to their beds of pain
Come, touch, and make them whole again!
O, hear a people's prayers, and bless
Thy servants in their hour of stress!

For those to whom the call shall come
We pray Thy tender welcome home:
The toil, the bitterness, all past,
We trust them to Thy Love at last,
O, hear a people's prayer for all
Who, nobly striving, nobly fall!

For those who minister and heal,
And spend themselves, their skill, their zeal—
Renew their hearts with Christ like faith,
And guard them from disease and death.
And in Thine own good time, Lord, send Thy Peace on earth till Time shall end!

JOHN OXENHAM.

Personal.

A Memorial Service for the late Mr W. M. Lee Bryce was held in the Cathedral, Thursday Island, on Sunday evening, December 10th, 1916. Special Lessons and Psalms and Prayers were used. The Bishop preached from St. Matt. xxiv. 35. There was a large congregation, and the naval contingent was present in force under the command of Lieutenant Turner. Lieutenant Mackenzie was also present.

The Rev. F. W. and Mrs Slade also arrived in Thursday Island by the St. Albans on Christmas Eve. The new Sub-Dean and his wife were held up for a month in Sydney by the coal strike.

The Archdeacon of Willochra, the Ven. E. J. Nash, had a very unpleasant experience when out visiting in his new parish. He with Mrs Nash were finding their way to a farm house when a boy came running through the field of wheat to show them the road. This startled the horse, who turned, locked the wheels and capsized the trap. The horse then left the Archdeacon and Mrs Nash with a portion of the vehicle, and went away with the rest of it and the harness. Helpers were soon on the spot, and fortunately neither Mr nor Mrs Nash were seriously injured. The horse having gone home advertised the fact that something was wrong, and a search party set out to find the adventurers. The Archdeacon came to the conclusion that a more reliable horse would suit him better, but such he finds means slow travelling, and he now thinks that the surest, safest, and quickest way of getting about is by motor car. It is reported that when the Archdeacon went to the wheelwright to see about repairs to the trap, a whirlwind took the roof off the shop! so it certainly seems as though horses and traps are not in his line. He might be safer on a lugger in the Straits!

The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson was laid up for a week in the Cooktown hospital during December. Since then he has been back to Laura, put away his trap, and turned his horses out for the wet season. Unfortunately he has not been so well again since the beginning of the year, and he expected to have to go to Townsville at the latter end of March to consult a doctor there.

The Rev James Tweedie, Rector of Cooktown, and Miss Shaw, of Many Peaks, were married at Port Douglas on Wednesday, February 7th, 1917, by the Rev W. M. Wilkinson. Mr and Mrs Tweedie went on to Cairns and Kuranda for a few days, and returned to Cooktown on Wednesday, February 14th. Mr Tweedie found his notice of appointment as Transport Chaplain waiting for him when he returned to Cooktown, and he was called up for service on February 28th.

Lieutenant K. O. Mackenzie has been transferred from Thursday Island. The transfer probably means that Mr Mackenzie will have some home life again. He has had little since the war began, so we ought to be glad of the transfer, but we are not. It means another loss to the Church in Thursday Island, and losses have been very many of late.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

Diocesan Conference.

The Diocese of Carpentaria is so large, and the distances to be travelled are so great, that we can never expect anything like a full attendance of the clergy of the Diocese at the Conference. This year, three of the priests were absent from the Diocese on military duty, three were granted leave of absence. The Strike prevented the Gulf boat leaving Brisbane, so that the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, the Rev. E. Taffs, and the Rev. H. R. Longmore, who were to have come by that boat, were not able to travel, and the number of priests present was reduced to four. Most of the lay representatives, who were nearly all residents of Thursday Island, were present. As the Bishop's address takes up nearly the whole of our available space this quarter, we can only give a very short resume of the proceedings of Conference. It may be possible to give a fuller account in the next number of the Carpentarian.

Conference proceedings began with a celebration of the Holy Communion on Tuesday, August 24th, in the Douglas Chapel, when the Bishop was the celebrant. The first Session began at 4 p.m. on the afternoon of that day, when the Bishop delivered his address to Conference, and various reports were laid upon the table. At the evening session, and at the two sessions on Wednesday, the reports were discussed and adopted. The discussions on the reports of the Torres Straits Mission and the Missions to the Aborigines were especially interesting. We were fortunate in having Mr. Matthews, the Superintendent of the Mitchell River Mission, present, as one of the lay representatives. Unfortunately, it had not been possible for Mr. Joynt, of the Roper River Mission, to be present. It was hoped that he would be able to break his journey when travelling South on furlough, so as to be present at the Conference and tell us about the work the Church Missionary Society is doing in the Northern Territory.

On Thursday there was one session in the afternoon, and Conference met at 2.30 p.m. that day. The Rev. J. J. E. Done had an important motion for that session dealing with the care of the girls from the Torres Straits Islands who are in service in Thursday Island, and the Diocesan Council was asked to consider what could be done in the matter. The members of the Diocesan Council were elected, and the usual votes of thanks were passed, the assessment of the Diocese for the Australian Board of Missions was raised from £50 a year to £75 a year, the parish assessments were fixed at the same rate as at the last Conference.

The Archbishop of Brisbane held a Quiet Day for the Clergy from Thursday evening to Saturday morning. The Conference was brought to a close by singing the Te Deum at Evensong on Sunday, August 26th, when there was an inspiring service, at which the Archbishop preached.

In every way the 1917 Conference was helpful. It was unfortunate so few of the Clergy could be present.

The Visit of the Metropolitan.

The Archbishop of Brisbane arrived in Thursday Island by the Montoro from Townsville on Friday, August 10th, and accompanied by the Bishop, the Rev. F. W. Slade and the Rev. W. H. MacFarlane, he left Thursday Islands in a steamer to visit some of the Islands in the Straits. At daylight on Saturday, August 11th, a very heavy sea made it necessary to run under Noghir for shelter at mid-day, but the party arrived at Yorke Island in time for evensong on Sunday. Next day to Darnley Island, where repairs necessitated a delay, and made it impossible to get to Murray Island as was intended. The steamer went back to Yorke Island on Wednesday, and the Archbishop and the Bishop transhipped into the Herald. The rest of the trip was made in the mission schooner. Yam Island, St. Paul's, Moa, Badu and Mabuiag were all visited and Sunday, August 19th, was spent at Mabuiag. The Archbishop got back to Thursday Island on Monday, August 20th, and that week was spent on the Island. He left Thursday Island by the Herald on the night of Sunday, August 26th, for the Mitchell, accompanied by the Bishop, the Rev. J. J. E. Done and Mr. Matthews. There was little wind and the Archbishop was able to spend only about ten hours at Trubananman, as he had to leave on Friday night to catch a boat south from Thursday Island the following Tuesday. He had some rough and uncomfortable travelling, but the visits to Torres Straits Islands and the Mitchell were interesting.

The Bishop visited the Torres Straits Islands in June, and held Confirmations at Yam, St. Paul's, and Mabuiag. He also dedicated the new Church at Boigu. In July he was at Normanton, returning to Thursday Island at the end of the month for the Conference and to accompany the Archbishop on his visit to the Torres Straits Islands and to the Mitchell River Mission. He remained at the Mission station for five days after the Archbishop left on his return to Thursday Island, and travelled overland to Normanton, leaving Trubananman on Wednesday, September 5th, for Rutland Plains Station, whence he travelled by buckboard and motor car to Normanton, a distance of 180 miles.

Surrogates are asked to remember that the third year of the Bishop's consecration began on September 21st, 1917.

Subscription to the Carpentarian

A motion was passed at the Diocesan Conference raising the subscription to the Carpentarian from 2/- per annum to 2/6. The new rate will begin from January 1st, 1918. Will subscribers please note the change. The paper is published at a loss, which has to be made up from Diocesan funds, and the members of Conference thought the charge on the funds should be reduced if possible.

The Rev. C. Hall has been nominated by the Archbishop of Brisbane, with the consent of the Bishop of the Diocese, as chaplain on continuous service.

By the death of Miss Gertude Robson the New Guinea Mission has lost the services on earth of a devoted Missionary. Miss Robson worked for some years in Thursday Island, where she won the love and respect of many people to whom the news of her death came as a great shock. She was especially interested in the Mitchell River Mission and in the Torres Straits Mission.

There was a terrible accident at Normanton on Monday, August 20th, when Mr F. Kirk, the stock inspector, lost his life. Mr Kirk was getting water for his horse after dark when he lost his footing and fell down the well. He struck his head while falling and must have been killed before he reached the water. Mr Kirk had been in Normanton only four months, and was elected a member of the Parochial Council at the last Easter meeting. Both Mr and Mrs Kirk were keen Church people, and did a good deal for the parish while they were in Normanton. Their only son—and only child—enlisted, and has only just recovered from double pneumonia, which developed while he was in the trenches, whence he was invalided to England.

Vol. XVII., No. 68. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1917

Conference Address.

AUGUST 21st, 1917.

In the Name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Your Grace, my reverend brethren and my brethren of the laity. It is with very real pleasure that I welcome you to this, the Seventh Conference of the Diocese of Carpentaria. May the Holy Spirit be present with us to guide us in all that we say, and in all that we do, and may our services and our discussions be blessed by Him to the honour and glory of God, and to the strengthening of His Church.

The Conference is especially honoured by the presence of the Metropolitan of the Province, and in the name of the Diocese and of the Conference I wish to thank your Grace for your presence. We know how very strenuous your life is, how many are the calls upon your interest and your sympathy, your time and your prayers at all times, and especially so during this year when the responsibilities and anxieties of the Mission to the Province have added to your work, and made great demands upon you. We hope that the change of work and of scene, a short time spent in what is not the worst climate in the world at this time of the year, will really be found to have helped you. You have at all events been free for some days from the worries of a frequent mail, and daily papers, the insistence of telegrams, and the irritating sound of the telephone. You may remember that it is just about ten years since it was my privilege to welcome you to a Conference in another Diocese of our Province, and to be your companion and guide when you paid a visit as Metropolitan to the Diocese of New Guinea. You will find us here a little more prim and proper perhaps than the barbarians of that Diocese, for we are not quite so near the edge of civilization as the people of New Guinea were in those days. We cannot promise you so much that is new and different from your ordinary life, we cannot give you so much to surprise you as you experienced there, but as you have seen, we can give you some rough travelling, and we can feel sure that is good for you, mentally and physically. I am not going to apologise for the weather in the Torres Straits, nor for the behaviour of the Herald. And we have shewn you a little of the most interesting work which the Church of Australia has ever had the privilege of undertaking—the Torres Straits Mission. We hope it will be possible for you to redeem your promise, given eleven years ago, to visit once more the Mitchell River Mission. We shall look to you for sympathy and advice, and I know we shall not look to you in vain.

I have to apologise to the members of the Conference for the long interval between the holding of the last and the present meeting. It is four years since Conference met in Cooktown in 1913, and we are supposed to meet every two years. The meeting should have taken place in 1915, but that was the year in which Bishop White resigned, and I felt that I ought to know something of the needs of the Diocese and of its work before I summoned you to meet. I hoped to have called you together last year, but there was a meeting of General Synod, and still more important, the Archbishop could not come last year and he said he could this year. I felt sure you would think it wise to wait till he could be present.

There have been very many changes in the Diocese since the last meeting of the Conference. The greatest of course is the resignation of the See by the first Bishop of the Diocese. The Right Reverend Gilbert White, after thirty years work in the North, felt that he ought to accept the call to the See of Willochra, which he accepted in the early part of the year 1915, and his resignation of the See of Carpentaria took effect in July of that year. For more than fifteen years Bishop White was Bishop of Carpentaria. He was consecrated on the feast of S. Bartholomew in 1900, but during the fifteen years before that he had done a great work for the Church in the North, and much of it in the area which is now the Diocese of Carpentaria. What concerns us chiefly is his work as first Bishop of the Diocese. How wisely he laid down the lines of work and of organization is evidenced by the fact that everything has gone smoothly since he left, and there has been no need to change anything he did. We have just gone on carrying out his plans and his policy. How unselfishly he sank himself is proved by the interest he aroused in various parts of Australia and in England for the Diocese, and the help he obtained has continued since he resigned. In days when so much depends on the personality of an individual it is surely a proof of greatness when a man can awaken interest from principles so that the interest remains when the personality is removed, but of course all that Bishop White has ever done has been done thoroughly. He dug deep down to permanent foundations for all his building.

Of the thirteen priests who were licensed in the Diocese four years ago, seven have left us. Of these two the Rev. H. H. Ayscough and the Rev. W. E. Godson were away on leave and did not return to the Diocese, the other five have resigned. The Rev. H. Birch was Superintendent of the Roper River Mission; his place has been taken by the Rev. H. E. D. Warren, who was a member of the staff of that Mission then. The Rev. A. McD. Hassell, after some years of work at Georgetown and Normanton, went to the Diocese of Brisbane, and is now happily married and settled in the Parish of Kilcoy, which was part of the district where I myself worked some twenty years ago. The Rev. L. Ayscough, who did good work in the Gulf and at Cooktown, resigned just after I arrived in the Diocese. The Rev. James Tweedie worked for a short time in the Diocese of Rockhampton, and then returned to Carpentaria as Rector of Cooktown. He is at present acting as camp chaplain in Brisbane. The Rev. W. A. Fletcher did very good work at Darwin for rather more than three years. He returned to the Diocese of Sydney. The Rev. E. J. Nash, who came to Thursday Island for three years and stayed seven, thereby shewing himself to be a man of sound judgment and good taste, resigned last year and went to the Diocese of Willochra, where he is the eye of the Bishop, being Archdeacon of Willochra. As Sub-Dean of the Cathedral, and as Administrator of the Diocese, Mr Nash did very solid work, and I myself am very grateful to him for his administration of the Diocese during the vacancy of the See, and for all the help he gave me during the first year of my residence here. The Rev. F. H. T. Lane, after being chaplain to the Mitchell River Mission for four years, has gone as priest-in-charge of Darwin while the Rector is away on military service as chaplain at Rabaul. The Rev. E. Taffs—who is our senior priest—and the Rev. H. R. Longmore are still in the Parishes of Mossman and Croydon. The Rev. W. M. Wilkinson, who has made his name honoured not only in Australia, and who has won the love and respect of everyone in the Diocese by his unselfish labours for the lonely people of the bush, continued his work as Bush Missionary till the end of last year. He surprised the oldest and warriest of bushmen by his journey through the Northern Territory, where he travelled for two years, bringing comfort and help to many. The long journeys and the rough living have told on Mr Wilkinson's health, and I am sadly afraid he will soon be leaving us for a better climate and easier conditions of life and work. At present he is in charge of the Parish of Cooktown while the Rector is doing military duty. Three priests have come to us from the Diocese of Brisbane: the Rev. C. Hall, the Rev. C. H. Massey, and the Rev. B. S. Cole. Sydney, Newcastle, Melbourne and Ballarat have each sent us one: the Rev. J. J. E. Done, the Rev. G. A. Luscombe, the Rev. F. W. Slade, and the Rev. W. H. MacFarlane. Mr Hall is Rector of Normanton, but on leave as military chaplain. Mr Massey is Rector of Darwin, but on leave as military chaplain. Mr Cole is chaplain to the Mitchell River Mission. Mr Done, Mr Luscombe and Mr MacFarlane are on the staff of the Torres Straits Mission, and Mr Slade has succeeded Mr Nash as Sub-Dean of the Cathedral and Vicar of Thursday Island. He is also our Diocesan Secretary, and keeps up the traditions of his predecessors in being one who gives the Bishop help ungrudgingly, and who manages most of the business of the Diocese, much of which falls on his shoulders in the long and frequent absences of the Bishop from Thursday Island. It seems that the Diocese and the Bishop have always been fortunate in having at the Cathedral one who can always be depended upon to do anything and everything, and to do it well.

We have thirteen priests licensed in the Diocese, the same number as four years ago—or ten actually at work in the Diocese. But three are doing new work in the Torres Straits, so that our staff is really much smaller than it was. We have five priests doing Missionary work, and five amongst white people,

Mr Hall came to the Diocese for three years, and his period of service will end with this year; after that, we have no claim upon him, though I hope he may come back to us. I have told both him and Mr Massey that I am prepared to treat their time as chaplains as part of their time given to the Diocese. Not only would it have been a little mean to my mind not to have done so, but as this Diocese is an integral part of the Catholic Church, and as the call of the Empire—nay, of the liberty of the whole human race—is one which everyone should respond to, service to that cause is service to the Diocese, and should so count in any claims we have on the service of priests. The priests on military duty are doing our work, whether it be in Brisbane, Rabaul, or at the Front; and it seemed to me to be only right and just that it should be recognised as such; and if we are to lose part of the period these priests have undertaken to give us in this Diocese, that is only part of the sacrifice we are called upon to make in these days. Perhaps I ought to explain one of the ways in which we keep up our supply of priests. The Archbishop of Brisbane in normal times calls for offers of service in the distant parts of the Province from students at the Theological College at Nundah, and you may be sure that trumpet gives no uncertain sound. Those who place themselves at the Archbishop's disposal agree to go where he sends them for five years, and we try to help in the support of such volunteers for the front while they are at the College. We do not call for the services of these men till they have been a year in Priest's Orders, as it is only right that men should have some wider experience and training before they are plunged into the lonely isolated life of the North. So that we can only expect as a rule three years service from these men. Mr Hall and Mr Massey are two who responded to the Archbishop's call. Mr Wilkinson we shall be losing shortly. So that we are really very short handed for work amongst the white settlers of the Diocese. At present I do not see where priests are to come from for some time to come. There is one we have a claim upon in the Diocese of Brisbane—on whom I should have called before this—only that Brisbane was in almost a worse position than we are, as so many of her priests have gone as military chaplains. Two men who were being prepared for ordination at Nundah, and on whom we had a claim, have enlisted. The College at Nundah is empty. All the Bishops of the Province are wondering what they are to do for men. We have all felt that it was not right to accept any offers of service from men wishing to be ordained if they were fit for service in the military forces. The Theological Colleges in England are nearly all closed, as the students have enlisted—only those rejected by the doctors have remained—and even if these were not needed in England, they are not the men suited for the hard life of a Diocese such as this. There may be—we pray there will be—many who after the war, and because of the war, will find they have a vocation to the priesthood—but even so a man cannot be trained for that work in less than three years, and we dare not lower the standard of education except for very strong reasons. It seems to me that the most pressing need for the whole Church at this time is to strain every nerve and make every effort to build up reserve funds now, so that we may be able to accept offers of service which we feel sure will come after the war. I am afraid we are inclined to think that because the Theological College is empty and doing nothing, we need not worry about its finances. That is a shortsighted policy. We want to be in a position that we can accept any suitable candidate who has a vocation, so that he can receive the training that is needed, in order that he may do the work to which God calls him. Will it not be a disgraceful thing if, when men come home with a sense of vocation, we have to say to them, we cannot accept you, because we have no money to pay for your training. Every son of the Church whom God calls should have the opportunity of answering the call; it should not depend upon whether he has parents or friends who can pay for his college expenses. It is the duty of the Church—and of the whole Church—to see that any one, no matter how poor his circumstances, can respond when God calls him. We in this Diocese have had a generous friend in Earl Beauchamp, who, in the early days of the Diocese, when it was thought we could have a College here in Thursday Island, gave generous help to the College, and he has continued to give us help ever since. That help was for the training of candidates for Orders; and I have asked the Diocesan Council to put on one side, as trust money, the donations of the last two years, to be used so soon as we have students at Nundah for this Diocese. I believe that would be the wish of Lord Beauchamp, even though he allows us to use the money as we think best; and I would ask those who can help us in this way not to wait till the College is opened again, but to help us to build up a fund now, so that we may do our duty when the time comes. Believe me, it is most important.

The shortage of priests is due to the war, and the shortage is likely to be some years, because, as I said, the Bishops have felt that the first duty of young men was to offer their services—and their lives, if need be—to the preservation of liberty for the human race; and, to my mind, this is an additional reason why we may claim that men should be prepared to act as lay readers. There are many ways in which laymen can help at all times; and it may be that the stress of these and the coming days will force the Church to make more use of what laymen can do. She has not used her forces as she ought to have, and laymen have not been as ready to do their part as they ought to have been, and Church people have not been willing to recognise what laymen can do—nor to value it. We must, of course, have priests to administer the sacraments—no one else has authority to do that, except for baptism in cases of emergency, when lay baptism is valid. Valid sacraments require a valid ministry; but there are services of praise and praise which can be led by a layman. The priesthood of the laity is a real thing and not confined only to assisting in the sacraments of the Altar. In every small centre there should be a layman who can and is willing to lead his brethren in acts of corporate prayer and praise, as in every home the father should be the priest in his own house and exercise his priesthood by leading his family in family worship. Sense of corporate life and duty can be developed in this way, and the Bishops have a right to call upon our men to undertake this duty, and upon all our people to value it. We have that right at all times, surely we have a greater right when we have felt it our duty to weaken our hands in these days. I am sorry to say that in this Diocese we have only one honorary lay reader. We ought to have one or two in every centre. Here is a privilege, here is an honour which men from false shame are refusing to accept. We cannot supply priests to take services every Sunday in every place. Our people become careless and indifferent about the duty of public worship, and the sense of corporate life dies because men do not rise to the opportunities which are open to them. Here is one way in which laymen may bear witness to our Lord, and the bearing of witness is our duty. We are not to be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified. We are to fight manfully under His banner against sin, the world, and the devil. Here is one way laymen can do that and help their brethren to do it.

When we look outside our own Diocese we see changes that have taken place in the Church of the Province and of Australia. There has been no change in the occupants of the Sees of the Province except in our own Diocese during the last four years, but outside our Province the Church on earth has lost the direct services of Bishop Barlow (of Goulburn) and of Bishop Cooper (of Armidale) by death. Bishop Barlow was one who was closely connected with this Diocese, first as Bishop, when this was a part of North Queensland. You must forgive me if I have to use a name that seems to imply an absurdity, and then as the one to whom we owe our existence as a Diocese. Bishop Green (of Ballarat), Bishop Goldsmith (of Bunbury), and Bishop Pain (of Gippsland) have resigned. We welcome as their successors Bishop Radford to Goulburn, Bishop Wentworth-Shields to Armidale, Bishop Maxwell Gumbleton to Ballarat. The Sees of Gippsland and Bunbury are still vacant. All the new Bishops, except one, during the last four years are men who are either Australian born or have had long experience in the Australian Church. For this we may, I think, be thankful without in any way denying that we do from time to time in the Australian Church need the help and strength which the Mother Church in England or other branches of the Anglican Communion can give us. It is well for us to be reminded by the coming amongst us of one to be a Bishop from other lands that we are part of a larger whole. Two new Dioceses have been formed during the last four years: Kalgoorlie (in West Australia), and Willochra (in South Australia). The Diocese of Kalgoorlie has made it possible for West Australia to be formed into a Province, with Perth as the Metropolitan See.

General Synod has met twice, and Provincial Synod has also met twice in the last two years. The most important Determination passed by General Synod at the session 1916 was that which re-organized the Australian Board of Missions, and also aimed at unifying Missionary interest and enthusiasm without sacrificing the principle that the Church is the Missionary Society—and so the duty of supporting Missionary work is the duty of the whole Church and not of any section or society within the Church. That duty should be so paramount that nothing in the way of party spirit or sectional interest and preferences should interfere with it. The duty of the Church is to deliver the whole message of salvation to those to whom she sends her messengers—and not simply that aspect or portion of it which appeals to one set of people or another. No doubt different races and people of different temperaments will find one portion or another portion of Christian truth most effective for the building up of their characters. It is not the duty of any section to insist that what has helped them most is the only part that can help others. The whole body of truth needs to be taught, and in time the guidance of the Holy Spirit will show what it is races most need—or how they will bring out of the Faith of the Church new treasures inherent in it, and which other races could not manifest. The Australian Board of Missions is not, as some would fancy, a party organization. It represents the principle that the Church must deliver the whole of what has been committed to her in trust for the whole world. She must keep back nothing in faith or discipline or organization she has received. We may not pick and choose what is best for others, judging by what we have found best for ourselves. And it is also right and proper that Missionaries should realise that they are agents of the whole Church and not merely of a section of it. The Determinations of General Synod are accepted or rejected for all the Dioceses of our Province by Provincial Synod, and to consider the Determinations passed by General Synod in 1916, a special session of Provincial Synod was summoned last February. It was a more or less formal meeting, and I asked for leave of absence from the Metropolitan. We were represented by laymen in Brisbane who were willing to act for us.

The most important work which the Church in the Province has undertaken during the last four years is the General Mission. It must be more than four years since first the thoughts of the Bishops were occupied with the need of a Mission of Help to Queensland. The sense of the need was in no way awakened by the war, nor is the Mission itself an outcome of the stirring of the minds of people by the War. The Archbishop and Bishops and others with them were concerned about the people for whose spiritual health the Church is responsible. And there had been a long period of preparation when the war occasioned the postponement of the Mission and became itself a force in the preparation of the ground in which seed is to be sown. For months and years there have been outpourings of prayer and much thought and labour and time has been given, and this year the effort is being made, and apparently blessed by the Holy Spirit. There have been very many difficulties, which have been bravely and prayerfully faced, and not only overcome, but found to be the means of other blessings unlooked for.

The war has intensified the appeal to us, for a reconsideration of our ideas of life and duty, and our attitude towards them; but it did not need the call of the war to make the leaders of the Church in Queensland realise the need for repentance and faith. We may be thankful for all the postponements and delays—vexatious as they were—for out of them blessing has come; and the message of the Mission has been made the more insistent by the condition of the world in these days. We cannot be too thankful to Almighty God for all the prayers and work that have been offered, and still are being offered, in connection with this campaign for God and against evil. It is impossible to estimate results. The Mission has a three-fold aim, which is itself one aim: To develop the spiritual life of those who are trying to follow the steps of our Lord and to be made like unto

Him; to arouse the careless and indifferent; and to bring back to their spiritual home those who have wandered. It is all for the honour and glory of God in the salvation of souls; in the strengthening of the Church, to enable her to do her work of training souls and make them fit to love and be loved by God, that so the hunger of God for love may be satisfied. It is nothing less than that, and nothing greater can be conceived. Bishops and priests and laymen—men and women—have all their part and duty in this work; but they are only agents, instruments to be used by the Holy Spirit; and having made every preparation and used all care, the issue is in His hands, who alone can speak to the souls of men and move them to repentance and faith. And so, if to some it seems that wanderers have not been reached, as it was hoped, that the chief results of the Mission are to be seen by us, in the deepening of the spiritual life of those who were always striving to be faithful, we will not talk failure, we need not be disappointed. Nay, rather our faith in the power and wisdom and love of the Holy Spirit is such that we are sure that, having done our part, He will use our efforts and bless them. After all, God is not in a hurry about results—as we count hurry—and God works in ways we do not understand and know; and it may be that the wanderers can be brought back most effectively, the whole nation be made more really Christian, by the steady witness of the consistent, Christ-like lives of the faithful, rather than by sudden and striking appeals.

The conversion of the world is, under God, to be brought about by the witness of those who believe, who have tasted and seen how gracious the Lord is. Whether it may be possible for us, say next year, to have the message of the Mission brought to us so that we may directly share in its help and blessing is a question we ought to consider. I do not blame myself for our being out of the work so far as this year is concerned. The hugeness of it all in the more populous places down South, the peculiar difficulties of our Diocese—with its long distances, its infrequent and uncertain means of communication, the smallness of our centres—all seemed to point to our standing aside at least this year. If we are to do anything next year I want to impress upon you all—laity as well as clergy—that there must be adequate preparation as far as possible beforehand. It is nothing less than blasphemy to call upon the help of the Holy Spirit if we have not prepared our hearts—and as far as possible the hearts of our people—to receive the message He has for us. The ground must be prepared before the seed is sown—and the work must be continued after the Mission is over. That is our part and duty: to prepare beforehand, to watch over and guard what the Holy Spirit has done afterwards. For God works on man through man in His normal working. The most fatal attitude towards a Mission is to look upon it as a last resort when other things have failed, to expect God to intervene in a special way because other methods have failed. But whether we can have any direct help from the Mission by having it in some of our centres or not, I want to impress upon you that we do share in its blessings. For we are part of the whole Body of Christ—members of that body—and when any member rejoices we rejoice with it; when any member is strengthened we share in that strength. Let us never forget that glorious truth of the Communion of Saints, and all the comfort and blessing it means to us—and the responsibilities and duties it imposes upon us.

In the twenty-two months that have passed since my enthronement, I have been able to visit a good deal of the Diocese, but not so much as I could have wished. Whether it will ever be possible to visit the whole of it depends on whether we shall be able to travel by aeroplanes in the near future. I can think of no other means of locomotion that would make it possible. The claims of the Torres Straits Mission made great demands upon my time last year. Now that we are fully staffed there, it will not be so necessary to make so many visits or to have to arrange to be making frequent short trips. This year I have felt bound to spend a good deal of time at Normanton. It may be that some parts of the Diocese feel that it is not quite fair that the Bishop should spend so much time in one place. I must ask them to realise I have done so in consequence of the war. I could not get anyone to take Mr Hall's place when he went as chaplain, and it seemed the more to be a duty to do what could be done for the parish, as the people are paying Mr Hall's stipend while he is away. We must make our sacrifices as well as the rest of the community. I have visited some or other of the islands in the Straits seven times, Cooktown four times, the Mitchell River Mission, Mossman and Port Douglas, and Croydon twice, Georgetown, Darwin, Pine Creek, the Roper River Mission, and Burketown once each. During last year I went to Sydney for General Synod, and while away took a confirmation tour in the Diocese of Armidale when the See was vacant. I visited 13 centres in that Diocese and confirmed 260 candidates.

In our own Diocese there have been two confirmations at Cooktown, one each at Thursday Island, Normanton, Croydon, Mossman, and the Mitchell River, when 21 male and 50 female candidates were confirmed. In addition to these there have been 13 confirmations in the Torres Straits Islands, as well as two in the Cathedral for boys who for one reason or another missed their confirmation in the Islands, and there has been one confirmation of aborigines at the Mitchell River Mission. 592 Torres Straits islanders have been confirmed: 240 males and 352 females. 8 aborigines have been confirmed (3 males and 5 females), and since our survey must cover the last four years, we have to add 13 to confirmations taken by Bishop White between the time of the last Conference and his departure from the Diocese. There were 97 candidates confirmed by Bishop White: 47 male and 50 female. That is 768 candidates have been confirmed since the last Conference. The large number is due to confirmations in the Islands.

There has been no church building except the, ecclesiastically, north aisle of the Cathedral and the Church at S. Paul's, Moa. Two windows have been placed in the Cathedral, one to the memory of Deaconess Buchanan, the other to the memory of Mr and Mrs Archer, who were drowned in the Quetta. The tower and spire and porch are all that remains to be built to complete the original design of the Cathedral. We need a new edition of "The Red Book" to make the history of the Cathedral more up-to-date, and the account of the various memorials more complete, and though I would not ask for any money to be spent upon it at present, something ought to be done in the way of gathering material and verifying statements. Those who are able to give us reliable information are getting fewer and fewer as time goes by, and already legends have grown about the Quetta. The church at Mossman remains much as it was four years ago. There is a sum of about £50 in hand to go on with the work, and when this has been increased and prices of cement and other materials have gone down, a start towards completing the building may be made. I am afraid the people of Mossman are not very enthusiastic about the building, though when it is finished it will be a beautiful church, and I must confess that I agree with the Rector in his desire to have nothing but the best possible to offer to God for the services of the Church. The people of Darwin have let the contract for the building of a new rectory. The church buildings in the Diocese are in a fair state of repair, though in nearly every case there is need for paint and slight repairs. The old iron from the roof of the Church at Georgetown has been sold, arrangements having been made for storing the furniture, which had been protected by the iron from the weather since the church was blown down some years ago. The money has been banked to form the nucleus of a fund for Church purposes at some future time.

There will be placed on the table statements of various accounts, and reports. We cannot afford to have these printed, so we must ask you to make yourselves acquainted with them as best you can. There will be an opportunity of dealing with them in debate at a later period, so I will not refer to them in detail. I ought, however, to call to your notice how very much we are indebted to various Church societies in England, to the Carpentarian Association, and to the Walter and Eliza Hall Trust. From the trustees we not only receive a grant of £150 a year for general purposes, but they also give £100 a year to the Bishop's income. These are annual grants.

The late Mr Robert Christison left a sum of £600 to Bishop White in trust, the income to be used for a Bush Brotherhood in the Diocese of Carpentaria, or such other purpose as the Bishop was satisfied with. This money has been invested as directed by the terms of the will, and we have received the first instalment of interest. We have had a good deal of correspondence about the Trust, and no means have yet been devised to secure it in perpetuity for the Diocese.

LANDS.

The Diocesan Council has done something towards getting the titles and the trusts of the lands of the Diocese into order. It is a long, wearisome business. All the lands in the State of Queensland—except a few gold mining or homestead leases, and one allotment at Port Douglas—are now held by the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland in trust for the Diocese of Carpentaria. There are lands in the Northern Territory still held in the name of Bishop White. They present a complicated problem, but Mr Roberts, of Darwin, is doing what he can, and some day the difficulties will be got over. It seems to me to be wisdom, as far as is possible, to have our lands held by one set of trustees, and that a corporation which cannot die. We decided on the Corporation of the Synod of the Diocese of North Queensland, as that body already held some of our lands in trust. There is one allotment at Port Douglas held by trustees who cannot be found or have not been found so far.

PAROCHIAL STATISTICS.

On the whole we may congratulate the parishes on their financial position on March 31st, 1917. There were no serious debts, and some of the parishes had credit balances, but it must be remembered that stipends are very small. In some cases marriage fees and offerings at churchings are paid into the parish funds, and even the Easter offerings, although all these are, strictly speaking, the property of the parish priest. At the same time I cannot withhold an expression of my gratitude for what is being done by Church people. Except for concerts and bona fide sales of work, no money is raised in the Diocese—so far as I know—except by straight-out giving. Dancing and raffling as a means of raising money are strictly avoided. I believe that everyone concerned with raising money for Parochial and Diocesan purposes in this Diocese is loyal to the Bishop in this matter, in spite of the temptation to raise money easily and in large sums by other means. And of course there are no pew rents. The Churches are free and open—as they should be—being the spiritual homes of God's children. Indeed, I do not believe we could lock some of our Churches if we wished to do so. I would that people made more use of the opportunity for private prayer and meditation in the Churches. And I must express my admiration for the way in which the parish priests use the opportunity of giving our children definite Church teaching in the State Schools—and my thanks to the schoolmasters for the help they give us in this matter.

But though our people are doing so much for parochial and diocesan finance, I have something against them. We are not doing as much as we ought to do in the way of raising money for the Missionary work of the Church. I know that we have as a Diocese done what we undertook to do four years ago—raise £50 a year for the Australian Board of Missions. We have done it because some parishes have done well. I want to see the amount increased, and I would ask the churchwardens to consider whether they cannot set apart ten per cent of the income of the parish—not of course including grants—for Missions, and to make it a first charge on their funds. It can be done, and the doing of it will mean blessing on the parish—certainly spiritually, probably also financially—but whether there is any gain or not, the support of the Missionary work of the Church is the first duty of every Church man and Church woman, and children must be taught the duty and the privilege. We have a splendid opportunity of doing that through the Heralds of the King. "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Those are our marching orders. 'God will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth,' and God uses men and women as His agents for carrying out His purpose. We cannot all go and directly do this work, but we can all do our share by prayer and interest and alms. And we ought to do something in our parishes to shew our appreciation of the work of the English Church Societies and what they have done for us here in Carpentaria. I should agree that the ten per cent on the income be used to cover all those claims, and I would suggest that the Diocesan Council be authorised to allocate part of the funds to A.B.M. and to the English Societies. I know that our returns do not shew all the money that has been raised by the Church in the Diocese, and especially during the past two years. There has been a good deal done for the Soldiers' Help Society and other purposes; and herein I wish to congratulate the Parish of Croydon and the Parish of Darwin. Croydon raised over £50 and Darwin over £31 for Lavender Day.

MOTHERS' UNION AND THE GIRLS' FRIENDLY SOCIETY.

I want to commend the Mothers' Union and the Girls' Friendly Society to the earnest consideration of the women in our Diocese. It is difficult to find those who can manage these societies in some parishes, but it is important that there should be live branches of each in every settlement. The greatest evil in our days, and the greatest danger to our moral and spiritual life, is impurity. Drunkenness and gambling are terrible social evils, but I doubt whether either of them is so dangerous as the sin of impurity. The Church is bound to face and to fight this evil, to do all that can be done to stamp it out by the help of the Holy Spirit, and the best way of all is by cultivating the positive virtue of purity, and raising the ideal of parenthood, and that is what these two Societies can do. We want mothers to realize the high privilege and honour that is theirs, and, by prayer and mutual sympathy, to raise the tone of their homes and of social life. We want all our girls, as candidates and members of the G.F.S., to be banded together, that they may have strength given them, by union and by their combined intercessions, to help themselves and others. We want them to be passed from one branch to another as they move about, so that they may find friends wherever they go, to help them in those dangerous days when they feel strange and lonely in a strange place, and from that very feeling are in danger of temptation. To a very great extent men are what their women friends wish them to be—not that the blame for sin lies always at the door of women, but because the high ideals of purity held by women react on men and make them reverence women. Of course men have their duty, and I would hope that branches of the C.E.M.S. could be formed, with the definite aim and object of combating this evil, of spreading information—and encouraging a high ideal of our powers—of the privileges and honour which are ours because we are men. But whether as members of an organization or as individual Christians, I do claim that fathers of our families and other men shall do their duty in raising the ideal of manhood and the tone of society, that lapses from purity shall not be treated as a matter of course, nor spoken of as such. We want our men to be ready, in season and out of season, to combat those damnable lies that are used to excuse sin and degrade human nature. Those plausible lies of an animalistic creed which say a man has a right to live his life in his own way—a man has a right to use his powers as he likes and to learn from experience what they are—that a man is not a complete man unless he uses those powers—that indulgence is necessary for health—and such lies with which men stifle their consciences and excuse themselves. Man is not a mere animal, man is not an isolated individual, with responsibilities only to himself—man is not a real man unless he practices self-discipline. That the chaste life is the safe life and the proper life is the judgment of leading medical men. And yet there are tens of thousands of young men who believe no doctor would advise a man to practise self-restraint and self-discipline. My brethren, we are called upon to fight a battle against the most terrible of social evils, one which most of all drags a man down to the level of the beasts, one that is most effective and far reaching in spreading diseases and passing on its terrible effects to generations to come, one which, most of all, deadens spiritual perception and powers. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." And nothing so blinds our eyes to a knowledge of God and of spiritual things as does impurity in thought and word and deed. Self-abuse and impurity in all its forms is the most terrible of sins, because it is the prostitution to personal pleasure of the very highest gifts with which God has endowed our physical nature—the power of co-operating with Him in the bringing into existence immortal souls. Let us be full of pity and love for those who have fallen and who strive to rise again, but let us be absolutely determined and in earnest in fighting this evil.

To the pure, all things are pure; and the pure minded can speak of these things without defiling themselves or others—but only the pure-minded can do so. The danger is not in speaking of them, but in leaving the evil-minded to do so; and it is of the first importance that we be pure in thought and word and deed ourselves.

There is perhaps hardly a Diocese anywhere in which the work of the Church is so varied, and in some ways so difficult, as in this Diocese of ours. I would touch on some parts of our work, if you can have patience with me.

You know the history of the Torres Straits Mission. How we were asked by the L.M.S. to take over the spiritual oversight of their converts. We have here a most interesting and important work: the building up of the characters of a people emerging from barbarism to civilization, whose attitude to life is still coloured by their old beliefs. It is work which needs tact and wisdom, for we are in touch with the Government administration and with the trading community. I do not believe that if we had sat down and drawn up specifications for a man most suitable for starting the work we could have devised a better than the first priest, the Rev. J. J. E. Done. He seems to have all the gifts that are most needed. And Mr Luscombe and Mr MacFarlane are not far behind him. I am glad we have been able to work in perfect harmony with the officials of the Home Secretary's Department and with the employers of labour. To the teachers we owe a debt of gratitude for much help and advice about the people, and I would assure the Government officials and the employers of labour that it is the earnest wish of every member of the staff to work harmoniously with them. We will do all we can to emphasise the teaching of the Church Catechism that part of the duty of a Christian is to honour and obey the King and all that are put in authority under him. I want to make our position quite plain and clear. It is a question of Christian principle and Christian truth. The Christian is to lead a disciplined life, and part of that discipline is respect for those in authority. Man is a whole, and you cannot have discipline in spiritual matters if you do not insist on it in material worldly things. And in the matter of work and labour, we have our guidance. The Fourth Commandment says: Six days shalt thou labour and do all that thou hast to do. The Catechism teaches us that we have to learn and labour truly to get our own living. St. Paul says: If a man will not work neither shall he eat. We are bound to teach our people the duty and the dignity of work. But of course, there are duties on the part of Government and of employers; may I insist that they should remember the responsibility that rests on them. And may I be so bold as to make a suggestion to the Government of the country; it is this: that a definite policy be formulated for the future of these people. We have played with the matter too long. As a State, we do not know what we are driving at. I should like to see a Protector appointed to administer the affairs of the Islanders, and that he should have nothing else to do. Find a man who can be trusted with almost absolute power, who has sympathy with the people and tact in dealing with them; who realises the rights and duties of the white race, who is at the same time level-headed enough to realise that the truest kindness to these people is to sympathise with them and to try and understand their point of view, and yet is not blinded by his sympathy to other and wider claims. Such a man, with time and patience and sympathy to enter into the grievances of the people with firmness and justice in dealing with them, would gain their confidence and be able to lead them, so that in time they will be able to stand alone. They cannot do so now, and they will need careful handling and leading if they are ever to do so. Such an official should of course be free from all political influence; he should be free to lay down regulations which have the force of law; he should be free to select his own subordinates; and I do not see why the people should not be taxed to help pay the cost of the administration of their affairs—and under a wise and firm administration the wealth these people could produce would make them able to pay such a tax. With some such system, combined with spiritual training and the grace given by God through the Church, it would be possible for a race to be developed which could take its place and do its part in the settlement of the North, and we are just at the period when the race will be made or marred. The people are getting restless; they want to use their powers; they want liberty to be as others while they are not yet ready to use it. They want to take the reins while they should still be in leading strings. And let us always remember we are working for the future, and not merely for the present. Government, Employer, and Missionary all need to remember this. And in that connection may I beg that people will not expect great results in a short time from the work of the Mission. The building up of character is a slow process, and progress is only made sometimes through falls and failures.

The work amongst the aborigines of Australia is quite different at its present stage from that amongst the Torres Straits islanders. Mr Matthews is here to tell you about what is being done at Trubanaman. Here and on the Roper we have a nomadic people, and we have first to train them to live a settled life. And progress is being made. On the reserve at Trubanaman a good deal of farming is done, and we are gradually building up a herd of cattle so that we shall have a title from use to the reserve. To my mind the natives have an inalienable moral right to the reserve, but we have to face the fact that Governments find it difficult to act on moral rights, and they might feel the force of an argument that the country is not being used. We are keeping any money we receive from the sale of stock in a separate account, to be used for the development of the reserve and the direct benefit of the natives. Of course some will say that Missionaries are making a good thing out of the natives—any stick is good enough to beat such a dog with. We want to be able to shew how the money has been used. It is difficult to give any idea of the spiritual work done amongst the aborigines. Such things cannot be reduced to statistics. All I can say is that those who work amongst them and know them best believe that the Holy Spirit is working and that the people do respond. Here as elsewhere spiritual things are spiritually discerned, and I can assure you that our missionaries to the aborigines, while they have great faith in their people and sympathy with them, are not blinded by that sympathy to the faults and weakness of the people they are working amongst. In the Northern Territory one great problem that faces the Church is what is to be done for the large number of half-caste children. Church and State need to co-operate to solve it.

While missionary work to the coloured people looms large in our vision and makes great demands on us, we have to remember that there are people of our own race who have a claim on the ministry of the Church. And how are we to minister to them? The steady depopulation of the North is a serious problem for the authorities in Church and State. We are faced with decaying townships and huge pastoral areas. There is not a parish or district in the Diocese able to pay its own way. We have lost earnest and self-sacrificing Churchmen from every district, and the exodus continues. The only place which is not on the down grade is Darwin, and that is supported by Commonwealth money and the large meat works which began operations this year. I believe that we must work the Gulf by some sort of a Brotherhood. We should have five priests working from Normanton visiting all the stations and centres of population from the range on the east to the Northern Territory on the west, and from the sea to the southern boundary of the Diocese. They would visit comparatively few people, but the importance of the work in the Church is not measured by counting noses. The northern part of the Peninsula should be visited from Trubanaman, which would mean a second priest there. A man is wanted for Mt. Molloy and the district north, and three men are needed for the Northern Territory: one to work along the railway to Katherine, and give some help in Darwin, where the meat works employ a large number of men; one to work east and south; another west and south from Katherine; and a man is wanted to work from Alice Springs. All these men except the one at Alice Springs should meet from time to time in Darwin, as the Gulf men should meet in Normanton. That is my ideal. It means nine more men in the Diocese than we have at present and an increase of income of some £2000, besides money for initial expenses. People will say, impossible; perhaps it is now, but I will never be satisfied till something of the kind is done. The lonely people of the bush must be ministered to, and the health of the whole Church depends on its being done. And they are worth time and trouble and expense. I could give you instances from my own knowledge of the wonderful effect the work of the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson has had, and how the people in the bush respond to interest and sympathy.

And before we leave our own work, I want to place on record my own sense of the loyalty and devotion of the priests of the Diocese. It is they who are doing the hard uphill work, and doing it well. Their courage and devotion put me to shame as I go about. They have their reward. And I would also express my gratitude to all those members of the Diocesan Council and others who have always been ready to give of their time and advice whenever I have called for them, and they have given them willingly and gladly. We would remember those who have been called to their rest during the past four years, and who gave of their best to this Diocese in one way or another. I cannot pretend to know of them all, but you will allow me to mention four: William Lee-Bryce, Deaconess Buchanan, Gertrude Robson, and Martha Matthews. There are others I know who, like these, have in their own ways done much for God in this Diocese. They are still members of the Catholic Church at rest in Paradise waiting for us to follow their good examples of loyal devotion to our Lord. They are one with us and we with them. We thank God for what they did and what they were, and pray that we may carry on their work and our work, which is the work of our God and our Saviour.

I have little time to spare for wider interests and world-wide problems that in their magnitude almost stun us, and in their insistence force themselves on our attention.

I need only say there is no doubt about our loyalty to the Throne and Empire. That we are absolutely convinced from the bottom of our hearts of the rightness and justice of the cause for which our brothers are fighting. We are glad that we have been able to rise to the call that has been and is still being made upon us. We are convinced too that in the end victory will be ours, though it may take a long time to achieve it, and many more sacrifices may be demanded from us. We are also quite certain that the end to be gained—the triumph of truth and honour and liberty—are worth the cost, no matter how great it may be. Our admiration goes forth to the soldiers and sailors who have been so ready to lay down their lives for principle and to suffer for an ideal. We offer our sympathy and respect to all who mourn for those dearer than life they have willingly surrendered. There is one pressing need, one which overshadows all others, the imperative need to gain absolute and complete triumph for those principles which alone make life on earth worth living.

There are many plans in the air for the reconstruction of the world after the war, a reconstruction which will be absolutely necessary; for surely we can never be content to go back to the ideals and aims that influenced us in the days that seem so far from us now. We are sure that there can be no permanent improvement, no lasting building, unless we build upon the foundation of those truths, revealed through the Incarnation and Passion of the Son of God. Except the Lord build the house, their labour is but lost that build it. Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain. The war is not a proof of the failure of Christianity, but of the failure of Christians to be true and loyal to their faith. There is a call to reality in religion. The Church must do her part in the reconstruction of the world. She can only do it if every one of her children is absolutely and whole-heartedly sincere—no matter what it may cost—in trying by the grace of God to be true and loyal. It is no use calling on leaders to lead if the rank and file do not follow. The strength of the Church, apart from God, lies in the love and loyalty of her children, and they can bear such witness as will convince the world.

We shall surely all of us have a new standard of values, or at least one different from what we were content to measure values by in the days of long ago. Not length of days on earth, not material wealth and earthly enjoyment, not a successful career in this life, not even the happiness of sons and daughters doing more with their lives than their fathers did—these have all been reckoned as nothing compared with the glory of self-sacrifice and devotion to duty and honour. The very best of our young men, who had every prospect of earthly success and honour, have shewn what is worth living for by dying for it. We shall have a truer estimate of the things worth living for. And we shall have a truer estimate of the relative value of human beings and of material wealth. And in this, next to the lessons taught us by the life and death of our Lord—which are indeed the same lessons—lies our greatest, nay, the only hope for the settlement of vexed questions and disputes in the social and industrial world. There are heavy tasks before us, difficult problems to be solved, and we who are Christians believe the tasks can be completed, the problems can be solved, only if we bring the truths revealed and the grace given by our Lord to play their part—and that is only another way of saying if we Christian men and women are dead in earnest in living out the truths and humbly using the grace our heavenly Father gives us. The Incarnation of the Son of God means that the whole of our life and all that concerns it have been taken into union with God—and from Him can come all that is needed to enable us to live full and perfect lives—approaching perfection here, reaching it hereafter.

"I am come that they may have life and that they might have it more abundantly," our Lord says. The life here and the life hereafter is one and the same, though lived under different conditions. He shows us what life is—in self-sacrifice for God and for other men, and He gives us the grace, without which we cannot hope to live it under our conditions here on earth. May the Holy Spirit guide us and strengthen us in these days and the days to come, to endeavour ourselves to live that life by the grace God gives us,

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and amongst the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop arrived in Normanton from the Mitchell River Mission Station on September 12, 1917, and spent twelve days there, visiting the people, holding services, and taking classes in the school. He left Normanton for Burketown on September 24th, travelling in a sulky by himself. At two of the stations there were children to be baptized, at Wernadinga and at Armaragnald, and the Bishop had a celebration of the Holy Communion at Armaragnald. Services were held at Burketown on two Sundays, September 30th and October 7th, but on neither Sunday were there any communicants present for the celebration. Classes were held in the State school on two mornings during the week, the people were visited, and three children were baptized. Visits were paid to two stations to the west of Burketown, and the Bishop left on his return to Normanton on Monday, October 8th. In order to get to Augustus Downs Station, 48 miles had to be covered the first day, and the Bishop camped for the night on the bank of the Leichhardt River, getting to Augustus Downs the next day. This station is 28 miles up the Leichhardt, on the Oloncurry Road, above the crossing at Floraville, near Wernaduega Station, so the visit made an additional fifty-six miles on the return journey from Burketown to Normanton. Had time allowed it, the return to Normanton might have been made through Lorraine, Ramilaroy, and Donon Hills, but that would have taken much longer and made it a heavy journey for the one horse. Want of time and dependence on one horse also made it impossible to get to several stations west and southwest of Burketown.

A Sunday was spent in Normanton, and the Bishop left by train for Croydon on October 16th. The Rector had a pretty full programme of work arranged for the week. On Wednesday, October 17th, the Bishop left by coach for the Gilbert River, where he was met at midday by Mr. McIvor. Service was held that night, and the next day, after the lesson had been given to the children in the school, Mrs McIvor drove the Bishop to Forest Home, where service was held in the evening, and there was a celebration of Holy Communion the next morning. Mr Wilson drove the Bishop to Crooked Creek, the school was visited there, and service was held that night at Wollaston. Next day Mr Green took the Bishop in his motor car to Georgetown, where he was the guest of Mrs J. J. Moran from Saturday, October 27th, to Tuesday, October 30th. The Bishop visited the people, took the children in the school, and held services at Georgetown and at Durham. Mr. Moran drove the Bishop out to Durham on the Sunday afternoon. It was possible to get to Forsyth by a special coach on Tuesday, October 30th, and that meant two clear days in the township before the Croydon coach arrived and the mail train from Cairns. Those events make it impossible to do much in Forsyth on Thursday night. Here again the people were visited, classes were held in the school on two mornings. There was a service on Wednesday night in the hall, and a celebration of the Holy Communion on All Saints' Day. The Bishop also baptized five children in Forsyth.

From Forsyth the journey was by train to Cairns, where four days were spent waiting for the Cooktown boat. The Bishop celebrated in St. John's, Cairns, on Sunday morning and preached there on Sunday evening. A night was spent in Cooktown, and then on to Thursday Island by the Gulf boat. This made it possible for four days to be spent at home, as the Mataram was late, before going on to Darwin, on November 14th. Engine troubles made the journey a very slow one, and the boat did not arrive in Darwin till midday on Sunday, November 18th. While in the territory the Bishop visited Pine Creek, but no attempt was made to get to outside places. The wet season had set in, and it is wisdom not to travel far from the railway line during the "wet."

A steamer was in Darwin loading frozen meat, the first shipment from the new Meat Works, and the Bishop was able to get a passage by her to Thursday Island, leaving Darwin on December 6th. This steamer did not put into the port at Thursday Island, but a launch met her and took off the passengers. It was fortunate that there was this opportunity of getting back from Darwin, as the Mataram was running late, and the Bishop had arranged to get to the Torres Straits Islands about the middle of December.

Mrs Newton accompanied the Bishop on his visit to Darwin and Pine Creek. She hoped to be able to establish branches of the Mothers' Union at each place, but apparently the time is not yet.

Christ Church, Cooktown.

There was a very large gathering of the parishioners of Christ Church, Cooktown, and of other friends, on Monday, October 29th, to bid good bye to the Rev. W. M. Wilkinson and Mrs Wilkinson, on the occasion of their departure from the North. Mr and Mrs Wilkinson left Cooktown on Wednesday, October 31st, for Sydney, en route for South Australia, where Mr Wilkinson has taken work under the Bishop of Willochra. It goes without saying that everyone in the diocese is sorry that Mr Wilkinson has had to leave the North, but the doctors have forbidden him to do any more riding, and have advised him to get to a better climate and to less arduous work. Under these conditions they hold out good hopes that it will not be necessary for him to undergo an operation which it was feared would be necessary early last year.

Mr Wilkinson has worked in the diocese of Carpentaria as a lay reader, deacon, and priest for nearly seventeen years, and he has worked in every parish except Thursday Island and Darwin. At Port Douglas and Mossman, at Croydon, Normanton, and at Cooktown he made many friends; but his most important work was as bush missionary. Again and again he travelled through the Peninsula, making Laura at the end of the railway line from Cooktown his head quarters. With a string of pack horses and a black boy he visited the lonely people of the bush—those on the overland telegraph stations, the mining camps, and on the cattle stations; and no distance was ever too great, no journey was ever too rough to prevent his bringing brightness and a message of peace and comfort.

The great journey he took through the Northern Territory in 1913 and in 1914, is still spoken of as one of the greatest feats of bush travelling in the North and Centre of Australia; and wherever he went his influence was great. His life and the influence of his life is a convincing proof of the appeal which self-sacrifice and devotion to duty makes to all sorts of people. We wish him and his wife every happiness and blessing in their new work.

The Rev. James Tweedie, Rector of Cooktown, and Mrs Tweedie, returned to Cooktown on Tuesday, October 30th, 1917. Mr Tweedie had been acting as Chaplain to the forces at the camp in Brisbane for nearly seven months. He found it a wonderful experience, and one he is grateful for having had the opportunity of this work.

A meeting of the Church Council was held in the Rectory, Cooktown, on Wednesday, November 7th, at which the Bishop of the Diocese presided. Various matters were discussed, among them the question of the lighting of the Church—a very serious one in these days when carbide is such a high price, and a place is at such a low ebb as Cooktown is. It was decided to try some other and cheaper means of lighting the Church. The treasurer of the Church Repair Fund reported that a little more than £75 was in hand for the repair of the Church.

This has been raised by direct giving, and the success of the effort is mainly due to Miss Allen. It was decided to have estimates obtained for the repairs most urgently needed, and for the cost of them.

At present there are rather more people in Cooktown. Families have come in from the mining places on the Peninsula; but they are birds of passage, waiting till the fathers can find work in other places, and make a new home.

All Souls' Cathedral, Thursday Island.

The Bishop baptised two Chinese girls in the Cathedral, on Saturday, November 10th, and confirmed them on Sunday, November 11th, after the third Collect at Mattins. These two girls had been prepared for baptism and Confirmation with other candidates for Confirmation by the Sub-dean; but as they were leaving the Island for Innisfail, the opportunity of the Bishop being at home for a few days on his way to Darwin was taken to have the girls baptised and confirmed before they left for their new home.

The (ecclesiastically) west end of the Cathedral—which is a temporary weatherboard wall until such time as the Cathedral can be completed—has been painted, and the result is pleasing.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The new Rectory is finished and Mr and Mrs Lane are occupying it. The old rookery of a building, which has been for a long time an eye sore to everybody, and was very uncomfortable and also unsafe to live in, has been pulled down. With a loan of £350 from the Diocesan Council, the Wardens had enough money to pay off the contractor, including £40 which was received for the material in the old building. There is a sum of £88 in hand. The parish has undertaken to pay off the loan from the Diocesan Council at the rate of £50 a year, and to pay the Council 5 per cent. for the loan. It seems likely that the Wardens will be able to pay two instalments during the first year. The people of Darwin are to be congratulated on having raised some £200 for the building by straight-out giving in six months. They had another £200 in hand—a fund raised some time ago for a Rectory. The Rectory is a small building, but very substantial, and it will be possible to enlarge it when better times come, and the cost of building is not so prohibitive as it is in these days. There is still a good deal to be done in the way of beautifying the grounds of the Church and the Rectory; but the people of Darwin can be depended upon to do that. They have shown a desire to improve the appearance of the Church inside by providing new hangings for the sanctuary.

The Bishop arrived in Darwin on Sunday, November 18th, 1917, by the Mataram at midday, and he got to work, before his robes had arrived at the rectory, by speaking to the children at the service in the afternoon. In the evening he confirmed two candidates, both adult males, one of whom had been conditionally baptized by the priest in charge.

A parish social was held in the Town Hall on the evening of Tuesday, November 20th, to welcome the Bishop and Mrs Newton to Darwin. The hall was very full, and the ladies of the Refreshment Committee were on tenter hooks about there not being enough refreshments; but they need not have been nervous. When did a refreshment committee of ladies find themselves short in that for which they are responsible? However, an extra supply of such things as ginger beer had to be sent for. Speeches were made by the Priest in charge and by the Churchwardens, Messrs Barnes and Roberts, welcoming the Bishop and Mrs Newton. The Bishop in his reply, congratulated the parish on the disappearance of the old rookery and on the new Rectory, and especially on the fact that the money had been raised by direct giving. He asked the Red Cross Committee to consider whether it would not be possible to raise their funds without resorting to methods that savour of gambling.

He also spoke about the movement inaugurated by the Church Council at Normanton to provide a motor car for the Diocese.

Various people contributed to the enjoyment of the meeting by musical items, and those responsible are to be congratulated on a pleasant evening.

The Bishop and Mrs Newton visited Pine Creek, and while there were the guests of Mrs Tamblyn, of the Cosmopolitan Battery. The Bishop celebrated Holy Communion and preached at Pine Creek on Sunday, November 25th; he spoke to the children of the Sunday School in the afternoon and preached at Even-song. After the Evening Service a meeting of the Church Council was held in the Church, at which the Bishop took the chair. The Church at Pine Creek has been very much improved and brightened.

On St. Andrew's Day the Bishop celebrated in the parish Church and preached at the Service of Intercession for Missions in the evening. He also celebrated at 7.30 a.m., preached morning and evening and spoke to the children on Advent Sunday.

A meeting of the Church Council at Darwin was held in the Vestry on Monday, December 3rd, at which the Bishop presided. After the business was finished, the Bishop asked the Council to think about the advisability of a Mission being held in Darwin during 1918. He explained the reasons why it had been thought wise for the diocese to be out of the General Mission to the Province which had been held this year; and he asked the Council to realise that it would be worse than useless to have a Mission unless there was preparation before hand; and also unless the Church people themselves were prepared to take their part in it.

The Mission must be an effort made by the parish, not by the Priest and Missioner only. He did not ask for an immediate decision, but for the members of the Council, as representing the Church people of Darwin, to think about and to pray about this matter, and to come to a decision at their next meeting.

Letter from the Rev. C. Hall.

The following letter from the Rev. Charles Hall, Rector of Normanton, was received by the Bishop in July last. Unfortunately there was no room for it in the October issue of the Carpentarian; but it is so interesting, that late as it is, the editor thinks it well to publish it. Mr Hall writes from St. Margaret's Rectory, New Galloway, Scotland.

My Dear Bishop,

Here I am in Scotland, staying for a few days with Mr Mayhew, who used to have charge of Clayfield, Brisbane. The scenery, including Loch Ken and Mount Berman, is simply beautiful, especially after the dreary outlook at Normanton.

You have no doubt wondered what has happened that I have not written before. Really I was so busy on board, censoring soldiers' letters. I simply had no time to write my own. Since we landed I have been rushing everywhere.

Just to give a few jottings of the trip. We left in the ——— on ———, with a good complement of first-class passengers, in addition to 1300 troops, being parts of various units. We had a most enthusiastic send-off. The wharves were simply swarming with waving crowds, dressed in the smartest fashion. From ship to shore were hundreds of gaily coloured streamers, and the effect in the glorious sunshine was simply beautiful. I shall never forget it. Still it was not without its note of sadness, for notwithstanding all our pleadings the authorities would not allow the people in the enclosure until after the boat had pulled out amidstream. It was hard to suppress one's emotions, with so many fine men giving way to their feelings. Bands from ship and shore played, as the ship slowly left, amidst rounds and rounds of cheering. All vessels lying at anchor or moored alongside the various wharves bid us good-bye in the good old British way by sounding whistles or syrens. Every ferry boat which passed us greeted us in the same fashion. We had most delightful weather to ———. The O.C. arranged that I should take the general parade on the Sunday, as the other padre was not to join us till we got to ———. The service was a wonderful experience and went off well, and incidentally it helped to give me confidence. After that I was quite all right for the rest of the voyage. Still, speaking to about 1500 people after a life in the bush was a strange emotion. We had a day or so in ———, which I enjoyed. I spent my time in purchasing things I wanted, for I had had so little time to get things together in Brisbane and Sydney. I stayed a night at my brother's place at ———. Some 400 more men embarked here. On leaving ———, the scene was, if anything, even more exciting. Thousands of people took advantage of the concession made by the authorities to throw the new pier open to see us off.

I set to work and looked out the talent we had on board, and arranged for a concert that night, which every one enjoyed. Now we began to settle down to ship's life, and full arrangements were made for the working of the ship. The chaplains had to do all the censoring work, and a stiff job we found it, too.

I found the Presbyterian chaplain and his wife both charming people. They had given five sons to the war. We all got on happily together. The captain of the ship would not allow services to be held on different decks at the same time, and the O. C. would not have services at different times, so I had to work in with the Presbyterian for the general parades on Sunday mornings, but had a communion every Sunday morning at 7 a.m. and a Church of England Evensong on Sunday nights in the second saloon. I must say how well these services were attended, and on Easter Day, which we spent at sea, I had something like 200 communicants. My time was spent among the men during the week in getting to know them and in arranging sports and amusements for them. There was a committee formed for this purpose, and the chaplains were ex-officio members of it. I was able to get together a number of confirmation candidates, but had the greatest difficulty in fitting in times for instruction. The day began with parade at 6.30 until 7.30. Breakfast, parade 9.30 until 12, lunch and a further parade from 2.30 to 4 p.m., and then sports and concerts till we got into the danger zone, when all lights had to be out, with no smoking for the men.

We called at ———, so while the troops all went for a route march, I got leave and went up to the city itself. I had to buy some more requisites. I was quite delighted with the place. We experienced the roughest part of our journey in ———. This I did not enjoy, for of course I was dreadfully ill, but so were all the rest. The only other two or three bad days were just before we got to England. For the rest of the time the weather was delightful. I spent quite a happy time at ———, and met the Archbishop, who had just returned from a visit to the troops.

After a very pleasant run of ——— days, we reached ———. Here we spent an afternoon on shore. I found it all most interesting. To see all these natives at work at the ship's side was a great education to those of us who had never been outside Australia. The ladies at ——— are very energetic in entertaining the soldiers, and sell everything to them for one penny. We met our first scare here, for the ——— had just met with its mishap a week before. This meant we had to be escorted to ——— which we reached in about ———. We managed to get a few hours off here, and I had the good luck to meet Mr Boulton, who was a Chaplain on one of the other troopships which was waiting for us there. He used to work Oloncurry in the Brotherhood district, and on one occasion came from Camowal through Normanton parish to Oloncurry. We spent the day together, and went for a grand tour round the mountains to ———. The scenery of the ——— is inspiring. I shall never forget the Church parade on the Sunday morning in the bay beneath the mountains with the marvellous blends of light and shade.

On leaving ———, we took our place in the convoy, escorted by sea dogs. Owing to the limited speed of some of the vessels we had a slow and somewhat monotonous passage to ———. Again I got leave, and though the place is well named "the White Man's Grave," owing to the climate, I spent a most enjoyable time at a grammar school prize giving, at which all the best classes, coloured and white, were assembled. I had my vision enlarged as to what Christian education can do for the natives of ———.

Now after leaving this place the fun began. We had practically to live in our life belts. We heard all kinds of rumours of sinking of hospital ships and all the rest of it. We used to get the news from the battleship every day. Still nothing happened, though we heard they were operating not many miles away. There was a sigh of relief and wild excitement on board when we were met by a number of destroyers. They raced up in file, and then darted off each to a single ship in the convoy, and off we steamed at full speed for dear life in all directions. As we had the most pace we got to ——— first. Oh! what a restful sleep I had that night inside the safe harbour of ———. We had the unique experience of disembarking next day in the snow. Rather late in the year for snowing, but this has been the longest and severest winter on record.

The troops all went to ——— to be sorted up for their various camps, while I had to go to London to report. I did enjoy the beauties of the country. I got to Paddington station at 11 at night, without the remotest idea where to go. However, several of our nurses were in the same train, so they advised us to go to the Ivanhoe Hotel, Russell Square, where the military people all go. This I did, and stayed there for a few days until settled. I went to the offices of the A.I.F. next day and got four days' leave. So off I went seeing friends and sight-seeing. You can just imagine what a revelation London was to me. When I went back to the Chief Chaplain on Monday I found out there would not be a chance of returning for some time, so I applied for a month's leave without pay. I wanted to see Mr Mayhew here in Scotland and other friends scattered over England. I thought I might as well do that as be stuck in Salisbury Plain. If I am wanted before the month is up I shall be called up. I have been to service at St. Paul's, the Abbey, Leeds, and all kinds of places. I have seen the Tower, the Museum, and most places of note. I have not missed the opportunity to visit the theatres either. It is all very wonderful being here in England, but it is all very sad to see the sick and wounded, and the strange look on the faces of the sufferers. We are on rations in the matter of food, and if things do not improve, there is likely to be a great scarcity.

I hope everything is going well with you in the diocese. You must find it a great tax having Normanton on your hands, but I hope it will not be long before I get back to relieve you.

The amount of juvenile vice is rather alarming.

With kindest thoughts,

Yours very sincerely,

CHARLES HALL.

P.S.—I had a splendid time with Bishop Montgomery, and attended the 260th anniversary of S.P.G.

Unity.

The Commission on Faith and Order of the Episcopal Church of America, which was formed some years ago to discuss matters relating to the Reunion of Christendom, has asked that the eight days January 18 to January 25th, be observed throughout the world by all Christians as a season of intercession for Reunion.

There can surely be no doubt at all in the mind of any sincere Christian that it is the duty of all who profess and call themselves Christians to work for and to pray for Reunion. In the first place unity is very near to the heart of our Lord. It was one of the objects for which He prayed just before His Passion, and as it loomed so big at such a time, it is obvious that to our Lord it was of first rate importance, and that He knew that the danger of the Unity being broken was a very real and serious danger. Were there no other reasons why we should aim at Unity, the mere fact that it is the will of our Lord that the Church should be one must drive us to do all we can that His will may be done; our love for our Lord, our loyalty to Him are the tests of the reality of our religion, and these should be strong enough to override every other consideration. It is a plain and simple duty that we who are Christians see to it that whatever is dear to our Lord is dear to us.

But we may thank God that in His love and consideration for us, and as a help to brace us to do what is His will we are able to realise some other, if less important reasons why we should strive after Unity. God does not often ask of us mere implicit obedience without showing us how and why that obedience is right and good.

The Church was founded by our Lord that she might continue His work, and convert the world to loyalty and devotion to Him as the Saviour of the world. All that is needed for salvation has been done by our Lord Himself, but He has entrusted to His Church the privilege and the honour of being His agent in applying the benefit of His work to men. To convince the world that God has indeed sent His Son to be the Saviour of the world; and the Unity of the Church is essential to the effectiveness of the witness of the Church in the world. As trustees of the means of salvation Christians are bound to see to it that whatever interferes with the fulfilment of the trust is removed. It can surely be doubted by no one that the divisions of Christendom do hinder the acceptance by the world of the witness of the Church to the claims of our Lord. It may be that often the divisions of Christendom are merely an excuse, and not a reason for men to refuse acceptance of the witness; but we are warned of the danger and the risk of anything that causes others to stumble; and surely in so vital a matter we are bound to make every possible sacrifice to remove excuses and force men to face the issue that is placed before them. It is always a source of weakness when we have to explain a situation, the existence of which is used to ward off the direct attack of an appeal to the conscience. There can be no doubt that the present condition of Christendom is a source of weakness to the Church in carrying out the very purpose for which she was founded by our Lord.

The new commandment given us by our Lord is that we love one another. There is a demand that Christians shall sink everything that savours of pride, passion and prejudice, in order that we may be able to show that love which is to be the mark of those who profess to follow Jesus Christ. We may not be able to show to the world that spirit of love as perfectly as we should, even in a united Christendom, so long as we are liable to the temptations of life here upon earth, but we can at least strive to eliminate those things which make it more difficult to manifest the spirit of love. The divisions of Christendom do hinder the working of the spirit of love; it is our duty to remove them.

The conditions under which we live in these days of war, with all the suffering and sorrow and sin that are manifested are a call to all Christians to consider how we have been unfaithful to the trust committed to us, how unconvincing has been the witness we have borne to the claims of our Lord, and to the powers he has brought into the world to regenerate man. It would indeed be vain to claim that a united Christendom would have made it impossible for civilization to come to such chaos, but who can tell what the influence might have been, if not to prevent the war, at least to have mitigated its horrors; and who can tell what the influence of a united Christendom would be in determining the conditions of peace. How can we hope for the claims of Christianity to be listened to when the Church cannot speak with a voice which can demand attention. We may fairly claim that if the Church were one, the national and racial prejudices would be softened, whereas the divisions of Christendom tend to accentuate them.

Just because divisions hinder the work of the Church by accentuating prejudices and in weakening the influence of the Church, there is a call in these days to remove those divisions and strive for unity.

The task that faces the Church in bearing witness for the Lord to the whole world, in fighting against the sin of the world, and in bringing to bear the regenerating forces entrusted to her is so great, our failure is so manifest that we are surely bound in humble penitence to consider why we have failed to search our hearts and find out whether we have really been seeking the will of God, and that in God's way, or whether we have been seeking our own will. Whether we have worshipped our own way, or have been ready to sacrifice our wishes and prejudice that the will of God may be done.

The question of the reunion of Christendom is a very difficult one, and it is not to be solved by any short cuts by the various bodies of Christians looking for some common denominator in the faith and order of the Church. We are bound to be loyal to truth. To be false to truth might be to obtain some apparent unity which would not be real and therefore would not be permanent. It can hardly be doubted that the Divisions of Christendom have arisen from the over emphasis of some truth. No doubt human pride and prejudice, selfishness in some form or other, has had its influence in creating the schisms in the Body, and still more as time has gone on in perpetuating and hardening them. It is because the Church has neglected some truth in doctrine, or morals, or discipline that Truth has revenged herself, and the neglected truth has had to emphasise its claims unduly, and out of proportion to other truths or aspects of truth. And so the first step is one of penitence and of shame for neglect in the past. The next step should be one of humility. We must be prepared to admit that no one body of Christians presents the whole Truth in due proportion to the world, that other bodies of Christians have some real element of truth for which they stand. It is indeed, it must be, that it is this element of Truth which has given them stability and enabled them to bring forth the fruits of the spirit. It follows first that we all be absolutely loyal to the truth as we have received it, that we try to learn and understand what are these truths, that section of Christendom to which we belong stands for, and to be loyal to them, living them. We can only be loyal to the whole truth if we have the spirit of loyalty in our hearts, and that must show itself in loyalty to the truth as we have received it. The idea that it does not matter what a man believes, that we are all going the same way is one which is fatal to unity, for unity must be founded on Truth. But loyalty to truth as we have learnt it, does not mean that we are to deny that others have some truth, and it is most likely that these are truths we need in order that our conception of Truth may be balanced, and so we need to try and learn what truth other bodies of Christians stand for.

This seems to be the method of the Commission of Faith and Order, and because it is working on these lines, it holds out a real hope of effecting its purpose. Every body of Christians, i.e., those who accept our Lord Jesus Christ as the son of God and the Saviour of the World, have been asked to appoint Committees to consider what are the fundamental truths each stands for. It recognises that each body has some truth to emphasise some contribution to bring to the full conception of Truth, and it desires that each body will prayerfully study its own doctrines. Then when the time comes there is to be a world conference on Faith and Order when something of a definite nature towards Reunion may be done. The method is slow, but by the help and guidance of the Holy Spirit it may be sure. What is needed is first the realization by Christians of the duty of working for unity, arising out of loyalty to our Lord, love for Him, endeavoring first and foremost to bring about that which is dear to Him. Next we need an atmosphere of penitence for our past failure, and of humility, an earnest and sincere desire for truth. That means we must endeavor to cast out the spirits of pride, passion, prejudice and ignorance, for these are they which most of all hinder any honest desire for unity. This desire for unity, and this atmosphere in which alone the desire can be accomplished can only be gained by earnest prayer and effort on the part of Christians. It must be the work of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. We must all pray that He will so convert us to an attitude of whole-hearted surrender to the will of God, that we may be able to do what God would have us do. Normally God works on man through man; we are His agents to do His work—agents through whom the Holy Spirit fulfils the purpose of God for man.

It may be that out of the chaos of these days the Holy Spirit will bring again into one body the sections of the Church, so that she may bear such a witness in the days to come that the world will believe that God has sent His Son to be the Saviour of the world. It would be a terrible thing if the opportunity for reunion came and it could not be taken because of the selfish pride and prejudices of those who profess and call themselves Christians. May all who believe in the Lord and love Him be led to do all that is needed, to make every sacrifice possible that by penitence, by humility, by an earnest search after truth, and by prayer they may enable the Holy Spirit which is so dear to our Lord, and so needed for the fulfilment of His work for man, and for the glory of God.

Gift to S. Paul's College, Moa.

The Rev. G. W. Morrison, at present Archdeacon of Kumasi on the Gold Coast, West Coast of Africa was, some years ago, on the staff of the Mission at Yarrabah. He was keenly interested in work amongst the native races of Australia, and especially in the training of native Christians for ordination, and when he visited the Diocese of Carpentaria he thought that S. Pauls, Moa, would be a good place for a Training College. Mr. Morrison raised some money for this purpose which was placed in the hands of the treasurers of the Synod of North Queensland until such time as it could be used for the object for which it was raised. When Archdeacon Morrison was in England last year he heard of the establishment of the Training College at S. Pauls, Moa, and he wrote to the Bishop of North Queensland, asking that the money be sent to the Bishop of Carpentaria, to be used for the college at Moa, and he also wrote to the Bishop of Carpentaria about the matter. The treasurers of the Synod of North Queensland have sent the Bishop of Carpentaria a cheque for £165 4s. 3d., the original sum, plus interest. The Diocesan Council will most likely decide that this money be held under a trust, the interest to be used for the expenses connected with the college.

The Rev. Edward Taffs, Rector of Mossman, has been laid up with rather a serious illness. The latest reports are that he is much better, and the doctor thinks that if he will take care of himself, and not try to do too much, his recovery will be complete. A few months ago Mr Taffs had a slight accident by which he had lost the end of one finger—an inconvenient if not a serious thing to one who is musical and acts as his own organist.

Australian Fund for Soldiers Overseas.

The Church of England in Australia, in response to appeals from our Chaplains and men at the Front has undertaken to do its share by providing:—Cost and upkeep of a large Military Church Hut at the Australian base in France, additional Huts in Egypt and elsewhere; asked for by the Minister of Defence, who has accepted the offer of the fund to assist.

The Church in England has expended £700,000 on social work for soldiers of all denominations, and the Y.M.C.A. has done noble work. The Church in Australia is now taking her place at the Front and funds are needed. The opinion of the Chaplains is, that we must provide for the physical needs of our boys as well as for their spiritual needs, and in the Church Huts there will be more opportunity of their having an atmosphere of Church life. Social work and spiritual work must go hand in hand. Any soldier of any or no denomination will be welcomed and helped and comforted. The scheme has the approval of the Primate of Australia and also of the Archbishop of Perth, Chaplain-General, and is an official fund of the Church. Let us help it as much as we can. Let us give the best for our soldiers. Contributions may be sent to G. F. Weatherlake, Esq., Box 47, Brisbane, Q.

For some months money has been collected to enable the Syria and Palestine Relief Fund to give help to the suffering people in those countries so soon as the way was open. The Christians, Jews and Arabs in Syria and Palestine have endured untold sufferings imposed by their rulers the Turks.

Now that our men have made an important advance, the way is open to save life and relieve distress in the country where our Lord lived and taught, suffered and died. This is surely an appeal of special force to Christians; it comes from the people of the land especially holy to Christians, Contributions may be sent to any branch of the Bank of Australasia.

Legacy to the Diocese.

The bishop has received word from the Executors of the will of the late Miss Gertrude Robson that Miss Robson has left a legacy to the Bishop of Carpentaria for Mission work amongst the aborigines in the diocese of Carpentaria. It is not known how much the legacy will amount to, and it will be some time before the money can be received. Miss Robson always had a keen interest in the diocese of Carpentaria, and especially for the Mission work in the diocese, and she has shown that that interest was a lasting one. We are grateful for this help. It is most likely that the Diocesan Council will decide to keep the amount of the legacy as a capital sum unless there arises some urgent need. There are no conditions attached to the legacy limiting the way in which the money is to be used, apart from the object, for Mission work amongst the aborigines.

The Tragedy at Mornington Island.

We wish to offer our sincerest sympathy to the Presbyterian Church, and more especially to Mrs. Hall, for the terrible tragedy at Mornington Island on October 15, 1917, when the Rev. Robert Hall, the superintendent of the Mission, was murdered and Mrs Owens was wounded. The Sub-inspector of Police at Normanton sent word to the Bishop as soon as he had received the information about the tragedy from Burketown, whither Mr Owen had taken Mrs Owen, Mrs Hall and their children. The bishop at once sent an expression of his sympathy by wire to the Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Queensland and to Mrs Hall. He had visited the Mission station with the Governor and his party in June, 1917.

The secretary of the Presbyterian Mission Committee in Brisbane asked the Bishop if help for the immediate needs could be given, as it was decided that the work of the Mission should be carried on, and no suggestion of withdrawal could be entertained, and this was the wish of the Queensland Government. It was especially asked if Mr Cyril Grant Lane, who has been helping the staff at Trubananman for rather more than two years, could be spared. It goes without saying that the Bishop was only too glad to do anything, and that the members of the staff at Trubananman would willingly spare any help at such a time, even though they are short-handed at the Mitchell. Charity would bid us give all the help we could to our brethren in their time of stress and trouble, besides which, the tragedy and the action of the Mission following it will have an influence on the natives around the Gulf.

It so happened that Mr Cyril Lane was in Thursday Island when the Bishop arrived from Cooktown, and at the time when request for help was received. Mr Lane at once expressed his willingness to place himself at the disposal of the Rev. N. Hey, the senior missionary of the Presbyterian Church in the Gulf of Carpentaria. He left Thursday Island by the Melbidir on November 11th for Mapoon, and it was decided that he should go to Mornington Island with one of the members of the staff at Mapoon. The Presbyterian Mission Committee has not had to wait long before finding a volunteer to take the place of the late Superintendent of Mornington Island. Mr. Paul arrived in Thursday Island at the end of November, only six weeks after Mr Hall had been murdered, and he went on to Normanton by the Musgrave on December 8th, en route for Mornington Island.

So far as is known, this is the first occasion on which a missionary in the Gulf has been murdered by natives, and until the inquiry is over, it is impossible to say what has been the motive. There are undoubtedly risks even yet, especially in the Territory, but such risks will never make those who love our Lord, and who believe that He came to save the whole human race, hesitate about endeavouring to fulfil the last command of their Lord. We pray that in some way, which we may not see at present, it will be found that the Rev. Robert Hall has not died in vain. The blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church.

St. Margaret's, Croydon.

The Bishop of the Diocese had a very busy day in the parish of Croydon, on Sunday, October 28th. He celebrated in the parish Church at 8 a.m.; preached at Golden Gate at 11 a.m.; baptised an infant and confirmed four candidates in the afternoon at Croydon, where he was also the preacher at Evensong, when the collection was for the Soldiers' Hut Fund.

On Tuesday, October 23rd, there was a social gathering at the residence of Mrs Bennion to give the parishioners an opportunity of meeting the Bishop.

There is a movement on foot to raise a fund for the painting of the Church at Croydon. The district has done wonderfully well in raising money for the Soldiers' Help Fund and for Patriotic and Red Cross Funds; but the district is in a bad way. The buildings in the main street are being pulled down for the sake of the galvanized iron—tons of which have been sent away to other places.

There is a steady emigration of families from the town and district to other places. Unless something is found to give a new life to the place there seems no prospect except extinction. There is still some hope that the Iguana Consols mine may find something at a deep level, and hopes for the future depend on that. The local train service between Normanton and Croydon has been reduced to one train a week—up and down the same day. In "Boat Week," when the Gulf boat from Brisbane to Normanton arrives—which is once in four weeks—there will be a second train. Unfortunately there seems to be nothing but the goldfield to support the town.

Mr Longmoor, the Rector of Croydon, has paid three visits to the Georgetown district during the past year.

St. Peter's, Normanton.

Mr H. Matthews and Mrs Matthews arrived from the Mitchell River Mission Station, on September 24th, 1917. They had travelled by the "Francis Pritt" to Karumba, and up the river by the "Dugong." Mr Matthews was in charge of the parish as lay reader for a little over two months.

Personal.

The Rev. W. M. and Mrs Wilkinson were to spend Christmas with the Bishop of Willochra, and Miss White at Gladstone, S.A. Mr Wilkinson was to begin his new work on January 1, 1918. His friends may be glad to know that his address is Murat Bay, via Adelaide, S.A.

The Rev. C. Hall, Rector of Normanton, cabled to his sister, Mrs Davidson, Moira, Rockhampton, in November, saying he hoped to be leaving for France very soon. So it must be presumed that Mr Hall has been appointed on continuous service.

The Rev. Cyril Mayhew visited the camp at Salisbury Plain, at Mr Hall's request to take a quiet day and to preach at the parades on a Sunday. Mr. Mayhew, who is in very delicate health, was warned by the doctor that he was risking his life, but Mr Mayhew said he did not see why he should not risk his life for the soldiers when they were risking their lives for him.

Mr Mayhew writes to say that both the Chaplain-General and the Colonel in command of the regiment speak very highly of Mr Hall's work and influence. Both officers were anxious that Mr Hall should be appointed on continuous service.

Some friends of Miss Robson have sent contributions towards a memorial to be placed in the Cathedral at Thursday Island. If sufficient money is received, the Diocesan Council will be very glad to fall in with the wishes of the friends of Miss Robson. It is not intended to make a general appeal, especially as the Australian Board of Missions has a scheme in hand for a fitting memorial to one whose life has been an inspiration, and who died at the post of duty partly because she felt she could not take a furlough while the war lasted. Her unselfish nature shrank from what seemed to her a selfish thing. But Miss Robson did so much in Thursday Island and for the diocese of Carpentaria that it is right and proper that there should be some memorial to her in the Cathedral Church of the diocese. Contributions may be sent to the sub-dean, Rev. F. W. Slade, Vicarage, Thursday Island.

Mrs Mulvey, the mother of Mrs Luscombe, has been on a visit to St. Paul's, Moa, and is enthusiastic about the work of the Torres Straits Mission. She thoroughly enjoyed her visit, not only for the happiness of seeing her daughter and grandchild, but also for the pleasure an insight into the work of the Mission gave her.

Mr G. H. Brown, who had been organist at the Cathedral, Thursday Island, for two and a half years, has been transferred to Townsville. Mr Brown is not only an accomplished musician, but he has been very faithful to the opportunity of devoting his gifts to the honour and glory of God. We thank him for all he has done, and wish him every happiness.

Mossman and Port Douglas.

For some years the ladies of the parish of Mossman and Port Douglas have worked for an annual sale of work which has usually been held in the month of September. This year the ladies felt that with all the sales and other ways of raising money for Red Cross and Patriotic Funds, it would be as well if they did not have the sale. Instead letters were written to the Church people of the parish asking for donations of money instead of gifts for the sale. Following the letters the people were called upon and the sum of £56 was raised. This is not so large a sum as the sale has usually brought; but it is far and away the better way of raising money—even though there can be no objection to bond fide sales of work.

The finances of the parish are gradually getting on to a sounder basis, and what is more important there are signs of development of spiritual life.

The Heralds of the King at Mossman have a sewing class once a week for the girls and a wood-carving class for the boys.

We hope for the day when a definite move can be made towards the completion of the church at Mossman, but we may have to wait till after the war, when cost of material will be less prohibitive than it is at present. Unless, indeed, some one or more people would put the churchwardens into such a position that they need not consider expense!

The Bishop has asked the parish priests of the Diocese to do all that is possible to give their people an opportunity of joining in the Intercessions for Unity during the eight days, January 18th to January 25th, 1918. It is a matter which concerns all Christians and not only the clergy.

Subscriptions to the "Carpentarian":—2s., Mrs. Schipke, Mrs. Norgate, Mr. W. M. Hill, Miss Traill, General Finn; 2s. 6d., Mrs. Kirk, Dr H. Elliott; £1, Mr. O. S. Wilkinson; £1 1s., Sir H. M. Stephen, per Rev. F. H. T. Lane for 1917. (Some of these were previously acknowledged) 2s., Messrs. Christie, Newsham, Sutherland, Wright, Lane, Iliffe, Mesdames Ashton, Tai, Aigham, Strath, Shadforth; 4s., Mrs. Waters.

Mission Notes.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Matthews on November 7th at Normanton.

Mr. J. W. Chapman returned from his furlough in October, and went on from Thursday Island by the "Francis Pritt." He was accompanied by Mr. Williams, of the Queensland Agricultural Department, who came from Cairns to advise the Mission about the agricultural work at the station.

Mr. Williams strongly advised the staff not to waste any more time and labour at the head station. Not only is the land unsuitable but the water in the lagoon is not fit for irrigation purposes.

Mr. Williams did not see any really good agricultural land. The new site is better than the head station, but he advised that the farming settlement should be about two miles further where there is good permanent water for irrigation.

Mr. Done has been helping Mr. MacFarlane with the building of the Mission House at Darnley. The house is ready for occupation.

Mr Done has also been visiting Coconut Island, preparing candidates for confirmation.

The Rev. Peter Rautamara was to be ordained priest at Dogura, Papua. He is the first native Papuan to be ordained priest. December 16th, the date of the ordination, will be a red letter day in the calendar of the New Guinea Mission.

John Regita was to be ordained deacon on the same day. He makes the fifth native deacon.

An anonymous well wisher in the diocese of North Queensland has provided the cost of the education of one student at St. Paul's, Moa, for one year. Joseph Lui is the allotted student.

A parish in the diocese of Rockhampton has undertaken to raise the money for the expense of the Mission on one of the islands of the Straits, and a parish in Melbourne has made itself responsible for another. That makes four islands provided for.

A Motor Car for the Diocese.

The Church Council at Normanton has inaugurated a fund for the purpose of providing a motor car for the use of the Bishop, and has suggested to other parishes in the diocese to help in raising the money required. Whether it will be possible to get the money needed remains to be seen. There is no doubt at all that the Bishop must have some means of travelling. The diocese is one of huge distances, and the ordinary means of travelling are very inconvenient. Trains and coaches, where they run, travel once a week, so to break the journey means to lose a week. Station managers and others are very kind and helpful, but it is not always possible to arrange for a chain of relays, and besides, one wants to be free to change plans if necessary. Travelling with horses either riding or driving would be possible but for continuous travelling that means feeding, and arrangements would have to be made to get feed to outside places, either by carriers or by coach. But what is really against travelling by horse is the fact that such travelling must be early and late; the heat makes it necessary to spell in the middle of the day, especially if horses are to be constantly on the road. When visiting a station one wants to get to the station in time for service in the evening; if possible there should be a celebration of Holy Communion in the morning, and where there are children they must have some instruction. That means it is impossible to do the work when one leaves early and arrives late. It would be necessary at some places to spend a clear day at a station. A parish priest can manage that, the Bishop cannot spare the time, so he must be able to travel during the day. Again some of the distances between stations are so great that with horses it would be necessary to camp out. With a car the distance can be covered in one day.

For some time to come the Bishop of Carpentaria must be a bush bishop. There is little hope of there being enough priests for some years to shepherd the scattered people of the bush, and the responsibility rests on the Bishop to do this as far as is possible. He can only hope to attempt it if he has means of travelling which save time, and make him independent of infrequent coaches and trains.

No doubt the Bishop will have experiences and he may at times wish he had to depend on horses or horses and traps when difficulties cannot be overcome with green hide and fencing wire! But as boss drovers and station managers in the North can get about with motor cars to seemingly ungetatable places, there is some hope that a Bishop may be able to do the same. At all events the Bishop of Carpentaria is prepared to take some risks in the way of doing the work of a Chief Shepherd in out-of-the-way places. It is a time when risks are taken at the call of duty, and even though one Churchman said he would not give a penny towards a motor car for the Bishop unless he had a guarantee that a skilled mechanic was to travel with the Bishop, the Bishop will cheerfully take the risks, and try to be cheerful should they eventuate. The car will not make it possible for the Bishop to be more at home, or to visit centres more frequently. It will make it possible to reach places which cannot be reached now or at least only with such waste of time that it becomes impossible.

A Proposed "Conscience Clause" in Indian Schools.

An Indian clergyman who is in charge of one of the C.M.S. high schools in Calcutta, writes as follows in his annual report:—

"There is much apprehension that the Government might be forced to introduce a conscience clause in their grant-in-aid rules. Missionaries are not responsible for the education of Hindus and Mohammedans, and if they are to impart any education, it must be Christian education, distinctly and directly. We have the great missionary commission from our ascended Lord, and we must be faithful to it. We must teach the Bible to each and every lad who will be sent to us. They come to us voluntarily, with eyes open, parents know that we teach the Bible, so we do not compel anybody to come to us. My thirty-five years of missionary educational work have fully convinced me that the Hindus and Mohammedans are not against our teaching the Bible; but, on the contrary, they appreciate the kind of education we impart. During all these years I have not heard a single objection against the teaching of the Bible, either from a parent or from a pupil. The present agitation for a conscience clause is one of the signs of the times that the heaven of our teaching is spreading and is doing its work."

Drawing East and West Nearer Together.

Miss F. M. Clarke, of the C.M.S. hospital at Peshawar, near the Khyber Pass into Afghanistan, wrote on January 7:—

"The War touches us in an indirect fashion, even though we are so far away from the actual struggle. First there is the connection through the seven boys who have volunteered for the army; again, at intervals, we get patients with old bullet wounds received at the front. One Pathan, who came in the other day for treatment, brought his brother to look after him, a splendid looking man, who had received five wounds, but was longing to get back again. He had fought in France and been nursed at 'Britten' (as they call Brighton), and was full of stories of the kindness he had received from the 'Sister Sahibs' and every one else! Then, a few days ago, a Pathan woman came to the out-patients' department whose husband was a prisoner in Germany.

"If the War has done nothing else, surely it has drawn East and West a little bit nearer together."

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

Torres Straits Mission.

Since the January number of the Carpentarian went to press I have paid two visits to the Torres Straits Mission.

With Mr Luscombe and Mr Done, I left Thursday Island in the "Banzai," on Thursday, December 20th, 1917. We had a good run to S. Paul's, Moa, taking about five and a half hours over the trip. Mr Done and I intended to get away early on Friday morning, S. Thomas' Day, by the "Herald," which boat had come from Mabuiag, to meet us at S. Paul's, but although we were ready soon after the celebration of Holy Communion, the weather looked dirty, and it was raining heavily, so we decided to wait and see. Unfortunately two of the three students at the college had been laid up and had been in the hospital at Thursday Island—Joseph we left there; so the vacation had begun sooner than was intended. So far the wet season has been an unhealthy one at S. Paul's.

We got away about noon, and with a good fair wind—a little strong for comfort—we had a fast run with the foresail down all the way, of a little over five hours to Yam Island, where we anchored about 5 in the afternoon on the other side from the village, as is necessary in the North-West Season. We went ashore at once without waiting for tea, and had a not unpleasant walk of about a mile and a-half to the village. The grass and the overhanging branches were wet; but we were glad of the walk, even though the track is rough and chances of slipping on the rocks are many. At Yam we had service just after dark. One has only to arrive and ring the Church bell on any of the islands, and there is sure to be a good congregation. After the service there was a very interesting presentation made to me of a pastoral staff, which had been carved out of a couple of solid pieces of "Wangai," a native timber, by one of the Christians at Yam. The staff had been left in the Church since it was finished, and as Mr Done and I were sitting on the verandah of the Mission House in darkness, slightly dispersed by one or two hurricane lamps, the people formed in procession at the Church door and with the carver carrying the staff, marched towards us, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." There were some carrying lamps in the procession, and it all looked and sounded quite weird and impressive. When the procession arrived at the Mission House the staff was quickly passed from one Churchwarden to another till it was at last handed to me by David. Nothing was said by any of them. Then I spoke to them, thanking them for the gift; and I explained the symbolism of the pastoral staff.

It was also a good opportunity to impress upon them the truth, that the people are the Church; that the Church is not an extraneous body; not a foreign element in their lives; and so I was the more pleased to have and to use as the symbol of the Bishop's duty, a staff made in the islands by a Christian of the islands, out of island timber.

The staff is made in two parts, the upper fits into a socket in the lower half. It is a little heavy; but that probably could not be helped, as the grain of the wood in the crook is very straight, and if further reduced in size, might split.

We had brought home Louis, one of the postulants for Orders, who has been acting as pupil teacher at Moa for his vacation, and he was really the most important person of our party, especially in the eyes of the younger folk, who crowded round him as though he had been away for years in some foreign country! The other postulant, also from Yam, Maza, we had left in the hospital at Thursday Island.

We got back to the "Herald" about 11 o'clock at night. Fortunately Mr Done had taken a lantern, or I do not know how we should have found our way, or saved our shins and heads, walking through the brush, ducking under the branches, and stumbling over logs and stones.

Yam has a bad name as an anchorage at any time, and we expected to have a bad night a late tea; but the good fortune that favoured us during the whole trip was evident in the calm quiet of the sea.

On Saturday morning we got away from Yam about 7 o'clock. We had a good westerly wind all day, and much to our joyful surprise, we made Darnley by five in the afternoon. We had done about 60 miles in about 10 hours.

We found the Darnley house nearly finished, and Mr and Mrs MacFarlane settled into it, or rather living in it. They could not be properly and comfortably settled till building operations were completed. The house has been built at a very small cost, considering everything; but then a good deal of the timber was used from the old Mission building of L.M.S. days, and Mr MacFarlane had been his own builder and carpenter, so the only cost for labour was to pay for local labour as it was needed, and the people worked readily and well on the building.

Mr Done gave a hand at putting the fibro cement slates on the roof; he had had experience at that sort of work on the Church at Mabuiag and on his own house there. The slates were the overplus ordered for the Mabuiag Church, and the Mission-paid Luffman, who had provided the roof for the Mabuiag Church, the original cost of the slates; and this was nearly enough to get his boat out of debt. The Mission is very fortunate in having three priests who can turn their hands to any sort of job, and do it well. Perhaps the most striking bit of work was the hauling up the hill from the beach of one of the old outhouses, which was to be used for a kitchen; the building was hauled up a steep incline with ropes and pulleys as it stood, and though it was found it could not be used just as it was, this does not derogate from a very clever piece of engineering.

The house is built on a ridge about 100 feet above the sea, and just above the Church, which is near the beach. A cement tank, to hold about 3,000 gallons of water, has to be made before the wet season is over; and with a good supply of rain water, it is hoped that Darnley will not be so unhealthy as it has been for white folk in the past.

We had service in the evening, and there were various matters to be talked over, which kept us till well after midnight. At the early celebration next morning I used the new staff for the first time and at all the services on the trip. The Confirmation was fixed for 11 a.m.; but one of the candidates had to be baptised conditionally before she was confirmed. When enquiries were made it seemed she had been baptised; but later on one of the Christians said that the man who baptised her was supposed to be a Mahomedan—a Malay. So I decided that she must be conditionally baptised. It is good that the Christians realise the importance of baptism. It is no wonder they do, after all the careful enquiries that have been made about the baptism of every adult that has been presented for Confirmation! Unfortunately whatever records were kept in olden days are not available now; but the older men and women were baptised as adults and remember their baptism; and they can also vouch for the baptism of the younger people. There were 31 candidates presented by Mr MacFarlane—9 male and 22 female. Some of them were from Stephen Island, the only one I have not been able to visit in the Straits. There are very few people living on Stephen Island. Service in the evening closed a very full day—full with services and interviews with the people. At Evensong I had to speak to the people about drunkenness, as some who had returned just before our visit had got drunk in Thursday Island; this and scandal-mongery seemed to need some plain speaking.

On Christmas Eve we left Darnley about 8 a.m., and I had to apologise to Mrs MacFarlane for taking her husband away from home for Christmas. We had very little wind to take us to Murray Island; but what there was shewed a tendency to get round to the south-east, a most unusual thing at the time of the year. We began to have visions of a quick trip back to Thursday Island. We did not get to anchor at Murray Island till 10 p.m., too late for a service of preparation for Christmas Communion; but Poey, one of the students at S. Paul's, who was at home for vacation, came out to us in a dinghy, and we told him to go round and let people know they must prepare themselves for their Communion.

It was 8 o'clock on Christmas morning before we could have the celebration. Some people had to be seen beforehand, and two boys who had been away at work down the east coast, and had returned home a week or two earlier, wanted to know if they ought to make their Communion. They said they had been drunk once while signed on; but they also said that the coloured captain of their boat had brought wine on board and told them it was "ginger beer"—a sort of general name for soft drinks; and they had drunk not wisely but too well, and with disastrous results. They were very sick after, and sorry too! but they felt that they should make a clean breast of it before coming to Communion. It was not at all likely we should ever have heard of the incident otherwise. The importance is that there was evidence of tender conscience and reverence for the Sacrament.

There were a great many communicants; but there were three to administer, so the service was not very long. The people at Murray are not so reverent as on some of the other islands; but a long service, when there are a great number of communicants, is a strain on them, and it is evident that we need something in the way of hymns, sung softly, to occupy the people. That will come in time. A Confirmation was arranged for 11 a.m.; so we had Mattins on board the "Herald." There was nearly a catastrophe as we were going ashore in the morning. I was handing the new pastoral staff to Leo, one of the schooner boys, who was in the dinghy alongside the schooner, and holding it above the socket, when the lower half fell off, and we saw it sinking and being carried away by the tide. Wangai is a heavy wood, and the water is deep. Leo did not hesitate a moment; dressed as he was in his clean white calico for the celebration, he dived after and brought up the piece, but the tide was running so strong that we had to throw him a rope to get him back on board, and he had to borrow a calico not nearly so spotless as his own had been.

Mr MacFarlane presented 16 candidates for Confirmation, 4 males and 12 females, and after the service Mr Done and I adjourned to the "Herald" to get ready our Christmas dinner. Mr MacFarlane of course was busy seeing people about many and various things. Mr Done was appointed cook, as something special was needed, and the special dish was fried chips. We had also various delicacies like cakes, provided by thoughtful wives, as well as some things from Christmas boxes sent from South, which we had assured ourselves the donors would be glad to know had helped to make the Missionaries' Christmas dinner on the "Herald" more worthy of the day. Everything was ready, and we did want to eat potato chips while they were hot and crisp, so as there was no sign of Mr MacFarlane, Mr Done and I sat down to our dinner, but the third party was not much later, perhaps some instinct told him all the work was done. Mr Done claimed that as our third Christmas dinner for the year, because at S. Paul's Mrs Luscombe, and at Darnley Mrs MacFarlane, had taken pity on men who would not be at home on such a day and had produced certain delicacies while we were with them. I on the other hand maintained I had only had one Christmas dinner—on Christmas Day.

Mr MacFarlane had some children to baptise in the afternoon, and then there was a general meeting of Christians to go into certain matters of complaint, such as the Churchwardens, or one of them, using the opportunity of preaching to air their own grievances and personal opinions of people. Also they were said to have a tendency to take too much upon themselves in the way of discipline, and one Churchwarden was said to claim lands others thought he had no right to, some complicated native agreement. This last was a Government matter, and we could act only after the Court had decided upon it. However, to remove a neighbour's landmark is a thing it is not seemly for a Church official to do. There was a very great reluctance on the part of everybody to air grievances, as was to be expected, and the meeting resolved itself into one of Quaker variety. Of course we could have had it all out if we had taken say the Churchwardens by themselves, or some of the people without the presence of Churchwardens, but I wanted to have the accused and accusers face to face, even though that is not the native way. I tried various ways of leading up to the subjects, asked pointed questions, and at last had to explain the duties and the limitation of duties of the Wardens. We did then get a certain amount of discussion. It was all a very mild storm in a teacup, and really not so bad as many parish disagreements among people who might well be thought to know better. But it shows the sort of worry amongst others that Missionaries have to face.

There was to be dancing at night, the people had been to Church three times, and there were arrangements to be made for the dancing, so we told the people to have prayers before their festivities when all were gathered together, and we adjourned to the boat for tea and Evensong. It had been a long day and we were tired, but we went ashore for the dances, partly for our own enjoyment, and partly to shew we wished to enter into the life of the people. Some of the masquerade dances were very good, and there was no sign of weariness about the dancers or the onlookers. The native drums, which are now being used again instead of kerosene tins for beating time, do manage to set the muscles of one's legs moving. For some reason the L.M.S. South Sea Island teachers banished drums from dancing. It is thought by some people because they wished to introduce their own dances, but it may be that they knew the fascination of the drum, and that they could never get a hold over people in rivalry with it, and they may have thought that there were evil associations connected with the old dances which would not be with imported ones. But it is an unwise policy to interfere with native customs when interference can be avoided.

We left Murray at daylight the next morning, there was not much wind but it was in our favour, and as we thought we were fairly well clear of reefs at dark and there was a good moon, we kept on and got to Yorke Island about midnight, after having just touched one reef. That night, sailing over the calm sea with a clear sky and the moon nearly at the full, was most glorious.

At Yorke Mr MacFarlane had 13 candidates ready for confirmation—8 male, 5 female. There were others, but at the time it was thought they were out on one of the boats, and as they did not come forward they were not confirmed. It is one of the difficulties that candidates are away working a good deal of their time on the reefs and they have to be prepared as opportunity offers, and then perhaps to be confirmed at one of the other islands, not their own. There was also an adult to be baptised and confirmed at Yorke, but as there would be an adult baptism at Coconut Island the next day, we decided to take this man there. As usual there were people to be seen, and decisions to be made, should such an one be accepted or not? and in some cases the decision was reserved to be made by me. As Mr MacFarlane intended to be back at Yorke for a celebration of the Holy Communion on the following Sunday, we did not remain long after the confirmation. Mr and Mrs Conolly entertained us hospitably at lunch. The Government teachers on the other islands we visited were away for the Christmas holidays. We left Yorke at 6 p.m., knowing we had a clear run and a fair wind, and we anchored at Coconut soon after midnight.

Friday, December 28th, was a very busy day at Coconut. The people had built a very pretty little Church of native material at no expense to the Mission funds. The walls are of plaited coconut leaf, the roof of grass. The teacher, Aragu, had spent a good deal of time and taken much trouble in making the furniture, altar, prayer desk, lecturne, altar rails, all of native timber and well and tastefully made, and he had very few tools to use. The Altar Cross is cut out of a solid piece of timber, but he found that there was a "shake" in the timber at the base—he cut three steps to the Cross, and he has decided to make another with no flaw in it. The altar rails have standards which one would think had been turned. The font is a large clam shell on a fine timber stand. At the back of the altar is a beautiful native mat, to act as a dossal, and there are mats on the sand floor upon which the people kneel and sit.

The first service was the dedication; we decided to have the celebration the next morning, and we had said Mattins on board the boat.

The Church was very full when the procession started from the Mission house. The visiting Churchwardens from York Island with the Bishop and Mr MacFarlane, headed by the Cross-bearer, marched round the Church singing a hymn. I knocked at the closed door with the pastoral staff, demanding admittance in the "Name of the Lord." The door was opened by Mr Done, and he and the local wardens joined the procession as we marched on to the altar. The usual service of dedication was used, but some native hymns were sung. Some of the candidates for Confirmation—and some who were to be baptised as adults—were away. They had seen no sign of us the previous day, and had gone to one of the nearer islands intending to meet us at Yorke for the services there, and come back with us. Our travelling at night had upset their calculations. It did not seem likely that these people would be back for a day or two, so we decided not to wait for them; so Mr Done baptised three adults, one being the man from Yorke Island. The Confirmation was to be about 5 in the afternoon; but a little before that time a boat was sighted and we decided to wait, in case it was the Coconut boat. Very soon the people decided it was. So we waited. The people had got near Yorke Island when they met a boat which told them that we had gone on, so they turned back to get home as fast as they could. There were some more adults to be baptised before the Confirmation, and then Mr Done presented 25 candidates—11 men and 14 women. It was dark before the service was over, and the illumination by hurricane lamps was not brilliant.

There was some dancing at night, but we had to get the people to cut it short as there was to be a celebration of the Holy Communion early the next morning, and we wanted the people to be fresh for that. During the afternoon we had talked over with the Churchwardens the object to which the collection at the Dedication Service should be given. I told them of various objects, and they decided on the Syria and Palestine Relief Fund. It was Holy Innocents' Day, and it seemed appropriate to do a little to help and comfort the women who were in distress in Palestine, and we had received a few days before the news of the capture of Jerusalem without opposition, and that was a reason for a thank-offering. The collection was a few shillings short of five pounds.

We had intended to have the celebration of Holy Communion at daylight on Saturday morning at Coconut, but when we woke it was raining in torrents and we could not get ashore till eight o'clock. All the newly confirmed made their first Communion, and that was the last service we were to have on the trip.

We had feared the heavy rain meant no more wind, but when we had got a little distance on the tide a nice south-east sprang up and got stronger as the day wore on, and we were in Thursday Island again before midnight. We left Mr MacFarlane at Coconut, his boat had arrived to take him back to Yorke and Darnley. After spending Sunday in Thursday Island Mr Done left in the "Herald" for Mabuiag. We had had a wonderful trip. Fair winds both going and coming, and we had done in a little over nine days what we expected to take a fortnight over, and we had had good anchorages everywhere, the south-east instead of the north-west anchorages, and that means that everywhere except at Yam we were able to anchor near the villages.

The people on all the Islands have now had an opportunity of being confirmed, and more than half of the adults have taken the opportunity.

On February 13th I left again for a short visit to the Islands, going to Badu only, to confirm 47 candidates, 35 male and 12 female, from Badu and Adam who had been prepared by Mr Luscombe. He had taken the opportunity of being freed by the college vacation to spend six weeks preparing these candidates. All the adults at Badu have now been confirmed except seven. Mr Walker kindly took me out to Badu in the "Goodwill." I came back in the "Herald" with Mr Done and Mr Luscombe.

Diocesan Council.

Two meetings of the Diocesan Council have been held since the last number of the Carpentarian went to press.

At the meeting on December 17th a great deal of business was got through. All the members were present except Mr Geo. Clark, who was away from the Island. The two important things decided were, first, the making of a grant of £7 10s. to each of the clergy licensed in the diocese towards the payment of insurance premiums for themselves or the members of their families. The grant means about £100 additional expense to the diocese if all the clergy apply for it.

The second matter was the appointment of a committee to go into the question of providing a hostel for the native girls who are at work in Thursday Island.

The Council met again on Friday, February 15th. Mr Foxton and Mr Sullivan were unable to attend. The committee appointed to deal with the question of a hostel for native girls presented a report, advising the establishment of such an institution which could be used as a club for those girls who live at the homes of their employers, and where if it was wished girls who were wanted for day work only could be lodged, and also any other girls for whom accommodation is required. It was suggested that the present South Sea Islanders' Home in the Cathedral grounds be used as a hostel, that one of the Sisterhoods be approached about the management of it, and the Australian Board of Missions be asked to make a grant towards the expenses. The Council accepted the report and asked the Bishop to see what arrangements could be made.

The Council decided to advance the money for the purchase of a motor car for the use of the Bishop.

S. Peter's, Normanton.

The Bishop was in charge of the parish during the month of January. At a meeting of parishioners held during that month, it was decided to make arrangements for a Sale of Work in aid of the funds of the Church, to be held during the Carnival Week in July. Several candidates for Confirmation have sent in their names, and the Bishop will prepare these when he next visits the parish.

All Souls' Cathedral

(QUETTA MEMORIAL CHURCH),

THURSDAY ISLAND.

The Bishop confirmed 14 candidates in the Cathedral on Sunday, February 24th. There were 9 male and 5 female candidates; two other candidates had been confirmed previously, one man and one woman, who would be away from the Island before the date fixed for the Confirmation.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The Parochial Council has decided that a Mission should be held in the parish during the year, and arrangements are being made to get some one of experience from one of the Southern Dioceses to preach the Mission about September next. The Bishop, when he visited the parish in November, 1917, asked the Council to think over this matter, and said he would leave it to the laymen to decide about it, as he felt that they must realise that the responsibility rested on them as well as on the Priest in charge and the Missioner; and unless the laymen were prepared to shoulder the responsibility, the Mission ought not to be held.

The parish also decided to support the effort started by the Normanton Parochial Council to raise money for a motor car for the use of the Bishop.

The Motor Car for the Bishop.

The members of the Normanton Parochial Council have appointed a sub-committee to carry out the scheme of providing a motor car for the use of the Bishop of Carpentaria; and the sub-committee very soon got to work. There was a very gratifying response from the people of Normanton, and arrangements have been made to send out circulars to Church people in the diocese asking for contributions. Owing to the fact that mails are disorganised during the wet season in the North, it may take longer than usual to get replies to the circular; but the committee are quite sanguine that the money will be raised. It is a matter which affects the whole diocese, as it is for more efficient work of the diocese as a whole; and more especially to enable the Bishop to visit out-of-the-way places which he cannot get to by any other means of travelling. This being the case it is to be hoped that no one will argue, the motor car will not be any direct benefit to the parish I live in, and so I do not feel called upon to help to pay for it. What is for the benefit of the diocese as a whole, and especially for out-of-the-way places and people, is for the benefit of every part of the diocese; and indeed, of every Oburchman in the diocese.

The Diocesan Council has decided to advance the money for the purchase of the car—a Ford Utility, and such other extra parts and tools as are necessary in out-of-the-way places where a garage is not to be found.

The motor car has been ordered, and is to be delivered in Burketown about the end of June. So all those who intend to subscribe towards the cost—and they should be all Church people in the diocese—should send their donations at once.

The Bishop has arranged to leave Burketown by the car on July 1st, and to travel to Darwin via the Barclay Tableland, Boorooloola, and the Roper River Mission. A motor mechanic has been engaged for this trip, and the Bishop hopes to be initiated into the mysteries of the car while he has the mechanic with him, and so be able to act as his own chauffeur afterwards. The motor mechanic kindly expressed a hope that there would be breakdowns of various kinds on the first trip, as the experience would be good for the Bishop!

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA.

Vol. XVIII., No. 70. Thursday Island, April 1, 1918

The Divisions of Christendom.

The following memorandum upon the divisions of Christendom was written by the Archbishop of Brisbane, and issued to the Clergy of his diocese in connection with the Week of Prayer for Reunion, January 18-25, 1918. It is re-printed in the Carpentarian, in the hope that it may help some of us to think about and study the question.

As we contemplate the world to-day in the light of our Lord's expressed will for His Church, two great facts stand out with impressive emphasis.

1. The Weakness of the Church's aggressive power for the evangelisation of the world. Not only have nineteen centuries passed to find the work still not half done, but in a sense we see the Church's offensive actually held up. Japan holds out against the Church's missionary attack, and some question whether we are making any progress at all. Hinduism in India holds out, and in some quarters wins definite successes against us. China hears the message, but does not yet accept it. In Africa Mahomedanism still competes with us in the race to win the African peoples. No one can honestly regard the Missionary record of the Church without misgivings.

2. The weakness of the Church in its witness for truth, purity, and altruism in civilised society. We need not labour this point. The war, with its triumph of anti-Christian forces, has brought that home to us all. The war has come because the Church in the past thousand years has not had sufficient spiritual strength to mould the progress of civilised Europe upon Christian lines. It has failed to save commerce from surrender to the spirit of avarice. It has failed to purge national aspirations of the sin of pride. It has failed to keep modern statecraft from sinking into practical Godlessness. To look nearer home, we have all witnessed the weakness of the national attempts to get back to God in prayer at the request of Prime Minister or King. The Church's weakness as an evangelising force is matched by the Church's weakness as a witness for the Unseen within the bounds of Christendom.

3. Can we escape the conclusion that these two sinister phenomena are connected with a third? For sixteen hundred years the Church of Christ has been torn by fratricidal disunion. The spirit of Christ, which alone can conquer the world and leaven human society, is neutralized, hindered and overlaid by His followers' sins.

What we need is to fix our minds steadily upon certain great principles which even a superficial study of the New Testament and Church History will speedily elucidate. For instance:—

(a) Christ's commission to His Church is to evangelise the world, and leaven human society until His kingdom is established everywhere.

(b) He has not promised that this can be done by a divided Church.

(c) The aim of Christians must be—not to avoid differences of opinion and emphasis, which are perfectly legitimate, and are necessary for the elucidation of truth—but to guard these differences from crystallizing into divisions. It is not in the least impossible to maintain unity, provided only we are strong in the graces of the Christian character.

II.

The Judaistic Controversy.—Any review of the history of disruption in the Church must begin with the Judaistic controversy, of which the Acts and the Epistles are full. And the significance of the story lies in the fact that here disruption was avoided. It is perhaps hard for us to imagine how bitter the question was to the spiritually-minded Jewish Christian. Were the time-honoured customs and traditions of his faith—for which his forefathers had shed their blood—to be surrendered as non-essential in the preaching of the Gospel? Yes, said St. Paul. Granted a living faith in Christ and all that this means, the nations are to be free to shape their own manners and customs to the Christian mould. The controversy was intense, and went down to men's root convictions. But there was no disruption. The Church was kept together because the humility and sweet reasonableness of the leaders was strong enough to hold in check the forces of prejudice and self-will. The Council of Jerusalem settled the question in favour of the liberals, but with a strong assertion of the principle of consideration for the conservative side. The close historical association in after years of the great names of St. Peter and St. Paul—the two leaders—bespeaks the triumph of unity and stands as an example for all time.

III.

But the forces of the world never cease their assault upon the primitive purity of the Christian character, and the melancholy story of disruption soon begins. We may take the Novation Controversy in the 3rd Century as the first outstanding example on a large scale. Novation took strong views as to the severe treatment of Christians who had lapsed under persecution. He was at liberty to do so, but he and his Puritan followers preferred their own ends to the unity of the Church, and a disruption followed which lasted two hundred years. The Arian controversy followed in the next century, and in the 5th Century the Free Will controversy, connected with the name of Pelagius and the Incarnation controversy, connected with the names of Nestorius and Eutyches, again divided the Church. And so the story goes on. Ourteis in his Bampton lectures on Dissent enumerates ten great dissensions in the history of the Church. It is impossible to follow them now, but his treatise will repay study, though after the first lecture he concentrates his attention upon Dissent in England. Among more recent works, "Our Place in Christendom" (lectures delivered in St. Martins-in-the-fields, London) is calculated to stimulate thought; and Cutts' "Turning Points of General Church History" (S.P.C.K.) offers a somewhat less exacting course of study.

I am afraid I have neither the learning nor the ability to write a treatise on the subject myself, nor indeed is this desirable. But even a superficial study of the history of disruption will begin to lead us to the penitence which is so sorely needed. The great lesson which runs through the whole history of the Church is that the differences of emphasis in statement, or of point of view in comprehension of truth, need never in themselves lead to disruption. This follows only when we surrender to the faults of character to which we are all so inveterately prone. For instance, the Nestorian disruption was precipitated as much by party spirit and racial prejudice as it was by doctrinal divergence; and as a matter of fact, the Nestorian heresy has long died out of the East Syrian Church (once a flourishing part of the Nestorian Church), though that Church has never yet returned to Communion with the Holy Orthodox Church of the East. Again, the development of the Roman Primacy, as we all know, would have led to something radically different to-day had it not been for the misuse of opportunity on the part of Roman Pontiffs, from Victor onwards (who excommunicated the Asiatic Bishops on the question of the Easter usage) owing to the unregenerate hunger of the human heart for power or wealth; or again, we may be sure that the controversies in France in the Sixteenth Century would never have been stained with the blood of St. Bartholomew's Day were it not for the political rancour which almost obliterated the original religious grounds of difference. Or once more, we cannot cease to regret that our own overwhelming case against the Roman claim for temporal power was vitiated by the personal wilfulness of Henry VIII. in his demand for the divorce of Catherine of Aragon. Lastly, it is a question whether we have even yet altogether exorcised the devil of worldliness and social pride which helped so largely to alienate the Wesleyans from the Church of England.

IV.

Some of us are looking forward with hope to the development of the world conference on Faith and Order. It gives us something to work for. It forces us to consider what is at once both the most deadly and the most repellant malady in the Church's body politic. The cure of the disease is beyond human power; for aught we know, it may call for some terrible operation at the hands of the Divine Surgeon; but whatever lies before us in the Providence of God, our duty is clear:—

1. We must seek to foster a holy discontent with the present situation, by earnestly and penitently isolating our sins from the tangle of the past.

2. We must school ourselves to live more consistently in the consciousness of the truth of the one body of Christ, of which we are members; and we must school ourselves steadily to discern it in spite of the numerous deep-seated and ancient divisions which well nigh hide it from our view.

3. We must school ourselves in our relations with our fellow Christians to overcome those sins, especially the sin of prejudice, which have always been the evil seeds of the trouble. Whatever God's method in the future may be, whatever may be the destiny through which He is going to lead us back to reunion, it is certain that the body of Christ must first be prepared for the ordeal by a revival of Christ's spirit. Let us pray with redoubled earnestness for that unity which we know to be His will; but we must strive withal to be casting out the devil from our own hearts, and we must be recognising the bond which binds us to all our fellow Christians lest our prayers be in vain.

St. Margaret's Croydon.

The Rector, the Rev. H. R. Longmore, was called to Forsyth to celebrate a marriage in January, and as the bride-elect, Miss George, has been very helpful in looking after the little Sunday School at Forsyth, Mr Longmore was especially glad to take risks of floods to get to Forsyth for the wedding. He managed to get to Forsyth, but found he could not get back for two or three weeks as the Gilbert was in high flood. The Bishop took the services at St. Margaret's on Sunday, February 3rd, but it was a hurried visit to the town. Mr Longmore intends to spend about six weeks in the Georgetown and Forsyth district immediately after Easter to prepare candidates for Confirmation, and the Bishop hopes to be able to take some of the duty in the parish of Croydon during that time.

Diocesan Accounts.

I am directed to write notes on the statement of accounts published in this issue. The whole financial resources of the diocese are the following:—

BISHOPRIC ENDOWMENT FUND.—Trustee of most of the capital, the Colonial Bishopric Fund; trustee of the remainder of the capital, the Synod of Brisbane.

CLERGY SUSTENTATION FUND.—Trustee, the Synod of Brisbane.

The income from the former provides the Bishop's stipend.

The income from the latter is too small to use, and is being added to the capital.

CHRISTISON LEGACY.—Trustee, the Bishop of Willochra.

The income from this for last year—the first year it had yielded income—was paid into the Diocesan Church Management Fund.

MITCHELL RIVER MISSION.

TORRES STRAITS MISSION.

These two have no capital endowment; their accounts are published annually in this paper.

THE THREE FUNDS WHOSE ACCOUNTS ARE HEREWITH.

Of these three, the Christison Fund consists of money with accumulations, entrusted to the Bishop of Carpentaria for special work, which will be undertaken as soon as possible; the Emergency Fund is a reserve to meet special needs beyond the routine expenditure as they arise; and the Diocesan Church Management Fund is the working fund of the diocese. All these are administered by the Bishop-in-Council. It is intended to simplify bookkeeping by merging the two former into the Diocesan Church Management Fund, keeping open ledger accounts for the moneys in them.

The following notes will make clear the receipts of the Diocesan Church Management Fund.

During 1916 the diocese received a donation of £50 for bursaries, and a similar sum in 1917; these sums cannot be expended at present in the way their donor intended, because the men who, as students, would receive payments from them to enable them to pursue their studies, are volunteers in the army. The money has therefore been entered in a ledger account, and appears as a liability against the balance. It will be spent as soon as possible in the way its donor directed.

Subscriptions to the diocese come from various donors, mostly through the Australian Board of Missions, which has a standing appeal to the Church in Australia for funds for this diocese. Moneys which have been in former years debited to this item now appear, partly under the item "Bursaries," which are a liability, and partly under the item "Carpentarian Association Donations."

The Carpentarian Association raises money in England; it also transmits an annual grant made to the Diocese by St. Andrew's Waterside Mission, Fenchurch Street, London, which is accounted for under a separate item. The Carpentarian is posted to each donor regularly, and a portion of the cost of producing this paper is therefore charged against the total amount of the donations.

The Colonial and Continental Church Society has been making a grant of £150 per annum for a specified purpose, viz., ministering to the scattered settlers in the bush; that work ceased temporarily at the end of October. The rest, viz., £75, of the sum received from that grant had been expended already in 1916.

The receipts were inflated by the amount, £134, of a fixed deposit withdrawn from the Emergency Fund, as the accounts shew, for a special piece of Church extension work; also by the £75 referred to in the preceding paragraph, and by £37 similarly received from the S.P.G. (See below.)

The donations for Missions are moneys raised in the parishes of the Diocese, paid in to the Diocesan Secretary, and disbursed through the Australian Board of Missions.

The following notes will make clear the expenditure from the Diocesan Church Management Fund.

The portion of the grant from the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, which is not here accounted for, had been expended already, against the expected grant, in 1916.

The allocations from the Walter and Eliza Hall Trust Grants, and from the Carpentarian Association Donations, are made by the Bishop-in-Council, not by the donors.

The expenditure on Bishop's House Maintenance is for this year extremely low, being little more than rates and taxes; much more will be required for this item soon, to keep the building in repair.

The contribution to St. Francis' College, Nundah, is in accordance with a resolution of the Provincial Synod of Queensland.

The item, "Melanesian Work," consists of the expenditure on maintaining a home for men (aboriginals from the islands in Torres Straits) who are employed in Thursday Island.

Advances have been made to Missions and repaid into this Fund. The repayments in 1917 were £99 in excess of the advances made in the same year. This item causes a further inflation of the apparent income. These several inflations of the receipts could not be avoided, because in former years ledger accounts were not kept open to shew assets; the amount of them (£355) was really an asset at the end of 1916.

The whole of the balance at current account in the Q.N. Bank is likely to be required for Church management during this year, and therefore none of it has been invested. The balance of £240 at fixed deposit may also be required at any time for Church extension, and is not available for capital endowment; it is therefore kept in a short investment.

When the Rev. Chas. Hall, then Rector of Normanton, went as a troopship Chaplain, his parish agreed to continue paying his stipend while he was engaged in that work, in trust to the Bishop; the sum of £97 was received, out of which over £14 was paid away at Mr Hall's direction, and the balance placed by the Bishop into this fund for safe keeping.

In connection with the balance, it is to be noted that while the only asset of the fund is a loan repayable at £50 per annum, the whole of the liabilities, which are nearly equal to the amount at credit of the bank current account, may be called up at any time; and it is expected that all except "Bursaries," explained above, will be called up very shortly. All these liabilities, except £50, were incurred during 1917.

This fund has therefore only enough money to work on, and if its income during 1918 falls below the normal, the regular expenditure can only be met from the Emergency Fund, which is intended, and has been required during 1917, to meet non-recurring needs.

F. W. SLADE,
Hon. Diocesan Secretary.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE "CARPENTARIAN."—5/-, Lieutenant K. O. Mackenzie; 2/6, Mrs Zabel, Mrs McLeod, Mrs Woodhead, Miss Paige, Mrs Buchanan, Mr C. F. T. Farran, Bishop Stone-Wigg, Mr Thos. Toulasik; 2/-, Mr Geo. Clarke; 3/-, Mrs Jones.

The Rev. W. H. MacFarlane, Mrs. MacFarlane, and their two children have been very ill, and had to come to the Hospital in Thursday Island in February. They had to wait at Darnley for the weather to moderate before they could come in from Darnley Island. The trip in with four sick people was a terrible experience. All the patients were on the mend when we went to press.

The School for Girls at Herberton is now under the management of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent, who have also a School for Girls in Townsville. The Sisters have for some years carried on a very successful School in Brisbane; and as the climate of Herberton is one of the best in Queensland, parents may be sure their daughters will have every advantage at this School. We commend it to Church-people in the Diocese of Carpentaria, and hope it will become a very flourishing institution.

The Right Reverend G. H. Cranswick was consecrated second Bishop of Gippsland on November 1st, 1917 (All Saints' Day), in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Melbourne, and was enthroned on November 15th, in St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Sale.

The Right Reverend Cecil Wilson, at one time Bishop of Melanesia, was enthroned early in January, the second Bishop of Bunbury, W.A.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

Rev. Peter Rautamara.

December 16th, 1917, was a great day in the history of the Church in New Guinea, for on that day the first Papuan to be ordained Priest received "the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a Priest in the Church of God." On the same day John Regita, the fifth Papuan Christian to receive Holy Orders, was made Deacon.

At the ordination of Peter Rautamara to the Priesthood, four of the Priests on the staff of the Mission, the Revs. John Hunt, S. R. M. Gill, P. C. Shaw, and Colin Robertson were present, and joined with the Bishop in the laying on of hands. It is unfortunate, from a sentimental point of view, that the Rev. Copland King, the pioneer Priest, who has been on the staff of the Mission since the beginning, was not able to be present, one would like to have felt that he took part in the actual tradition of authority to the first native Priest. The Rev. Samuel Tomlinson, who joined the Mission staff as a layman two months after Mission work was begun by Albert Maclaren and Copland King, was prevented by an accident from being present. Many Christians from different districts of the Mission were at the service: from Mukawa, Menapi, Boianai, Wamira, Taupota, and Wedau. The sermon was preached by the Rev. S. R. M. Gill. The Cathedral at Dogura was as full of Christians as it could well be. The Rev. Peter Rautamara celebrated the Holy Communion for the first time on December 21st, the Feast of S. Thomas. The Bishop says: "It was a great joy to receive the Blessed Sacrament at the hands of a Papuan; and he celebrated correctly, beautifully, and carefully." He was the celebrant at one of the services on Christmas Day in the Cathedral at Dogura.

Peter Rautamara was born in the district of Taupota, and he came under the direct influence of the Mission when he was a boy of about twelve years of age. He is now probably about thirty-five years old. For some time he was house-boy for Peter Mussen, a very devoted and earnest South Sea Island teacher at Taupota; and it was the influence of Peter Mussen that drew the little lad to our Lord. His influence and the affection he inspired was evidenced when later on the lad was baptised and took his first teacher's name. To become the namesake—the "varigela"—of anyone in New Guinea is to enter into a relation of peculiar respect and affection.

Peter Rautamara went to school, but never made much progress, for he was not as bright and quick a lad as many Papuans are. When he was older he was pupil teacher and house boy for Miss Murray at Wamira, and the influence there deepened the work which had been begun years before. He had a short time in the Dogura School, and went to Hioge as pupil teacher in 1903, and later was licensed as Evangelist. He had always been good and true, and he was chosen for the first piece of really responsible work ever given to a Papuan Christian in the Mission. He was placed in charge of a small school and the district of Awaia in 1906. His headquarters were at Wamawamana, and he had two other Papuans to help him. Here Peter had a school of about 30 children, and with his assistants held services and took classes in the mountainous district at the back of the station on the beach. His assistants were not as keen as Peter, who often had to do their work as well as his own, but he never complained, and it was often only after close questioning by those who had suspicions that the truth came out. For Peter the important thing was that the work should be done, if not by others, then by himself. At Hioge and Wamawamana Peter benefited by the influence and teaching of Mr R. H. Dakers, who was in charge of Hioge in those days, and later on the Rev John Hunt was Priest-in-charge of the district. In the report for 1909 we read: "The work here has received a blow during the year. . . . Peter Rautamara, who has always been in charge, and his wife Louisa, have kept the work on splendidly. Peter seems as solid as a rock, and is another example of what fine Christians Taupotans can become." Peter remained in charge of the district for six years, and proved himself. He had never failed, he had never given cause for anxiety, he had prepared classes of catechumens for baptism and it was found that his candidates were well taught, when the Priest came to give the last series of instructions before baptism; so the Bishop suggested to him that he should be prepared for Deacons Orders. Peter wanted some time to think and pray about it before he would give an answer; but he decided to accept the call. He was at Dogura for two years with the present Bishop of Carpentaria, and was ordained Deacon with Edwin Nuagoro, on S. Matthew's Day, 1914. For two years he worked, first at Wamira and later at Taupota, and then he was brought again to Dogura for a year, to be prepared by the Rev. P. C. Shaw for the Priesthood. Now he goes back to Taupota, to be the Priest-in-Charge of the district where his own people live, and where he first learned to believe in and to love his Saviour.

The ground and strength of Peter's character is his simple faith in our Lord. He seems to have a simple, strong assurance which nothing can disturb. In spite of difficulties—when there have been lapses from Christian faith and practice, which used to worry and depress the white Missionaries—Peter would go on with his work quietly and faithfully; he would feel the defections very keenly, but they never seemed to affect his outlook. He did not want to be in a hurry, and his quiet assurance of faith was a rebuke to others. It was many years before his own mother would consent to join the Catechumenate, but during all the long years of waiting, Peter never showed any inclination to hurry matters; but was he not happy when she was baptised! And he is always cheerful with a keen sense of humour; his face brightens with an inspiring smile, his sparkling eyes and every muscle of his face express happiness and good-will; he can change from grave to gay, and from gay to grave quite naturally. His reverence in Church, and when taking services, is an inspiration. He is a character that could never be spoilt, because of his own sincerity, his humility, and his sense of humour, and the emotions he awakens in others are love and confidence. You just can't help liking him, and trusting him. Intellectually he does not come near other Papuans who have been at the Mission schools, but in all the years—and they are approaching a quarter of a century—that he has been connected with the Mission, it is doubtful if any breath of scandal ever smirched his good name, and to those who know the hold that New Guinea customs have over New Guinea people, how hard it is for the young men and women to stand out against them, and how groundless too are the charges sometimes made, his steadfastness is a miracle of grace. Peter is a good husband and father, and by the grace of God he will be a faithful Priest.

December 16th, 1917, must have been indeed a day of happiness and rejoicing to the Bishop, the members of the Mission staff, and the Christians in New Guinea. It was more than that, it was a day when it was manifested that the Church can take root downward and bear fruit upward, can take to herself and make her own, and use the people of the country. The Church in New Guinea is now not simply a Mission—not something foreign to the people of the land, something extraneous, superimposed on their lives, but the Christians are the Church, and she will transform them till they become not their own, but Christ's, God's freedmen and His children.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop left Thursday Island for the Gulf on Saturday, March 2nd, 1918, by the steamer Musgrave. He spent the time till Easter Day in Normanton, and during April he was at Croydon and Normanton on alternate Sundays. The Rector of Croydon left that parish during Easter Week to spend six weeks in the Georgetown District, where there were candidates to be prepared for Confirmation, and the Bishop took the Sunday services and did what parish work he could for three Sundays.

While in Normanton the Bishop prepared candidates for Confirmation. It was strenuous work, as it was necessary to take the classes frequently, time being limited, and it was difficult to fit in times for the various candidates, men and boys, women and girls. Most of the preparation had to be done before Easter, in March, and there were three or four classes every day. The Confirmation was held on Friday, April 26th. There were 15 candidates, five male and ten female.

Travelling from Normanton to Croydon by train is not always convenient, especially when the train starts at 6 in the morning. By that time it is hardly light in the month of May at Normanton, for Normanton is well to the West of the meridian which regulates the time for the Eastern zone in Australia. To make sure of getting up in time it is a good plan to have an alarm clock close to one's head—but even if the clock is a good one, and all the more perhaps for that very reason, it is not much use winding it and the alarm, and setting it to give you plenty of time to catch your train, if you leave the catch on silent! That is what the Bishop did one morning, and he woke up at five minutes to six. It seemed hopeless to get dressed and catch a train a quarter of a mile away, but there is always a chance that a train in the Gulf will be a few minutes late, also it can be stopped sometimes at other places than at stations and sidings. So the Bishop made a hurried and incomplete toilet, picked up his bag which fortunately he had packed overnight, and made for the place where the road crosses the train, and as he ran he listened for the whistle. Vigorous waving of handkerchief, and then the holding of a bag on high, attracted the attention of the fireman, who reported something unusual to the driver, the train pulled up, and the Bishop got in. It was touch and go. The privacy of a carriage in which there were no other passengers enabled the toilet to be completed as far as necessary, and at the first siding a visit to the guard's van resulted in some refreshment from the supply of the guard for the day. It is just as well never to give up till you know you are beaten.

On May 8th the Bishop left Croydon by coach for the Gilbert River—56 miles on the Georgetown Road—and there that afternoon two candidates were confirmed in the house of the postmaster, one room of which had been fitted up for the Confirmation. Mr Longmore had found he must spend a good deal of the latter portion of his time at the Forsyth end of the district, so he was not able to be present at the Confirmations at the Gilbert and at Georgetown. He prepared the candidates and went on, leaving the Bishop to take the services alone: a wise arrangement, as the time was short, and it was important to give as much of it as possible in the preparation of the candidates. The settlement at the Gilbert is very scattered, and the number of people is small, but it was a very reverent congregation that gathered for the Confirmation, and a good deal of trouble had been taken to arrange the room for the service.

The post office is a small building, and it is also a telephone station; the office is the room next to the one in which the service was held, and the service was during office hours.

Ordinarily there is not a great deal of business, but it seemed that much must have accumulated for that afternoon, as the Bishop's addresses were frequently punctuated by the "buzzer" calling for attention in no uncertain sound, and a buzzer does persistently buzz. Still no one seemed to be disturbed, and certainly it did not cause inattention.

Mrs McIvor put up the Bishop and Mrs Newton for the night, and the next day kindly drove them on to Forest Home Station after a lesson had been given to the children in the Gilbert River School.

All cattle men were as busy as they could be in the Gulf at that time. Drovers were taking delivery on all the stations; so Mr Wilson, of Forest Home, was not able to provide a man to drive on to Crooked Creek, but he had arranged for a buggy and a pair of horses to be at the disposal of the Bishop, who had to trust to someone else about getting the horses and trap back.

Service was held at Woollaston, the residence of Mr Green, on the Thursday night, when the Bishop baptized a grandchild of Mr and Mrs Green; and on Friday Mr Green drove the Bishop and Mrs Newton to Georgetown, where they were the guests of Mrs Moran till the following Tuesday.

The Confirmation at Georgetown was held in the Shire Hall on Friday, May 10th, when eleven candidates—one male and ten female—were confirmed. Mr Moran, the warden of the Etheridge goldfield, presented the candidates in the absence of Mr Longmore, and he must have been reminded of his experience many years ago when he was stationed at Maytown in the warden's office. At that time Mr Moran prepared a class of candidates for Confirmation under the direction of the then Rector of Cooktown. Bishop White was prevented from getting to Maytown for the Confirmation, and Mr Moran had to keep the candidates in hand for twelve months, until the Bishop was able to get to the settlement the next year. On the Saturday a class in preparation for the first Communion of the newly confirmed was taken by the Bishop at Mrs Moran's house, and they received their first Communion on Sunday, May 12th. Mr Moran drove the Bishop to Durham for service that morning at 11 o'clock; a children's service was held in Georgetown in the afternoon; and there was service in the evening. All the services at Georgetown are held in the Shire Hall, which is placed at our disposal by the Shire Council, a privilege for which we are very grateful. Mr and Mrs Moran go to a good deal of trouble in making the place something like a Church. Perhaps some day we may be able to rebuild the Church at Georgetown.

The Bishop visited the people in the township and gave the children a lesson in the State School while he was in Georgetown. There was a little difficulty in arranging for the journey on to Forsyth, where the Confirmation was arranged for on the Tuesday night. The extra coach which usually runs from Georgetown to Forsyth on Mondays was not available, as the driver had an engagement to take a Government official from Forsyth in the opposite direction. Two men who can be engaged at times for transport could not do the trip just then. Mr Longmore could not find a driver in Forsyth to go to Georgetown, though a trap was available there. The warden had grave doubts about the wheels of his trap, but bush people will not leave a man stranded unless it is quite impossible to do something. Mr Stuart, the butcher in Georgetown, offered to lend his buggy; the warden provided horses and trap; Mr Trembath volunteered to act as coachman and to bring back the horses and buggy; and as it was not possible to take all the luggage, the warden undertook to see that the balance came on by coach on the Thursday—so the Bishop arrived in Forsyth in time for the Confirmation. All this shews on the one hand the difficulties of getting about in the Diocese, and on the other the trouble to which people put themselves to help overcome the difficulties.

Mr Longmore had a dozen candidates prepared at Forsyth—all women and girls—whom he himself presented. The service was held in Torrey's Hall, as there is no Church in the village. It was a very reverent service, and there was a large congregation in the hall, and apparently a much larger gathering outside.

On Wednesday afternoon the Bishop took a class in Mrs Kelly's house to prepare the confirmees for their first Communion, which they received on Thursday morning.

That night there was a social gathering in the hall as a reception to the Bishop, when Mr de la Tour (who presided), Mr Longmore, and the Bishop spoke. Mr de la Tour, in welcoming the Bishop, expressed his faith in the future of the district as a mining centre when cost of transport is reduced and other difficulties are removed, and he also spoke very strongly about the need for the spiritual ministrations of the Church to the 1,500 people scattered over the large area of the Etheridge goldfield. The Bishop pointed out the difficulty of getting priests at the present time, when so many men have gone as chaplains, and the supply is cut off, as nearly all the students at the Theological College have enlisted. He appealed to the men and lads to come forward and do their duty as Christians, expressing his regret that at the Confirmation no males had been presented. Several people contributed songs and other items towards the enjoyment of the gathering. Mr de la Tour worked like a Trojan to make the evening a success. At first it seemed as though some of the men who were to sing were backward at coming forward—so it is not only in spiritual things they are so afflicted—but as the evening wore on they overcame their shyness, an indication that if only they would put their wills into it and make the plunge, they could do much in more important matters. The ladies of course had done their part nobly in providing refreshments, which were appreciated by all, and especially by the younger fry. Their evident enjoyment of the good things was a pleasure to behold, their capacity a marvel.

The Bishop and Mrs Newton travelled on to Mareeba by train, and spent Whit Sunday there in the Diocese of North Queensland as the guests of the Rev. D. Thomas. The Church of St. George, Mareeba, has been improved wonderfully. The little building erected some years ago by a band of youths on their own initiative has been enlarged by the addition of a chancel at one end and a baptistery at the other. The decoration of the chancel and altar is very beautiful. There is an atmosphere of reverence, and one feels at once this is a holy place. The Bishop celebrated at the early service at Mareeba on Whit Sunday, preached at the Choral Eucharist, addressed the children in the afternoon, and distributed the Sunday School prizes, and preached again in the evening. He intended going to Mount Molloy and Mount Carbine from Mareeba, but the reduction in the train service by taking off the Monday train to Mount Molloy made this impossible, as arrangements were made for the Parish of Mossman, so he went on to Cairns and caught the boat for Port Douglas from there on Tuesday, May 21st. A week was spent in the Mossman Parish. The Rector had two candidates to be confirmed—one male and one female—on Friday, May 24th. There was a good congregation at this service in spite of the fact that a social in aid of the Y.M.C.A.

Funds was being held in the township at the same time. A service of preparation for Holy Communion was taken by the Bishop on Saturday night, and on Trinity Sunday he celebrated at the early service, when the newly confirmed, and nearly all those confirmed last year, made their communion. He also preached at Mattins and Evensong, and he addressed the children of the Sunday School in the afternoon. On Monday, May 27th, the Bishop returned to Port Douglas, where service was held that night and the Bishop preached. He also celebrated the Holy Communion on Tuesday morning at Port Douglas. While in the parish the Bishop took the children at the State Schools in Mossman and Port Douglas, and also visited as many of the parishioners as time allowed.

On May 28th the Bishop arrived in Cooktown from Port Douglas. He presided at a special meeting of the Parochial Council on Thursday night, May 31st, when a design for an Honour Board, to be placed in the Church, was approved. It is intended to place on this board all the names of those who have volunteered from the parish, whether they were accepted or not, and for no distinction to be made. The names of all who belong to the Church of England will be placed on the board as a matter of course—the names of others will be added if their friends wish it to be done. The names of those who have given their lives will be marked with a cross, and if possible the dates also will be placed after their names. It was decided not to have the words "honour roll" nor anything similar on the board, but if it can be managed the text of Judges v. 2—in the Revised Version—of the Bible will be printed on the board: "For that the people offered themselves willingly; Bless ye the Lord."

On Sunday, June 1st—the first Sunday after Trinity—the Rev. James Tweedie presented twenty-two candidates—four males and eighteen females—for Confirmation at the eleven o'clock service. The Bishop had celebrated at the early service, when the prayers of the congregation were asked for those to be confirmed. He also preached at Evensong. A meeting of the Ladies' Committee in connection with Christ Church, Cooktown, was held on Tuesday afternoon at the Rectory, at which the Bishop took the chair. A five weeks' mail from Thursday Island was sent to Cooktown to meet the Bishop, and that took up some of the time he was in the parish.

On Wednesday, June 5th, the Bishop returned to Cairns, where he was fortunate in securing a berth on a steamer going North, and he arrived at home again on June 10th, after being away just over fourteen weeks.

S. Peter's, Normanton.

The Wardens' accounts, presented to the Easter meeting which was held on Friday, April 12th, 1918, in the rectory, shewed a very satisfactory credit balance. The income of the parish had not fallen off during the year, and the expenses had been less. The stipend was paid to the Rector until the end of August, when the Rev. C. Hall was appointed as a chaplain on continuous service.

Services had been held on 37 Sundays during the year, and the number of Communions made was greater than in the previous year. After the meeting there was a social gathering, the young people enjoyed games, and the ladies had provided an over-abundance of refreshments.

There was a lantern service on the night of Good Friday, when views of the Passion were shewn, and the Bishop gave addresses. The Church was quite full for the service. On Easter Day there were 21 communicants. The offertory dues and collections on that day were given to the Church of England Fund for Soldiers—overseas.

On Anzac Day—the festival of S. Mark—there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 7 a.m.; and service, with intercessions, in the evening, when the Bishop gave an address. The offertory alms and collection were given to the Soldiers' Help Society.

The Wardens gave a sum of a little over five pounds from the General Funds of the parish to Missions, to bring the amount raised in the parish for that object up to ten pounds.

The Sunday School funds were in credit at the end of the year, and the sum of three pounds was in hand for prizes. It was suggested that the children be asked whether they would have prizes, or send the money to one of the war funds. On Sunday, April 14th, the Bishop told the children that this money was theirs, to be used as they wished, and that they could let their teachers know what they wished to be done with the money, and any child could have a prize who wished. The decision was that one-half the money should be sent to the Belgian Fund, and the other half to the Syria and Palestine Relief Fund.

The women of the congregation and others are very busy getting ready for the Sale of Work, to be held during carnival week in July, and so far as can be foreseen there is every prospect of the sale being a great success.

S. Margaret's, Croydon.

As the Rector, the Rev. H. R. Longmore, had to leave Croydon in Easter Week to spend six weeks in the Georgetown district, where there were candidates to be prepared for Confirmation, the Easter Meeting was postponed. The Bishop visited Croydon to take services on April 7th and 21st and May 5th, and to do what parish work was possible.

Some very necessary repairs have been done to the Church, and the Rector himself painted the fence, the result being a very great improvement to the appearance of the Church grounds.

The finances of the parish are not quite so good as they were at Easter, 1917, but a large sum of money has been raised by the Rector for the work of the Church with the soldiers. There was a small balance to the credit of Church funds, but not so large as the balance at Easter, 1917. By practising very great economy the parish pays its way, but there is always a feeling of anxiety in the mind of the Rector with regard to the future. The buildings in the town are being reduced in number, and more gold is being got from the sale of galvanised iron than from the field. The last mine to be working, the "Content," is closed down, and the only work being done on the field is the sinking of the shaft at the Iguana Consols. There are still some sands to be treated, and the cyaniding of these will give work for a few men for a few months if lime and cyanide can be obtained. The outlook for the field is very depressing.

At a social gathering held in the Masonic Hall on Monday, May 6th, to welcome two returned soldiers who had been wounded and discharged, the Bishop was one of the speakers. It was a large and enthusiastic gathering, and few of the families in the town were not represented at it.

As the Rector was away, and the Bishop in Normanton on April 25th, there were no services held in the Church on Anzac Day.

S. David's, Mossman.

The accounts presented at the Easter Meeting shew that the financial position of the parish is improving in that the indebtedness has been decreased during the year. Gradually the debt due to the Rector is being wiped out. The parish was only two months in arrears with stipend. The healthy sign is that the income for the year is about the same as the last year, although for the first time for many years there has not been a Sale of Work or some such way of raising money. All the money was raised by straight-out giving. The offertory alms and collections in Church were greater, as were also the subscriptions and donations to Church funds. Also there was a large increase in the number of communions made, and there was an increase in the amount given to Missions. These are signs of a growth in spiritual life for which we need to be thankful.

Services were held on Anzac Day: a celebration of Holy Communion in the morning, and service with intercessions in the evening.

Christ Church, Cooktown.

The Church has been painted inside and outside, and various repairs have been done to the woodwork of the building, especially to the windows, and the fence and gates have been repaired and painted. The result is a great improvement to the appearance of the Church property. Some repairs are needed to the Rectory, and when these have been done the whole of the Church property in Cooktown will be in good order. The money for the painting and repairs was raised by a small committee of ladies, and all was raised by straight-out giving.

During Holy Week a service for children was held in the Church at 9 a.m. Some forty children were present on the Monday, and the number increased every morning, till there were fifty-seven on the morning of Maundy Thursday. The service lasted about twenty minutes each morning. At the morning service on Good Friday there were a large number of children in the congregation, and at the Three Hours Service there was a congregation of forty adults.

Anzac Day—the festival of S. Mark—was well observed. There were two celebrations of the Holy Communion: the first at 7.30 a.m. as a memorial of those who have given their lives during the war, the second at 11 a.m. as an act of intercession for the soldiers and for those in anxiety and sorrow. Evensong was said, with an address, at 7.30 p.m.

The financial position of the parish, as shewn by the Churchwardens' accounts presented to Easter Meeting, is much sounder than it was a year ago.

All Souls Cathedral.

QUETTA MEMORIAL CHURCH, THURSDAY ISLAND.

A very successful concert was held in the Town Hall, Thursday Island, in aid of the funds of the Church on Wednesday in Easter Week. The first part was the production of "Australia's Part" by the Sunday School children, and this is the first time this Mission play has been presented in the Diocese of Carpentaria. The net proceeds of the concert amounted to £32/5/-, and of this sum £10 was allocated to the Australian Board of Missions towards the amount for which the parish is responsible as its contribution to Missions.

The Easter Meeting was more largely attended than usual this year. This is partly accounted for by the fact that parishioners were to be asked whether they wished a present of two Altar lights to the Cathedral to be accepted. It was decided that they be accepted. The Diocesan Council had agreed to accept them for the Cathedral, but thought the parishioners should be consulted. The Parish Council agreed to accept, but again it was thought the parishioners at the Easter Meeting should be consulted. It may seem that all this roundabout business was very unnecessary to decide about the introduction of the symbol of the presence of our Lord, God and Man, the Light of the World in the Holy Communion. But after all while Altar lights are one of the recognised ornaments of the Church of England, and ought to be used everywhere, things that are lawful are not always expedient, and helpful as such adjuncts to worship are, they are not essential to the validity of the Sacrament. Parishioners have their rights, and charity bids us consider prejudices, and it is better that changes be made with the concurrence of parishioners. That is true always; it is especially true in Thursday Island where there are only two places of worship, the Roman Catholic Church and the Cathedral. And if the diocesan authorities are glad that the Cathedral is used by, and the services helpful to, those who do not profess to be members of the Church of England, they ought also to consider that "hospitality" means that changes, which are not of essentials, should not be made to make it impossible for such people to worship in the Cathedral. Of course such people would be the first to repudiate any desire to interfere with or to control the arrangements for conducting the services of the Cathedral, nevertheless their feelings ought to be considered. Also it may be argued that ornaments and ceremonial connected with the Holy Communion affects communicants only, but even if that were true, which is very doubtful, we would hope that others who cannot be communicants will learn to offer their worship when the Sacrament is celebrated, and from that come to desire fuller Communion. No doubt it is all very illogical, but logic does not rule the world, and at all events those who feel that Altar lights help their devotion at, and add to the dignity and express one meaning of the service, have the happiness of knowing they enjoy the privilege without having unduly hurt the feelings of others.

Anzac Day was well observed at the Cathedral. There were two celebrations of the Holy Communion, and a large number of communicants. There was a procession of citizens to the Cathedral for the second celebration, and the Cathedral was full. The Sub-Dean was the celebrant at both the services. The Rev. J. J. E. Done, who was to have taken the second celebration, was laid up and unable to be present. The public meeting at the Town Hall in the evening was a noteworthy gathering. The Sub-Dean was one of the speakers.

The financial position of the Cathedral Parish, as shewn by the Churchwardens' report and balance sheet at the Easter Meeting, is somewhat better than a year ago.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The Rev. C. J. Armstrong is to be the Missioner to the parish. As nearly as can be known, the uncertain movements of boats prevents any definite dates being fixed beforehand, the Mission will be held in the month of September. Mr Armstrong, who is the Organising Secretary for the Australian Board of Missions in the Province of Queensland, was one of the Missioners in the Diocese of Brisbane last year.

Anzac Day was appropriately observed in Darwin by a Memorial Service to those who have fallen in the war at Christ Church at 10 a.m. There was a procession to the Church of war veterans and of the men at the garrison. The military procession was headed by the Town Band, followed by Captain Spencer Wills and seventeen returned soldiers, then came Lieutenant Mackay and the members of the Garrison Force. The Church was not large enough for the congregation.

The financial position of the parish, as disclosed by the reports of the Wardens, is not satisfactory. There is an overdraft at the bank and accounts unpaid, which bring the indebtedness of the parish to a little over £78. A large sum of money was raised during the year for the Rectory Fund, and there is a little over £100 in hand, sufficient to pay the interest and the first year's instalment of the debt to the Diocese, and over £32 towards the second year's payments. But considering the prosperity of Darwin, Churchpeople ought to be able to wipe out the debt on the current account.

There has been difficulty in finding teachers for the Sunday School at the 2½-Mile, but it is hoped that it will be possible to make some arrangement to carry on this important piece of work. People come and go very frequently in Darwin, which makes the work of the Parish Priest very difficult.

The grand old man of the New Guinea Mission, the Rev. Copland King, has been obliged to ask for twelve months' leave of absence from the Diocese, as he is in such bad health that the doctors would not allow him to return at the end of his furlough. Mr King went to New Guinea with Mr Maclaren in 1891, so that he has seen nearly 27 years of service. It was known that Mr King could not return to the hard life at Ambasi, but it was hoped he would return to take charge of Wamira, a large collection of villages close to where the first Missionaries landed. Mr King is an inmate of the Long Bay Hospital near Sydney, and it is to be hoped that the rest and care he receives there will enable him to take up again the work to which he has devoted himself, without stint, for so many years.

The Carpentarian

FOR THE DIOCESE OF CARPENTARIA,
NORTH AUSTRALIA.

Vol. XVIII., No. 71. Thursday Island, July 1, 1918

Almighty.

Of all the attributes of God there is perhaps not one about which people have such crude notions as about His Omnipotence.

We believe that God is Almighty, and that is usually taken to mean, God can do all things, without any consideration of His other attributes, and how the thought of these must influence our meaning of Omnipotence. To say that God is Almighty does not mean God can do all things when the statement is put baldly. God cannot lie, God cannot do anything that is evil, God cannot do what would contradict the other attributes of His Nature. Sometimes it is said that the phrase, God is Almighty, means God can do anything He wills, and that is better, especially if it is remembered that God cannot will, or desire, or intend anything but what is good. Again it must not be forgotten that God has self-limited His powers by bestowing upon man the terrible gift of free-will. In His love and wisdom He knew man can never become what God intends him to be unless He had given man this power of choice, and though the power may be limited in some ways it is still a real power, and God cannot make the gift an unreal thing. He cannot take away with one hand what He gives with the other. Man has the power with the terrible risk of misusing it.

Once more in His dealings with men God ordinarily works through human agents, and the agents may further the work entrusted to them or they may hinder it. It is through the will of man that God fulfils His purpose, but man has the power of using his will in harmony with or in opposition to the purpose of God, and God does not, ordinarily at least, interfere with those sequences of cause and effect which produce the conditions we observe in the moral as really as in the physical world, so that when the perverted will of man acting in opposition to the will and purpose of God brings ruin and disaster, the ruin and disaster is so far ordained by God as it is the inevitable consequence of the perversion, and the restoration can come when the lesson is learnt that true happiness is found not in doing one's own will, but the will of God, that is to say, it is when there is repentance. God has revealed His will and purpose for man, He has provided means of grace to strengthen the weakened will, He has shewn wherein true happiness—which is not the same thing as material wealth and prosperity—lies, He has given an incentive to search for that happiness, if we have it all in the Revelation through the Incarnate Son of God—His life, His teaching, His work, and if in spite of this man prefers his own way and his own will opposed to the way and will of God, he must take the consequences, and has no right to blame God when those consequences mean ruin and disaster. Only let him realize that the ruin and disaster are the consequences of following a wrong road, reaching after a wrong ideal, and then by true repentance turn to God, and he will find the peace and happiness he has missed, and by the grace of God restoration will be possible. He has no possible right to claim that the consequences will be averted unless he himself does his part in learning his lesson, and getting himself once more into union with God.

One of the consequences of the crude idea of bald omnipotence is the false ideas about prayer, and the consequent loss of faith in the power and efficacy of prayer. Those who have a crude idea of the meaning of omnipotence—and they have nearly always also a crude idea of the love of God—think that by their prayers they can get God to do something they wish to be done. They seem to think that they can change the will and purpose of God to suit their own ideas and wishes. The object of prayer is that we may come to know God and what is His will, so that we may be able to make His will our will; it is not to endeavour to make our will God's will; and prayer in the Name of our Lord is that His will may be done; it is prayer in the attitude of mind that is ready to realize that the very opposite of what is actually asked may be the real answer to prayer, for prayer is the intercourse of love, and our love, inspired and strengthened by our faith in the wisdom of God, leaves us ready, nay anxious, as time goes on, to adapt ourselves more and more to the will of God as it is gradually revealed. We do not worry about having God on our side, but rather our being on the side of God.

Surely the objection to the efficacy of prayer used by some: that the Germans are praying for victory just as hard as we are, and therefore prayer is not going to influence the result of the war—rests on the crude idea of omnipotence, and the consequent idea that God can be influenced by prayers to act one way or the other. It almost seems to suggest the idea that the prayers of the Germans are a force pulling God one way, the prayers of the Allies a force pulling God the other way; and probably each balances the other, or God cannot answer the two opposites at the same time, and so is put out of court. But if we realize that the will of God is that right and truth will conquer; that the victory will come to those who are on His side; that God works through men who, He expects, will use all the means they know to bring about victory. Then, on the one hand we shall pray very earnestly for victory, always being ready to learn wherein we have failed to be on the side of God, and having learnt it, being ready to put ourselves right with God; and, on the other hand, we will use every endeavour, and be prepared to make every sacrifice, in order that our material strength in men and munitions will enable us to gain the victory, which we believe is the will of God. Prayer does not throw all the responsibility on God and take it off ourselves. What we believe we ought to pray for, we ought to work for. The issue is in the hands of God, in that it must be in accordance with His will: the means of attaining it are our efforts and the sacrifices we are called upon to make in order that it may be attained.

Once more let us remember that man is not merely a physical creature, and man is the agent through whom God is working. Man is a spiritual being, a moral person; and the greatest forces in the war are the moral and spiritual forces. It is the morale of our forces that is our great asset. The strength of will, the tenacity of purpose—and these for staying power ultimately depend upon communion with God. If they are fed upon material things the time will come when they will give way; if they are fed upon spiritual realities they will in the end win the victory. And the morale is not only the morale of the men in the Army; it is the morale of the whole Empire and of the allied nations. To strengthen that morale, earnest and incessant prayer is needed. We have no doubt depended hitherto to too great an extent upon material forces; and important and necessary as these are as the means to be used, we have forgotten that there are other—and those spiritual—forces which are equally important for the issue. Let us by prayer bring those forces more into play, that they may have their due effect and influence.

Of course it will be remembered that while we may see and know something of the way in which prayer influences results in that it strengthens the spiritual and moral forces by bringing us into harmony with God, nevertheless we can never know the full extent and meaning of the way in which our prayers influence events. A partial answer is never a complete answer. God in His love and goodness allows us to know to strengthen our faith, and to give us assurance. To know all is impossible for human beings of limited powers. To know all is reserved for God alone.

God is Almighty as being the source of all power of every kind. His omnipotence in action is limited by His other attributes, and by the fact that He has chosen men whom He has endowed with free-will to be His agents, through whom He works. Such limitation does not destroy His omnipotence, it rather enhances it. We believe that we fight on the side of truth and justice, the triumph of which is the will of God, and so we believe we are on the side of God. We pray that we may learn more and more thoroughly what is His will, correcting our conceptions as we learn more fully; and that we may be strengthened to do His will, and not only is there special grace He gives to those who seek His will, but the more we are convinced that we are doing His will the more will we be strengthened spiritually and morally to do it. We shall realize ourselves that sacrifices are worth making and we shall be strengthened to make them, and being convinced that we are the agents of God, we shall use every rightful means to do the work He has given us to do. Pray and work, work and pray—the two things go together, and neither may be neglected.

Mission Notes.

Mrs Luscombe with her baby has gone South on furlough, and Mr Luscombe will probably leave for his furlough before the end of the year. One reason why Mrs Luscombe was anxious to get South early in the year is that her brother, after being badly wounded in France, was sent to Australia for six months' furlough, and Mrs Luscombe was anxious to see him before he returned to England.

The Rev. W. H. MacFarlane has recovered and resumed his work in the Eastern Islands. It is to be hoped that he will take more care of himself and do less work. The Mission cannot afford to have its priests knocking themselves up. Mr MacFarlane will find that he will do more for his people if he takes more care of himself. The worst of Missionaries is that they wear themselves out too soon, and the better the man the sooner he wears himself out. The influence of our Missionaries in the Torres Straits is so good that we want it spread over as long a period as is possible.

Mrs MacFarlane and the children have returned to Darnley Island. For the recovery of health by the family we are very thankful, and for the kindness shown to one and all while they were laid up we are very grateful, and not least so to the doctor and nursing staff at the hospital in Thursday Island. Unfortunately Mr MacFarlane and his little daughter have had slight attacks of fever again.

Miss Luscombe, a sister of the superintendent at S. Paul's, Moa, has been accepted by the Australian Board of Missions as a member of the staff of the Torres Straits Mission. Miss Luscombe, who is a trained and experienced teacher, will take charge of the school at S. Paul's, Moa. She is expected to arrive in Thursday Island early in July.

Mr and Mrs Matthews were to have returned to Trubanaman from furlough in April, but unfortunately their little daughter had to undergo a serious operation, and Mrs Matthews was told she could not take the little maid back to the Mitchell till September. This being so, the Bishop extended Mr Matthew's furlough. It is good to know that the baby got safely through the operation, but there is a danger of a return of the trouble till the little one is a year old.

Mr R. D. Joynt, a member of the Roper River Mission staff, is in Victoria on furlough. Mr Joynt was a student at one of the Theological Colleges some years ago, but realizing the importance of the call to the work amongst the aborigines in the Northern Territory, he volunteered for that work before he could be ordained. He has done many years of faithful service, and has never given up the hope that the time will come when he can be ordained, and if it is possible for arrangements to be made, he will be ordained deacon while on furlough. The secretary of the Church Missionary Society in Melbourne has written to the Bishop of Carpentaria about this matter, and the Bishop has asked the Rev. H. T. Langley, of Melbourne, to act as his examining Chaplain for this occasion, and subject to his report, the arrangements are in the hands of the committee of the Church Missionary Society in Melbourne and of the Bishop of Gippsland.

Mr Cyril Grant Lane will remain at Morning Island until September, at the urgent request of the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church of Australia. The Board has expressed to the Bishop of Carpentaria its very deep sense of gratitude for the help of Mr Lane in a time of stress and anxiety; and as a practical proof of gratitude, has sent the Bishop a draft for £50. The money is to be used for aboriginal Mission work in the Diocese of Carpentaria.

For the first time in the history of the Australian Board of Missions the income of the board was more than £20,000 for the year. So the chairman reports on the finances for the year ending March 31st, 1918. The increase of income is over £2,000, and the increase comes almost entirely from the Australian Dioceses.

The full amount of the Heralds Lenten offering for the year was not known when the Carpentarian went to press, as all the returns had not been received when the last news came from Sydney. It is known that the amount is higher than the £1250 raised last year, and that was a record. Every branch in the Diocese of Carpentaria raised a larger sum than last year.

The Diocese of New Guinea needs two Priests for the staff very badly. The huge district at the Northern end of the coast line, where Mr King worked for eighteen years, and the people of which need much wise guidance and help, is vacant. It is most important that there should be a Priest to take charge of this district. At present there is not a white Missionary resident in the district, as Mr Holland, who has been Lay Missionary under Mr King for many years, has had to go South on an overdue furlough. His furlough could not be delayed longer without serious and lasting injury to his health. At present the Rev. F. R. Elder has to visit the district from Emo, and Emo itself needs the whole of Mr Elder's time and thought. The first converts there have been baptised, and are soon to be confirmed, and that increases the responsibility of the Priest-in-Charge. It is a great joy and happiness to a Missionary when he feels justified in baptising converts, but it brings with it anxious times of grave responsibility.

The Rev. P. C. Shaw and Mrs Shaw returned to New Guinea, from furlough, early in June, and the work of preparing the candidates for ordination will be resumed. Mr Shaw is in charge of the Head Station at Dogura, and is responsible for the work of training the candidates for ordination. The Rev. Edwin Nuagoro, who has done very faithful work as a deacon for over three years, will be prepared for the Priesthood.

The students at the Training College, S. Paul's, Moa, in the Torres Straits, have made very decided progress, as was evidenced by the results of examinations held early this year. Papers were set by the Bishop and by the Rev. J. J. E. Done, and the answers showed a grasp of what had been taught, and a real power of thinking. Both the Bishop and Mr Done were convinced that the knowledge of the students is much greater than can be shewn by answers to questions in English written in English. The highest marks in the examination were gained by Poy Passi with an average of 53 per cent.

The S. Andrew's Waterside Mission has for some years given a grant of £20 a year to the Diocese of Carpentaria. This money has been given: one-half towards the upkeep of the "Francis Pitt" (the Mitchell River Mission ketch), and the other half to the work of the South Sea Islanders' Home in Thursday Island. The Society has increased the grant from January 1st, 1918, to £40. The additional £20 will be used for the upkeep of the "Herald," one of the boats of the Torres Straits Mission. We are very grateful for the help this Society gives us

The Carpentarian Association.

The Carpentarian Association is the organisation in England, comprised of people at home who are interested in the Diocese of Carpentaria, which raises part of the income of the Diocese. Ever since the organisation was founded by Bishop White, Miss Gascoigne has been the secretary. She took the post for a few months, she kept on the work for years; but she wrote to the Bishop last year to say she really must resign. Miss Scarth, who is the Secretary of the New Guinea Association in England, courageously came to our rescue, and suggested that the work of the two associations be done from the one office, and to this arrangement the committee of the New Guinea Association agreed. It is really a step in the right direction to co-ordinate the work in England for Australian Missionary Dioceses, and perhaps Miss Scarth's actions will help to bring that about. It is all very well for Bishops, who are Englishmen, and have a circle of friends in England on whom they can call for help; but what can a Bishop do in that way who is not an Englishman, and who even if he has worked in England, has not been there for 25 years; any friends he may have made are too old to be able to be called upon, even if their personal interest has stood the test of silence of a quarter of a century. Of course Australia ought to be able to support the work of the Church in her own borders and in the neighbouring islands without any help from England, and in time that will be done. Meanwhile we in Carpentaria cannot do without the help we get from England, and least of all, without the £200 or thereabouts the Carpentarian Association has sent us from year to year. We are very grateful to Miss Gascoigne for all she has done for us. We hope that Miss Scarth is not undertaking more than her strength justifies. What has made it possible for the New Guinea Association to come to our aid, is the fact that the Bishop of Carpentaria and Miss Scarth were at one time fellow-members on the staff of the New Guinea Mission; and so New Guinea has a further claim on our interest, our sympathy, our prayers, and our alms.

'Round about the Torres Straits'

The Bishop of Willochra has written a book called "Round About the Torres Straits," which has been published by S.P.C.K. In it the Bishop gives an account of the Missionary work of the Church amongst the aborigines of Australia, and in New Guinea. The reviews speak very highly of the book, as would be expected, when one remembers the peculiar first-hand knowledge the Bishop possesses of the work amongst the aborigines, much of which he was himself the founder, and also the literary charm of all that the Bishop writes. The first supply of copies sent to Australia has been sold out, but the Australian Board of Missions should have a fresh supply by the time this number of the Carpentarian is published. People who are interested in the work of the Church amongst the aborigines and in New Guinea, and that should mean every Churchman, should write to the Secretary, A.B.M. Office, 242 Pitt Street, for a copy.

The Bishop has also another book in the press, dealing with life in the Tropics. This is to be a larger volume, and will not deal exclusively with Missionary work.

"Hints to Parents."

The Bishops of the Church in Australia, at the meetings in connection with General Synod held in 1916, decided that something should be done to help parents in the difficult work and duty of teaching their children about matters of sex. It was felt that the "conspiracy of silence" had not achieved its object; that children are not so ignorant about such matters as is often supposed to be the case; that the knowledge is gained in many objectionable ways, and from sources which make the knowledge defiling to the mind of children. Undue reticence, and the avoiding of the duty of giving pure and sound instruction on the part of parents, destroys that very confidence between parent and child which should be one of the greatest of helps to the child, and indirectly creates a barrier which undermines the true relation of confidence and love which is the greatest happiness of the parent. The parent is shut out of a very important section of the child's life because the child gets an idea one ought to be ashamed to talk about things with father or mother, while there is secret talk with others who are not concerned with the purity of the child's mind.

The Bishop of Bathurst was asked to prepare a small pamphlet dealing with this matter, which could be issued under the authority of the Bishops of the Church in Australia. The Bishop of Bathurst was not able to do the work; he has gone as a chaplain to France, and the Bishop of Willochra undertook the preparation of the papers, which are now published as "Hints to Parents in explaining matters of Sex to the Young."

Every parent should procure a copy of this collection of papers. A copy will cost but about twopence including postage, and they can be obtained from the Diocesan Book Depot in Thursday Island.

Even if parents are doubtful as to the wisdom of saying anything to children, the matter of the purity of children's minds is of such very great importance that they should at least know what the Hints are, and what is the advice that is given. Impurity is a very grievous sin. Its effects are so very serious—spiritually, morally and physically—that no help and guidance should be neglected. I would strongly urge the clergy in the Diocese to get some copies to distribute amongst their parishioners. No parent would object to the small charge. It would not be fair that the clergy should bear the expense themselves.

HENRY,
Bishop of Carpentaria.

Motor Car for the Bishop.

The Committee in Normanton has had a very generous response to the appeal in the township and the district immediately surrounding Normanton. Very little response has been made so far by other parts of the Diocese; but it is hoped that this will come soon as the car has been ordered, and the account must be paid. It will not be fair if the people in Normanton have to do all the work of collecting, and also of subscribing for what is of benefit to the whole of the Diocese; so will other places please get what money can be raised and send it at once to the Treasurer of the fund, Mr F. Rigby, Bank of New South Wales, Normanton, Q. The Diocesan Council has agreed to advance the amount required, about £270; but cannot afford to be long out of the use of the money, which is wanted for Diocesan purposes.

The Bishop has decided to have the car landed at Normanton, and to go on from there to Burketown, leaving that township as previously arranged on July 1st for the Northern Territory.

The Diocese.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aboriginals. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

Missions.

Missions are carried on amongst the Japanese at Thursday Island; the South Sea Islanders; the aboriginals on the Mitchell and Roper Rivers; and among the Islanders of the Torres Straits.

Special Offertories.

On Easter Day the offertories are given to the Clergyman of the Parish, and on Good Friday to the Australian Board of Missions.

Visit to the Roper River Mission.

I spent a very happy week at the Roper River Mission Station in July. Unfortunately nearly all the aboriginals were away. Owing to the shortness of supplies, due to the non-arrival of the boat, it was necessary to send all but the half-caste children out bush to get their own food. I dedicated the Church—a very nice lofty and cool building, and took a quiet day for the members of the staff. There is a great change in the appearance of the station since my first visit two years ago. Then everything had been destroyed by the flood of the previous Christmas time. Now there are new buildings, well built and comfortable. The Church will be a very great help in developing a spirit of reverence and devotion. There is still more building to be done. It was not possible to judge of progress in other matters, as the people were away. There is a large number of half-caste children, mostly girls, on the Station, and they seem to be settled down to their life. I interviewed two of them, who have asked to be prepared for baptism, and also one aboriginal boy, who came in when I arrived. I hope these will be baptised before many months have past. Mr Warren has done a great deal of travelling on the river and up and down the coast in the launch. He has travelled 10,000 miles in the last three years by her.

S. Peter's, Normanton.

The Sub-dean of the Cathedral, the Rev. F. W. Slade, was in charge of the parish for four weeks in July, and the Rev. C. W. Light, from the Brisbane Diocese, arrived in August to take charge for a time. Perhaps Mr Light will be so enamoured of the North that he will remain permanently. A little over £87 was raised by the bazaar held during race week in the month of July. This was not quite so much as was expected. No doubt the sum could have been more than doubled had raffling been indulged in, but our principles are not for sale.

Christ Church, Darwin.

The preparation for the Mission goes on steadily and quietly. The members of the Parochial Council have undertaken the work of distributing the Mission literature week by week. The Bishop took a convention on the Sunday afternoon he was in Darwin, but the attendance was small.

A new system of lighting—air petrol—has been installed in the Church. This cost £30, but though there is a heavy debt on the parochial accounts, the Council felt they must incur this expense owing to the high price of carbide.

The Bishop dedicated a tablet in memory of Sidney Lauder, who was killed in France, and he also spoke at the unveiling of an Honour Roll in the Town Hall. One candidate was confirmed during the visit of the Bishop.

The Parochial Council has paid off the first two years' instalments of the debt to the Diocesan Council on the Rectory.

The parish raised £84 for Lavender Day.

Mission Notes.

The Bishop visited S. Paul's, Moa, on June 12th and remained at the Station till June 15th. During his visit the Bishop baptised an old woman, confirmed 13 candidates, took a Quiet Day for the members of the staff of the Torres Straits Mission and the College students, and presided at a meeting of the people of Moa to discuss various matters in connection with the Settlement. Mr Done and Mr Macfarlane were at S. Paul's during the time of the Bishop's visit.

Mr and Mrs Done, with their two children, left for South on furlough by the "Aki Maru" on Sunday, September 1st. Mr. Done, who hopes to be back before Christmas, will be one of the representatives of the Diocese of Carpentaria at Provincial Synod, which is to meet in Brisbane on October 1st.

Mr H. Matthews, Superintendent of the Mitchell River Mission, was ordained Deacon in the Chapel at Bishopsbourne, Brisbane, by the Archbishop of Brisbane on August 7th, 1918.

The Bishop has received, from the executors of the will of Miss Gertrude Robson, a cheque for £110, being the first moiety of the legacy left by her to the Diocese of Carpentaria. The object of the bequest is Mission work amongst the Aborigines.

Mrs Warren and her child have gone South on furlough from the Roper. Mr Warren hopes to get South in November, when it is expected that Mr Joynt will return and take the position of Acting-Superintendent while Mr Warren is away.

The Rev. Colin Robertson has withdrawn his resignation as a member of the New Guinea Mission staff. He will return to New Guinea after furlough and take charge of the Ambasi district.

The Australian Board of Missions is making a special appeal for help at this time, and all the parishes in Australia are asked to give one Sunday's offertories and collections, at S. Andrew's-tide, as a special War effort, to meet the increased cost of goods and the increased cost of exchange, due to the War. Although the Board has an expanding income, for which we are thankful, the work for which it is responsible is also expanding, and for that we should be thankful and proud. Not only has the Board to meet the increased cost of everything needed for the work of the Missions, but it must be remembered that English contributions, which have done so much to help the work—especially in Melanesia and New Guinea—are falling off. When we remember the strain that is put upon England in these days, we cannot wonder this is so, but it is surely our duty to see to it that Missions for which the Australian Church is responsible are not crippled in their work for this reason. We must be prepared to make up the deficiency, and to enable the Board of Missions to supply what is needed in spite of the war. It is to be hoped that the parochial authorities will join in this effort at S. Andrew's-tide by allocating the offertory and collections on one Sunday to this special effort. It is no use grousing. The war is with us, and we must put up with the consequences; we must "carry on" the work of the Church, and Missions are the most essential part of that work.

Personal.

We are glad to say that at the time of going to press, Mrs Newton, who was taken seriously ill while attending the meeting of the Mothers' Union in Thursday Island on August 30th, is much better. For a few days her friends were very anxious about her, and the doctor said they must send for the Bishop, who was in the Northern Territory. The Bishop got home in ten days after receiving the message, to find that Mrs Newton had taken a change for the better, and the improvement in her health has continued slowly but surely.

Vol. XVIII., No. 72. Thursday Island, Oct. 1, 1918

The Bishop's Trip to the Northern Territory.

I left Thursday Island by the steamer "Musgrave" for Normanton, on Friday, June 21st. The motor car—a Ford station utility car—had been shipped from Brisbane by the same boat, and when we arrived at Karumba it was put on board the tender and taken up the river to Normanton, where we arrived on Monday, June 24th. It was intended that a start for the trip to the Territory should be made on the Tuesday, but unfortunately all the spare parts had been put in the hold of the steamer with the general cargo, and though the officers on the "Musgrave" did all they could they had not been found when the tender left the steamer. There was nothing to be done except to wait till the tender went down the river again and brought up the lighters with the general cargo. This might be on Thursday, it turned out not to be till the Saturday afternoon at 3 p.m., and then it looked as though we should be kept till Monday in Normanton, as no cargo was to be unloaded, except the barrels of beer, which had been on deck in the sun for some days and must be got under cover if the beer was to be fit for human consumption during race week. However, the man in charge of the lighter knew where the case was, and he got it out of the hold for us. The case had to be unpacked, as it was of an inconvenient size for the car, and by half-past four everything was ready for a start, except that we had to be photographed before leaving. It was a quarter to five in the afternoon before we got away. Mr W. G. Edmondson was with me as mechanic and chauffeur.

We soon got over the eighteen miles to Magoura Station, and did not stay there long. Mr Richardson, the acting manager of Magoura, had sent a blackboy on with a horse to help us over the Bairo rivers, two of the three mouths of the Flinders, so we got over the first of our difficulties with ease and in comfort, and we arrived at Inverleigh station about half-past nine at night, having completed the first stage, 45 miles. All the people at Inverleigh had gone to bed, but someone had heard the motor car, and we found Mrs Burnett had supper ready for us by the time we had got over the crossing and unpacked our swags.

Sunday, June 30th, was spent at Inverleigh, and in the evening two candidates were confirmed. On Monday morning we had a celebration of Holy Communion, and left the Station about 9 a.m. "M" Creek, on the way to Wernadinga, pulled us up, and we had to use the "forest devil" to get us out, the first and by no means the last time we had to use that tedious implement. After lunch at Wernadinga we went on to the Leichhardt River. The river flat near the Leichhardt was very rough travelling; it was a case of bump, bump, bump from lump to lump for about five miles. The crossing gave us very little trouble, but we had to unload the car and run her up empty, and then carry all our luggage up the bank—a long steep cutting. From Floraville (now deserted), the buildings of the Post and Telephone Office have been sold and removed to Lawn Hills station. We went on to Armaraynald station, which we reached at 5.30 p.m., after a very good run over the black soil plains. The run that day was about 75 miles. We had service at Armaraynald at night, and after a celebration of the Holy Communion next morning we left for Burketown, where we arrived about 1 p.m., having travelled 32 miles. I spent the afternoon visiting and arranging about the service in the evening, when three children were baptised, and the next morning there was a celebration of Holy Communion.

At Burketown we found our first disappointment over our benzine. Arrangements had been made for five cases to be sent to Alexandria Station, on the Barclay tableland, three months previously, but on making enquiries we found only two had been taken by the carrier, and we had to take extra with us, and so begin what was a handicap all the way, overloading the car. A case was put on the running board, already overloaded, and another on the floor of the car in front of me, so that I travelled for a long distance with one leg on the case, not a comfortable position.

There are many roads leading out from Burketown, and we thought all went the same way, but though we started on the right one we took a turning which led us to a lagoon, evidently a camping place, and we had to turn back after going some three or four miles out of the way. The roads were very good, but very dusty, as we travelled through some six inches of dust on the black soil plains: it was thrown out from the running board like waves from the bow of a fast-travelling launch, and one pitied anyone who might be travelling behind, but there are few travellers on these roads. Some thirty miles out of Burketown we had our first mishap, striking a small stump and carrying away one of our reinforcement bars. Certainly the stump seemed no higher than others we had cleared, but possibly we had dropped into a hole just by it and that dropped us too low. There was nothing to be done to the car, but at least I thought I had better cut the stump out and not be caught by it again, or allow anyone else to be caught. At Brooklands we had lunch, and then on to Gregory Downs, 86 miles from Burketown. The station is on the other side of the river, and finding the road to Camooweal did not cross the river, and that there was very heavy sand on the other side, we decided not to take the car to the station. Mr. Edmondson drove to the hotel, and I took off my boots and waded across. The Gregory is a beautiful clear stream, not very deep, and always running. It was dark when I waded over: I followed the track in the bed of the river, only to find that I seemed to be going the wrong way and further than the homestead was said to be, so I climbed up the bank and struck out down stream to where I supposed the house to be, and found it just after the people had finished tea. I had left my robes and books in the car, but we had prayers before we went to bed.

The next morning I had to make a very early start, as we hoped to do the 140 miles to Camooweal in one day, and Mrs. Boyd gave me a very early breakfast by lamplight. It was cold, and I rather dreaded the crossing of the river, but it turned out to be not so bad after all. At the hotel I found no one up but the hostess. It was not long, however, before we were ready, and we were on the road by 7.30 a.m. The hostess at the hotel gave us some provisions for the road, and it may surprise people to know that in the tropics it was necessary to melt the butter before it could be spread on the bread. We had some sandy creeks and some hills to climb, but we managed all but one patch of sand without any trouble. Several teams were met on this part of the road—some coming back empty, one loaded with wool from Avon Downs, and there were others going out with loading from Burketown. We had travelled 117 miles by sundown, and as the hills were finished and the road good we hoped to get to Camooweal, or, at least, to Rocklands Station, if we could find the turnoff, but at dusk we heard a knock in the engine, and as it was too late to investigate, we got off our swags and camped where we were. It was open country: there was no wood near, so it was a cold supper we had and a cold breakfast next morning. As soon as it was light enough to see, Mr. Edmondson decided we had a faulty bearing, but that we could manage to travel. We got to Rocklands, about 20 miles on, by 9 a.m., and decided to spend the day there for repairs. Mr. Campbell was very good in doing what he could to help us, and there was every prospect of our getting away the next day early, but when the bearing was done it was found that an old Ford shaft on which it was moulded was much smaller than ours, so there would be much more work than was expected. I arranged to get to Camooweal early the next morning for a celebration of Holy Communion, and as Rocklands is connected with Camooweal by telephone, arrangements could be made for the service from there. That night we had service at Rocklands, and I baptised a baby. Mr. Edmondson being anxious to get on with the work, and Mr. Campbell being keen on anything to do with a car—indeed, it almost seems a charity to take a damaged car for him to nurse and repair, he enjoys doing it so much—work was resumed after service, and went on after ordinary folk are in bed.

On Saturday morning Mr. Campbell drove me in to Camooweal, five miles, and we had the celebration, but notice had not been given as widely as we expected. I spent the day visiting the people and waiting for the car to come in. Telephone messages informed me from time to time that it was nearly ready, the last nut was being screwed down, and so on, but there was no appearance put in till late in the afternoon. I had discovered during the day some mothers with babies they wished to have baptised, and some folk who had not known about the celebration that morning, so I decided not to go on that night to Avon Downs, and instead to have an early celebration on the Sunday morning, and morning service later, when the children could be baptised, and then get out to Avon Downs for evening service, and this we did. We had a fine service at Avon on the Sunday night, and a celebration of Holy Communion on the Monday morning before leaving for Alexandria. We were now in the Territory; we had left the State of Queensland when we passed through the rabbit fence a few miles out from Camooweal.

Camooweal was the last telegraph station we were to see for some time, though the telephone at Avon Downs enables one to get into touch with the outside world. At Camooweal we had finally to give up all hope of having nice little depôts of benzine at convenient places along the road, and I had as I thought arranged it all so nicely to have supplies for the outward and return journey. Nothing could be better—on paper. Depôts at Alexandria, Borooloola, and the Roper River, a little over 300 miles apart. The storekeeper at Burketown or the teamster had upset our first depôt, but we were making up for that by carrying extra, and more was to come for the return journey. At Camooweal we heard we must give up hope of having benzine at the other places. The new Government boat for the Territory, the "Sir John Forrest," which was to have left Sydney in April, 1917, did leave in April, 1918, but had to put back as she was leaking badly. Another start was made early in June, and this would give plenty of time for our supplies, as the boat was going direct to Borooloola and the Roper, but at Camooweal we heard that there was no news of her at Thursday Island, and we had better make other arrangements. Put not any trust in or dependence on Government boats; that was to be impressed even more upon us before our trip was finished. We had to decide what we should do before we left Camooweal, and fortunately we were able to get into touch with Mr Cotton, of Brunette Downs, and he said he could let us have some benzine; this with what we had with us and with what had been sent on would carry us through, and there was the possibility that the Mission launch at the Roper used benzine and not kerosene. We found later she uses kerosene; but fortunately had not to depend on help there. Well, we were to go on; but we must depend on ourselves to carry our own benzine from Brunette on—something like 800 miles.

From Avon to Alexandria is 96 miles via the Rankine, where a week before most of the Barclay Downs people had foregathered for a race meeting. There are patches of sand on the road, but they gave us little trouble, and the rest was good going. We were now in the country of huge plains, and had been ever since we finished the hills between Burketown and Camooweal; but the stretches of bare plains seem to get longer and longer the further out one gets towards Alexandria, and on one we could not see a tree in any direction. It is all very dry country, but the grass is good and sub-artesian water can be got at a moderate depth.

It is dreary work travelling over these big plains, even in a motor car late in the season when the road is good after the bumps have been worn down by the teams—what must it be like, travelling on horseback with packs when one can see next night's camp still ahead of one, and water has to be carried!

At Alexandria we had a fine service the night we were there, and the people made a collection of two pounds, one-half of which I intend giving to the Car Fund and the other half to the Torres Straits Mission.

From Alexandria we had a run of 63 miles to Brunette Downs, where we arrived early, and were able to do some slight repairs. At Brunette they have several cars, and there are a number of sub-artesian bores on the station, the pumping at which is done by gas engines, so the management has a fine engineering shop, and anything can be done in the way of repairs to machinery. On both sides of the head station we found a fire plough had been at work along the roads, cutting off the bumps, and making the going very good indeed. Of course the further we got out the less was the number of teams that travelled the road, and the less the bumps made on the black soil plains in the wet season were broken down. Also, we sometimes fancied we must be in civilisation again, when on both sides of Brunette we found places where roads branched off in various directions and finger posts were erected to guide travellers. At one place there were, if I remember aright, five such finger posts. The roads led to the bores, or to another station, or were stock routes. At Brunette again we had a fine service in the evening, and though we were pressed to stay a day or two, the lateness in the season and the uncertainty of what might be in front of us made it inadvisable to stay, much as we wished to.

From Brunette the next stage was to Anthony's Lagoon, 59 miles, a good road all the way, and part of it really the best we could wish to have. Mr. Cotton, of Brunette, had kindly lent us a couple of drums of benzine, besides filling up our tank. He had to open more than one drum, because it was found that so many of the drums had a large percentage of water in them, much larger than impurities would account for. It is wicked that such a thing can be possible. Just fancy being hundreds of miles away in the Never Never, and thinking you have fuel sufficient for your journey, and then to find what you thought to be benzine is water. The day before Mr. Cotton had had that experience out on the run. He was filling his tank at dusk, and ran a lot of water into it, which gave him a couple of hours' trouble and work. Fortunately there was enough benzine to get him back to the homestead. How it is to be explained one may not know, but it looks as though there were some culpable carelessness, to say the least, somewhere. We, I am thankful to say, had no such trouble. We left Brunette with 72 gallons of benzine on board—6 drums, 2 cases, and the tank full. It was a heavy load, but as we could not depend on the Northern Territory Government boat, and did not know of anywhere more was to be picked up on the road, we had to take enough to get us to the Katherine, the rail head from Darwin, and that we reckoned would be some 750 miles, at least. Mr. Cotton remarked: "You have enough benzine to run you over 1000 miles." I replied: "I am only reckoning on 10 miles to the gallon: we don't know what the road is like, and I want to be on the safe side." As a matter of fact, we found later on we had two drums more than we needed, though the distance was rather more than we expected it to be, but we averaged about 15 miles to the gallon.

At Anthony's Lagoon there is a store and a police station, and we found drovers who had been camped for some time waiting for their cattle (3,000 in number) to be dipped. The dipping had just been completed, the policeman in charge was just starting off to Brunette when we arrived, and the drovers were getting ready for a move. They had to be at the Rankine to dip again in 17 days, which meant over 200 miles driving in that time. We camped at the police station and had service. An offering of one pound was made at the service, and I decided to allot the money for the car and for the Torres Straits Mission.

We got away at 8 o'clock on the morning of Thursday, July 12th, from Anthony's Lagoon, and arrived at Wallhallon in time for lunch, 39 miles. I had heard there were a couple of men working a copper show on the Kilgour some 34 miles further on, and decided to get there for the night. Wallhallon is an outstation from Brunette. We found there a man, a returned soldier, who was anxious to meet a teamster whom he was to relieve. He had hurried on, as the instructions were that the loading was not to be taken off at Wallhallon, but to go on further; and it is no joke unloading and reloading some five or six tons of heavy machinery. We gave the man a lift, expecting to meet the team any time; but it turned out he had to go nearly 70 miles before we met the team.

Soon after Wallhallon we left the plain country, and got into the coast water again. There is a big steep jump-up—jump down for us—which would be awkward to negotiate travelling the other way by car. A story is told of a teamster who was travelling the road for the first time, and came to this in the dark; fortunately with an empty waggon. Before he knew where he was the team had begun the descent, and there was no time to put on the break. All the man could do was to ride to the leaders and keep them going at a gallop, and he got down without any damage; but he was thankful to be on level ground again.

Twenty-nine miles from Wallhallon, we came to a letter box on a tree on the side of the road, and here we turned off to find the track to the copper mine at "The Gorge." We had not much trouble in following the directions, but after going about four miles through the forest we lost the track and came to a stony ridge.

The simplest thing was to go on by foot, as we could not be far from the miners' camp, which we soon found. One of the miners went back with Mr. Edmondson, and they brought the car in. The Kilgour is a tributary of the McArthur, and at the camp the river breaks through a range of hills, at what is called the Gorge. That is a magnificent piece of scenery. The rocks rise some 200 feet sheer on each side of the river and are only about 50 yards apart; between them is a beautiful pool of water. It was here that, many years ago, cattle had to be brought at the end of the dry season. There used to be an 80-mile dry stage from Anthony's Lagoon, but the bore at Wallhallon breaks that now. There is said to be a very promising copper show here; copper and silver lead are found in different places on the McArthur Watershed, but the men find it difficult to get bags and transport, and shipping; certainly, according to our experience and that of others, if they depend upon the Government boat from Darwin to the Gulf they are trusting to a broken reed. We found the miners were out of kerosene, and so we left with them the two bottles we had. It is a dreary business having no light at night, and we did not need our lights in that part of the world. There was no risk of meeting a policeman if we travelled without lights at night! We had prayers in the camp, and it was then we discovered there was no kerosene.

Next day we got away again and back on to the road; eight miles more brought us to Top Springs, and our rough road began. The country is limestone; there are huge boulders everywhere, and a good deal of sand. How Mr. Edmondson managed to ride from one boulder to the other—now one wheel on one and then the other on another—and never hit a stone with either crank case or differential casing was a marvel. It looked rather like a hurdle race; it certainly was an obstacle race, but we got through that and over some rough ridges quite safely, and were down on the McArthur with good going again. Here we met the teams, had lunch with the teamsters, and dropped our passenger. Soon after lunch we had to cross a creek, where we had our first puncture. We had run over 620 miles without one, but were to know what they meant from now on. We had trouble getting out of the next creek, and these delays made it late when we got near McArthur Station. We had been warned about the heavy sand in the crossing to the homestead, which is on the other side of the river. Our directions were pretty clear, and we decided about 8 p.m. that we had arrived at the crossing, but as we did not know in which direction the house lay, we decided to camp for the night where we were. The next morning I walked across to the station, the manager of which was away. McArthur Station has changed hands twice during the last few months, and we had heard that the present owners, who had come by car, had passed the place in the dark and had gone some miles further on, so we were rather proud of ourselves when we found we had camped just at the crossing.

The road from McArthur station to Boorooloola, on Saturday, July 13th, was the heaviest we had all the journey. There was a stretch of nearly 12 miles of heavy sand; the scrub was thick in many places, so it was not possible to get out of the sand. Sand is always heaviest where teams have ploughed it up. One road we were warned not to take—the mailman's track over a mountain; there were tracks cut through the bush, and we were uncertain which to take, and the tracks were full of stumps, cut low enough to allow a team to cover them, but high enough to be dangerous for a car. We got through, though we had several hours on almost continuous low gear, and once overheated our engine. Seventeen miles from Boorooloola we picked up a tramp and took him to the township. Bad creeks, sand, and punctures had made that a very heavy day, though we travelled 41 miles only.

Boorooloola is a small township at the head of navigation on the McArthur river. There is an hotel, there are, I believe, only two in private hands in the Territory—a store and a police station. The total population at the time of our visit was about 10, all males, and including travellers; but one time it is said to have been quite a busy place. Boats come here occasionally from Darwin, Thursday Island, and Normanton. There are mining possibilities in the neighbourhood, there is sandalwood and salt near the coast; and if only there were a reliable service of shipping, Boorooloola would be the natural port for stations as far as Brunette on one side, Powell's Creek on the overland telegraph line, and Tanumbirini to the west. Places not more than 450 miles from Boorooloola find it better to get their stores by camel teams from Oodnadatta, at least 700 miles, and the country from Boorooloola is not very bad travelling for teams; Brunette, which is about 230 miles away, finds it better to get loading from Burketown, a distance of about 430 miles, and all because shipping cannot be depended upon.

We had service on Saturday night at Boorooloola and again on Sunday night, as we spent the Sunday there.

On Monday we left for Bauhinia Station, but punctures, heavy roads, and bad creeks meant slow travelling, and even where the road was good the high grass, well over the car, made it advisable to go slow. It was impossible to see whether there were stumps and ant beds on the road. We camped out after doing about 55 miles. We had picked up an aboriginal as a guide at Boorooloola. He came from Hodgson, on the Roper, and was supposed to know the road. We soon found he knew nothing, as he had travelled with horses on a different track, but we had to carry him on, though it meant extra weight for us.

Another very bad creek near Bauhinia made it nearly midday before we got over the 16 miles to the station on Tuesday. There we found that what we had heard before was true—we must make a detour to what is called O.T., as the direct road to Tanumbirini was impossible for a car, and this meant 100 miles instead of a little over 50. We had lunch, and then went on. At Bauhinia we found a man who had travelled from Cloncurry, in Queensland, on a bicycle, and who was making his way to Maranboy.

Some boggy ti-tree country and creeks made our going slow; indeed, we might have found some crossings quite impossible only that a team had gone ahead of us, and had put bushes and timber in the crossings. On one occasion we got to a little stream and decided to investigate. We left the car on what we thought was sound ground, but when we got back we found the two front wheels had sunk to the axle. However, by tying a rope to the back axle and pulling—here our aboriginal supposed guide came in useful in helping me to pull—the engine was able to drag the car out backwards. We only managed to do 23 miles past Bauhinia when it was nearly dark, and as we had got to a fine lagoon we decided to camp there for the night. At these night camps, and there were many of them, I read even-song by the light of the fire, Mr. Edmondson joining in as well as he could. Mattins had to be said early, as we had to get away as soon as possible. I was up before daylight, made up the fire, got the billy on, and said Mattins while it was boiling.

On Wednesday morning we got an early start, but the road was so indistinct that when we looked for it we missed it, ran over it, and had gone up a valley a little way before we realized we were wrong. We questioned our guide, who told us we had crossed the road a little way back, and he had let us go on. Perhaps he thought we were going across country! There is no knowing by an aboriginal what strange things cranky white men will attempt! During the morning we passed the "Three Nobs"—three big conical hills in a line, and soon after we were on a jump-up which took us back on to the tablelands again. Here we should have had good going, and in places we had; but horses had been along the road during the wet season, had cut it up badly, and then the clay and the black soil had set hard. However, we made good progress; were down from the tableland again early in the afternoon; and on to Limmen Water, on which is Tanumbirini.

We were getting near the station at dusk when we discovered at a stony piece of the road, where we had to get out, that some of our luggage had got loose, and one of my bags was gone. I felt very much ashamed—and annoyed—because I had been warned to keep a look-out on the luggage as the road was so rough! We felt sure the bag could not be far, so we walked back to look for it, expecting to pick it up every minute. We went on and on till we had walked some four miles, and there found it lying on the road. I was more careful to do my duty for the rest of the journeyings! We had done 77 miles that day.

It was early the next morning when I got to bed after talking with the manager about many and various things, and after we had had prayers. A car had been to the station, and the manager told us the natives were quite sure the engine said "Tan-um-bi-rina" as it came and "Clon-curry, Clon-curry," as it went away. It came from Cloncurry. Mr. Hensley also told me that the stations further on were short of provisions and the teams were waiting at the Roper Bar for the "John Forrest." As his team had just come in with stores from Boorooloola, I decided to get a couple of bags of flour and some sugar in case the people at the Mission Station were out of those things, or the people camped at the Bar had nothing. So though we had been using up our benzine our load was not being reduced. At Tanumbirini our guide found some relations and decided he would stay with them. We were quite willing, and when he said there was another boy who knew the road and would come with us as substitute we declined, thinking we were quite able to find our way, and not wishing for any extra useless load after our experience with the ignorance of one guide. It so happened that we had our first trouble about finding the road about six miles from Tanumbirini. Mr. Hensley had warned us that after crossing a creek it would be very difficult to pick up the main pad, as there were so many cattle tracks at the creek. Our first difficulty was to find the crossing, and when we had decided on that, I went on to look for the track. "Go due west from the crossing about a quarter of a mile, and you will strike it," were our instructions. Of course we might not have got to the right crossing, but we searched for about an hour and could not find the pad. Then we decided to take the car and go due west for about a mile. This we did, going over logs and through grass over our heads. There was no sign of the track, so we left the car; Mr. Edmondson went North and I went South. He stuck a long reed on the car, so that we should be able to find it again—in the long grass it was soon out of sight, and we also fixed on trees to guide us away and back. After going South about half-a-mile I struck what seemed to be the pad; returned to the car; cooed for the mechanic, and we went to the place. After travelling along the pad for a time we had signs that assured us we were right; and at least we were travelling in the right direction. This delay and others made it impossible to get to Nutwood, the next station, 67 miles that night, and we had to camp about 29 miles from Nutwood. We had made a late start, and had lost time over the road and over a puncture. We were now on fairly level country; but it was rough; no traffic passes over it to speak of, and the black soil flats were to give us a good deal of trouble from now on till we got to the main road again from Katherine down the overland telegraph line. It meant miles and miles of jolting over the tufts of grass and the bumps of soil. Yet every day there were to be stretches of good road.

We arrived at Nutwood in time for lunch on Friday, July 18th, and though I wished very much to spend a night there, we felt we ought to go on. We might be able to do the 51 miles to Hodgson that night, and get to the Roper Mission Station for Sunday, but it was not to be. We had not travelled more than 17 miles by half-past four when we found the car needed some attention, and as we found a traveller who seemed anxious we should camp with him, we did so. The next day was a heavy day, a couple of bad creeks, some very heavy sand, and bent rods made the going heavy, and steering was difficult. We did not arrive at Hodgson Downs till dark, having travelled only 34 miles, the shortest run on the whole trip. Sunday was spent at Hodgson, and on Monday, after some repairs, which made a great difference, we left for the Roper Bar, 52 miles, and we arrived there about 4 p.m. The policeman in charge of the station sent a boy on horseback to the Mission Station with a note to Mr. Warren asking him to come up the next morning for us with the launch. Evidently the boy was not anxious for a moonlight ride, as he got no further than Paddy's Lagoon, four miles on the road.

I had given him a note for Mr. Dahlke, the manager of the station, to let him know I would be down in the morning, and Mr. Dahlke, thinking this was the only message, and the youth did not undeceive him, kept him at the station for the night and sent him back with a horse for me the next morning. So we were no further advanced. Another boy was sent, and I rode on to Paddy's Lagoon. Thinking the second messenger would surely arrive at the Mission Station before dark, and that Mr. Warren would come up by moonlight, I left word that I would meet the launch at the Wilton Junction at midnight, and to the Wilton I went about 10 p.m., two miles further down the river than Paddy's Lagoon. I lit a fire and made myself as comfortable as I could with nothing, thankful there were no mosquitoes. I waited and waited till 10 a.m. on Wednesday morning. Having had no breakfast and a long, dreary wait, I decided to go back to the Bar as being better than a longer stay on the bank of the Roper. I called at Paddy's Lagoon for a cup of tea, and though Mr. Dahlke wanted me to wait while he got a horse in for me, I preferred to walk. I did not know what time the launch would come, and I did not want to miss it. I got back to the Bar in time for lunch, and soon after Mr. Warren put in an appearance. The boy had not got to the Mission Station till after dark; they were very busy finishing the Church at the station. I had said we would be glad of a rest, so Mr. Warren waited till Wednesday morning, and then had some little trouble with the engine.

The police at the Bar were nearly out of flour—the people at the Mission Station were on the last half-bag; so what we had brought was very acceptable. Half a bag and some tobacco I had for aboriginals was left at the Police Station and the rest taken on to the Mission Station. There were people camped about four miles down the river, coming and going, and these people had had to draw on Hodgson Downs for flour. The Nutwood Station team had been waiting about 14 weeks then for the boat. That station would have been out of flour but that a traveller had left a few bags, and this they were using. One of the police had gone to Maranboy, to get supplies with pack-horses—150 miles each way. On Thursday Mr. Warren sent a boy to Matarauka with wires, and I arranged to stay at the Station till the following Monday. There were many people who were anxious about our movements, and some who thought we should never get through, so I was anxious to get wires away as soon as possible.

There were repairs to be done for the car at the Mission Station, and we returned by the launch early on Monday morning to the Bar. Word had come that a boat was on its way from Darwin with stores and should arrive any day. There was a great feeling of relief when this was known, and needless to say, there was an eager look out kept for the "John Als." The policeman who had gone for stores had come back without any, when he heard this news at Maranboy.

A large party came up with us on the launch from the Mission Station—Miss Hill, Mrs. Dyer, and a number of the half-caste girl boarders. We had everything packed and ready for a start—had just finished an early lunch—when I suggested giving the girls a run round on the car before we started. The girls were delighted with the idea, and one party was safely taken on a "joy ride." A second, and last, party got on board, and the shrieks of laughter and delight shewed how thoroughly the children were enjoying themselves; but, alas! just as the car was coming back to the station, one of the front wheel tubes blew out with a crack like a pistol-shot. It was a sandy patch; the car skidded and turned, and we saw it sag on one side. A small boy on the running-board was thrown off; the girls on the seat were in a heap on the driver, and we rushed over to find that every spoke of the off-side back wheel but one was broken.

This looked a hopeless sort of business, but the people with the longest faces were the girls who had received a shock though none were hurt. Something had to be done. It flashed through my mind that it was a good thing the "John Als" was coming; at least we could get to Darwin with the car by her. However, Mr. Warren said he had some dray spokes at the station, and we might do something with them, especially as we had one spoke to use as a pattern, so we took off the wheel, picked up the pieces of spokes, and returned a sad party to the Mission Station. It was dark when we arrived, and there was nothing to be done except to put the spokes into the oven and get them as dry as possible.

Tuesday was a busy day—cutting out, tapering, and fitting the spokes. Fortunately Mr. Warren is an engineer and a very handy man, and he has a good many useful tools. Mr. Warren, Mr. Dyer, and Mr. Edmondson had little spare time that day, and by the evening the spokes were nearly ready. Once again they were put in the oven for the night; but would they fit, and would it be possible to get them all in, that was to be decided on Wednesday morning, when after a little persuasion and ingenuity they were got into place and screwed up? We had a wheel as good as new. Needless to say, we stood that wheel on a box and photographed it with the ingenious mechanics standing behind it. They were rightly proud of the results. The wheel has carried us over 1,100 miles; and though it has needed a little water once or twice, will probably travel many hundreds of miles yet.

We were back at the Bar on Wednesday night and on our way again on Thursday morning. On the road to Hodgson we meet the Elsey station team on its way to meet the "John Als." A night was spent at Hodgson, and then we left for Elsey Downs; but had not got far when a creek pulled us up, and we had a hard tussle to get up the sandy bank. We were now on a road I had travelled two years before, and I knew we must be on the lookout against taking the short cut, which is only a bridle track. Yet we did take the wrong road, and uncertain as I was, we kept on seeing what seemed to be a wheel track, and as there had been a good deal of cattle traffic, we thought the wheel track had been nearly obliterated, but enough left to keep us on the road. Later on we found that our bicycle friend from Cloncurry had been on this track, had broken down, and returned to Hodgson, where he got work. We went on for about seven miles, and came to a big sandy creek, which I knew I had not crossed before. We did not feel inclined to turn back, so decided to go bush, cutting off in a north-easterly direction for where we should meet the other road. We had crossed no creeks, the country was fairly open, and there seemed no reason why we should not save a good deal by going across country. After going about three miles we struck the other road, and soon after met our bicycle friend, who had been out working on a stockyard. We had two "jump-ups" to get over that day. One we managed without much trouble, but the second was a terror, very stony and near the top a couple of big boulders. We had to pull on the forest devil first from one tree and then from another, and we were working for over an hour to get the car a few yards. Another bad creek and a blow out of tubes meant more delay, so that by 4 o'clock we had only done 38 miles, when we struck "The Strangways," a deep creek with a very sandy bank. When we got to the cutting going into the creek we found a big snake in possession of the road; he made no attempt to move, and he looked very vicious. We pulled up and looked for a stick. Mr. Edmondson tried a revolver shot, but missed him. I picked up a big stone and dropped it on his back, disabling him, and Mr. Edmondson peppered him with revolver shots. All this took time, and we found the get-out of the creek so bad that by dark we had made little progress up the bank, so we decided to camp in the bed of the creek for the night. We had had to partly unload the car for our blankets and other things, so early in the morning we took off the rest of our goods and carried all up the bank. Two attempts were made to run the car up empty, but she stuck in the same place each time. At the third attempt I got a push on at this spot, and the car went up without further trouble, and we got to Elsey Station, 27 miles on, soon after mid-day. Here we were able to unload all our extra benzine, as Mr Shadforth promised to send it on to Matarauka, where we could pick it up on our return, and we took him on the 23 miles to Matarauka that afternoon. Matarauka is the Government Experimental Sheep Farm, about four miles from Bitter Springs and about seven miles from the overland telegraph line. On Sunday morning we ran to Maranboy, 43-miles, arriving there just after lunch. The afternoon was spent in going round the township—a tin-mining centre—to let people know about the service to be held in the evening. We were the guests of Mrs Stutterd, the wife of the Manager of the Battery, while we were at Maranboy. On Monday we went on to the Katherine, 43-miles, the head of the line from Darwin. Service was held that night, and the collection divided between the Car Fund and the Parish of Darwin, as we were now within the limits of that parish. On Tuesday we left by train for Darwin, taking the car with us—an expensive business—as it would be necessary to have a thorough overhaul before starting on the return journey.

Ten days were spent in Darwin. I had arranged to leave by a cattle train for Pine Creek on Friday, August 16th, to spend a Sunday there, get on by train the following Tuesday to Katherine to meet the car and start on the return journey, but plans had to be altered. On the Thursday night I put in an appearance about 10 o'clock at a Red Cross function in Darwin, and there I met the captain of the "John Als." I supposed he had just returned from the Roper; but when I asked about his trip, to my horror, I found that he had not been there. An accident to the machinery and the blowing out of his mainsail had meant that he had to turn back and make a fair wind of it to Darwin. It was more than a fortnight since I had been at the Roper, and when I was there the people were nearly out of rations. On Friday morning I went to see the Government Secretary to find out what was to be done for the people on the Roper; and when it seemed it would be at least a week before the boat could start again, I decided to get away with emergency rations on the car. I thought we could carry a dozen bags of flour, a bag of sugar, tea, tobacco, and a drum of kerosene. Mr Carey, the Government Secretary, was very kind in fixing up matters for us; and it was arranged that we should pick up the stores at Matarauka. This would enable us to leave all our own things there; go to the Roper and back, pick up our goods, and get on our way down the overland telegraph line without having to come back 87 miles to Katherine. Our return route was to be by Newcastle Waters and Eva Downs to Anthony's Lagoon.

We got away on Saturday afternoon from Darwin by a cattle train, travelled all night, and arrived at Katherine before daylight. As soon as we could we got away from Katherine, Mr Carey with us, as he wished to get to Matarauka an Government business. We got to Matarauka that night, 87 miles, and found our engine knocking rather badly, and also that the king-bolt in the front spring was gone. Next day we had to put in a new connecting-rod and fix up the spring. That took nearly all day, but we got loaded up and away for Elsey Station before dark. We found that the benzine we had to carry to do the 280 miles to the Roper and back and other things made the 12 bags of flour too top-heavy a load. The benzine and oil drums had to be on the bottom, so we took only six bags of flour. Tuesday night we got within 12 miles of Hodgson and camped with Mr Shadforth, the Manager of Elsey and Hodgson, who was mustering, and on Wednesday afternoon we were at the Bar, and very welcome visitors we were, just three weeks after we had left before news had come by the mailman that we were on the way, and Mr Warren, who had come up to meet the mail, had waited a day for us. Miss Hill and all the girl boarders had been out for ten days then on one of the billabongs living on lily roots and seeds. They had 7lbs. of flour, which was being kept for the baby and Mrs. Dyer, and a few biscuits. Mr Warren told me he intended to start the following Monday on horseback for the Katherine, taking Mrs. Warren and the baby. That would mean a journey of over 200 miles by the shortest way, but he would not allow them to travel on the "John Als," as there is no accommodation and no privacy, and there was little hope of the "John Forrest" turning up. I suggested that Mrs. Warren and the baby come with us in the car to Elsey or Matarauka, as means could be found to get them on to Maranboy, where they would find a coach once a week to the Katherine, and as we were to spend a day at the Bar to do odd things to the engine, that would give time for Mrs. Warren to pack and get up to join us. We had broken our radius bar, which had to be fixed up, and for this Mr. Warren's ingenuity again came to our help. Missionaries, it seems, can do anything, especially when they are also engineers.

It was Friday afternoon before we left the Bar, my position being on top of the luggage at the back. We arrived at Hodgson about 10 p.m., to find everyone in bed; but the men cleared out of the one living room to give it up to Mrs Warren, and we all slept outside. An early start on Saturday-morning enabled us to get to Elsey that night, in spite of punctures and other difficulties. The next morning we got to Matarauka, and about half an hour after our arrival, the Administrator's car arrived from down the telegraph line on the way to the Katherine. The car was out of repair after the long journey; but the chauffeur said he would take Mrs Warren as far as Maranboy, where, as we heard later, they arrived safely that night, and Mrs Warren was taken on by Mr Stutterd in his car to Katherine the following Tuesday, and there she caught the train for Darwin.

We stayed at Matarauka a couple of days for repairs and left on Wednesday. We were now to have tube trouble; but chiefly because I had not taken into account the extra 280 miles to the Bar and back over a rough road. I had got what we thought was sufficient in the way of patches for our return journey; and in the hurry of leaving Darwin had forgotten to take into account the extra distance.

On the way to the Roper and back we had used up nearly all our patches, and so, though we started from Matarauka with four good tubes and three that could be patched, we had nothing to patch with. However, a Government car was on the road, and we expected to meet it and get help, so we started. The first day we had some very heavy sand for some distance, and had only covered about 46 miles when we camped at No. 2 Bore. The Government has put down about seven bores on the overland telegraph line, and the pumps on these are worked by windmills; tanks, holding about 4,000 gallons of water, are at each bore, and a trough for watering horses. These bores are a great convenience, nearly all are in working order, and others are being put down. One interesting thing at the bores is the great number of birds at them morning and evening. Very little animal life of any kind was seen by us on the trip, except at the swamps. But when we camped at No. 2 Bore, we found great flocks of pigeons and other birds, and it was interesting to see them walking up to the water from the overflow-pipe, trotting up in a business-like way; overhead were flying two big hawks, which swooped down occasionally and caused a flutter. All night long we heard dingoes lapping the water in the trough, and I thought it advisable to get up and put our tucker bag on the car.

From No. 2 bore we ran on 74 miles to Daly Waters, one of the overland telegraph stations. Here we had service and spent the night. The next day we got to Newcastle Waters, 88 miles, taking with us a drum of benzine for the Government car we expected to meet. All along the line the road was good, excepting for patches of sand, some of which is very heavy. It is a long, dry stretch—or would be but for the bores and wells—late in the season—in nearly 200 miles from old Elsey Station, the scene of "We of the Never Never," we only saw seven lagoons with water in them, and in two or three of these was a little thick muddy fluid.

By the time we reached Newcastle Waters we had only one good tube left, but we had hopes of help. Saturday we spent at the station, holding service at night, and intended to wait a day or two for the other car, but on Saturday night I received an urgent wire calling me back to Thursday Island. We had to make up our minds at once as to what we should do. Go back to Darwin, which meant doing 300 miles on flat tyres in two and a half days if we were to catch the train, and get a boat leaving in a few days for Thursday Island, or go on to Burketown and catch a boat there in the middle of September. If we could catch the Darwin boat, I should be home ten days earlier than by going the other way. If we missed the train it would mean a wait of at least a month in Darwin. We decided on the Darwin route, and that night we packed our tyres as well as we could with old bagging, and we put inside the old tyres that were nearly worn out. We left Newcastle Waters at 6.30 a.m. on Sunday morning, September 1st, and arrived at Daly Waters about 4.30 p.m. Here we found that the king bolt of the front spring had again gone. We set to work and put in a new spring we had. That and other odd jobs kept us going till 11 p.m., and we were off again at 1 a.m. on Monday. We had to get through the heavy sand near old Elsey during day light. We kept going till 11 o'clock at night except for the times we stopped to boil the billy, and once when we got stuck in creek near Maranboy about 10 p.m.; and in that time we travelled over 160 miles. At Maranboy we heard the train was delayed a day, so we had no need to hurry the next day, but we got to the Railway Station by 4 p.m. The last few miles were very trying. One of the tyres got very much worn, and it was difficult to keep it on. It was a case of getting out very frequently and fixing it. In the end we roped it. The train was delayed for races at the Katherine—what was intended to be a sort of carnival to end up the trucking season for Vestey's Meatworks in Darwin, but which was really an orgy. We packed up things and covered up the car, which we left under the station house at Katherine, as it was not worth while going to the expense of taking it by rail and sea to the Gulf. Next year I hope to start from the Katherine, go down the telegraph line, and across the Barclay Tableland, and so back to the Gulf. We caught the boat on Saturday, September 7th, in Darwin, and I was home on September 10th, just ten days after receiving the wire at Newcastle Waters.

We had travelled about 2,280 miles in the car, besides another 900 by train and launch between Normanton and the time we left Darwin for Thursday Island, and we visited nine stations which no bishop, and very few clergymen of any denomination, had ever been to.

We had services more or less formal at fifteen places in the diocese, besides others in the Diocese of North Queensland, which I took at the request of the Bishop of that diocese.

Everywhere people were most kind and hospitable and helpful, ready to do anything they could and provide anything they had. It was a real happiness to visit them, and on the rush back to the Katherine no one could have been kinder than the officials on the overland telegraph line.

The journey was well worth while from every point of view, and the car proved its usefulness, especially so as we were able to take stores to the Roper and save Mrs Warren and her baby a journey of over 200 miles on horseback.

The car behaved splendidly. Our chief troubles were tube troubles and our rubber water connection for the radiator. We had some breakages, of course, and there were spares we did not have, and should have had, but did not think of. I do not think we should have been stuck up once had we taken the trouble to unload at the creeks and jump-up. Only one of these latter, as it was, stuck us up, and that only once. Probably we were often stuck because the grade was so steep that the benzine did not run to the carburettor.

We were overloaded nearly all the time; and yet, though sand was heavy in many places, it very seldom stopped us. It was not altogether a pleasure trip. There is no fun in hauling a car up a rise with a forest devil, nor in carrying drums of benzine up the sandy bank of a creek, on a broiling hot day in the Northern Territory, nor in pushing behind in sand—but then, all that comes in the day's work.

We started too late in the year, and had to rush things too much. Mr Edmondson had not sufficient time for slight repairs, and I was very sorry not to spend a night at Bauhinia, and at Nutwood. Many people said we would never do the trip. We did it, though we had to carry our own benzine, and were well on our way back when it was necessary for me to return to Thursday Island as quickly as possible. The road we had travelled was infinitely worse than the road by which we were returning.

From what we heard, the 175 miles from Newcastle Waters to Anthony's Lagoon, the only part we did not see, is good compared to what we had travelled over. We met a man between Daly Waters and Newcastle Waters who had just come over the road with a sulky, and he said we should have no trouble.

The success of the trip was due to the careful driving and the general skill of Mr Edmondson. He was a good travelling companion; he worked like a Trojan, and did not mind what trouble he took or what he had to do. I shall always be grateful for the way he worked and all he did to get me to the train at the Katherine in time. To keep going from 6.30 in the morning of one day till nearly midnight of the next day was heroic.

I have thought it worth while to take up nearly the whole of the Carpentarian this month with the account of the trip, partly because it gives an insight into the huge area of the Diocese; and really we only ran along the edge on this trip, partly because it shews some of the difficulties of working the Diocese; but chiefly because it shews how useful the car is, and so those, and especially the people of Normanton, who have taken the trouble to get it for the Diocese, may know that a car is essential to the work of the Church in the Diocese of Carpentaria.

The fourth year of the Bishop's Consecration began on September 21st, 1918. Will surrogates and others please note this.

Motor Car Fund.

Contributions come in slowly to the Motor Car Fund. The treasurer has not yet received enough to pay for the actual cost of the car; and of course, many spare parts had to be ordered, and there were freight and other charges. The account has been paid by the Diocesan Council; but the funds of the Council are limited, and the treasurer cannot afford that this debt should be long outstanding. As the car has proved its usefulness, will those people who perhaps wondered whether it was worth while to get it, send their donations at once to Mr F. Rigby, Bank of New South Wales, Normanton, Queensland?

A meeting of the Diocesan Council was held on the 18th June, all the members being present.

The business before the Council included the following:—Morrison Endowment for St. Paul's, Moa; Diocesan motor car; proposed hostel for native girls; finances of the Diocesan Church Management Fund; Bishopric Fund; Clergy Endowment Fund. The Bishop reported an increased grant received from St. Andrew's Waterside Mission, London, for our Mission work; a grant from the S.P.O.K., for St Paul's College; a gift of £50 from the Presbyterian Board of Missions for our Aboriginal Missions, in grateful recognition of Mr Lane's services at Mornington Island; the difficulty of getting anyone to carry on the work of the Carpentarian Association in England; an increased grant made to the Parish of Normanton, to enable it to pay a sufficient stipend; the appointment of representatives of this Diocese at Provincial Synod was made.

The Council also decided to ask the Committee of the Mitchell River Cattle Fund for a temporary loan to tide the treasurer over an emergency.

The See was founded in 1900, and consists of such part of Queensland as is bounded by the sea on the north and east, by the Northern Territory on the west, and by a line drawn from lat. S. 19deg. 30min. on the western boundary of Queensland due east to par. 144deg. E. and thence N. to lat. S. 16deg. 40min. and thence east to the sea, together with the whole of the Northern Territory, comprising an area of not less than 620,000 square miles. The population, which is very widely scattered over this immense area, consists of about 10,000 whites, 5,000 Japanese, Chinese, and other aliens, and 35,000 aborigines. The white population is mainly mining and pastoral. The See town is Thursday Island, a pearling centre north of Cape York.

Finance.

The Diocese has no endowments beyond the Bishop's income of £395 per annum. Every parish needs a grant from central funds which come from subscriptions to the Diocese, and grants from English Societies.

The Bishop's Movements.

The Bishop left Thursday Island by the "Montoro" on October 10th for Darwin, to take the Mission in that parish. He arrived in Darwin on Sunday, October 13th, and left by the "Victoria" on October 23rd, arriving in Thursday Island on October 26th. He left the same day by the "Banzai" for Badu and took services the following Sunday at Adam and at Badu. On October 31st the Bishop returned to Thursday Island in the "Goodwill," Mr Walker kindly bringing him and Miss Newton back from Badu. A few days were spent at Badu by the Bishop attending to the mail and various other matters, and on November 8th he left by the "Aramac" for Burketown, where he remained for eight days, visiting the State School every day to give the children religious instruction and preparing half-a-dozen candidates for Confirmation.

Mrs Field, the wife of the manager of the Queensland National Bank, had had the candidates in hand for some time, preparing them for their confirmation. Services were held on the Sunday, and the Confirmation was on Wednesday, November 20th, and on the next morning the Bishop gave the newly-confirmed their first Communion at 6.30 a.m. and left the same morning for Armraynald Station. Mr Scholes kindly drove the Bishop to Armraynald in his motor car, and so saved him a week, as there is only a weekly coach to Normanton; and there were candidates for Confirmation, which necessitated a stay at Armraynald. Five days were spent at the station, giving instruction to the candidates, who were confirmed on Monday evening, November 25th, and the Bishop gave them their first Communion the next morning. Mr Medill drove the Bishop out to the road to meet the coach, which would take him as far as Floraville, where the connection with Normanton was made, and the night was spent at Ernabella.

An early start at 3.30 a.m. the next day made it possible to get as far as the Big Bairo night, a distance of seventy-two miles, though the roads were heavy in places, owing to the rains which had fallen the day before. An early start was the order of the day for the morning; but though the coachman roused the blackboy about 4 a.m., to get the change-horses from the paddock, it was seven o'clock before a start was made. The dry weather had made it impossible for the mailman to have a change of horses at Magoura, so the one pair had to do the journey to Normanton. It was slow travelling, the weather was frightfully hot and the road heavy. That night the Bishop attended a social gathering in the Shire Hall, Normanton, got up by the Church people, and told some of his experiences on the journey by car to Darwin.

The next night he again spoke at the Peace celebrations in the Shire Hall, and after celebrating the Holy Communion and preaching on the Sunday, left for Croydon by train on Monday, December 2nd. There were meetings and services and a confirmation of candidates at Croydon, and on December 9th the Bishop returned to Normanton by train, to catch the Gulf boat for Thursday Island. This visit to the Gulf was necessary to pick up some work, especially the Confirmations at Burketown and Armraynald the Bishop had arranged to do on his return from Darwin overland, but which had been put off by change of plans.

Christ Church, Darwin.

Unreliable information about steamers led to Mr Armstrong missing the Darwin boat early in October. He had been told by the agents that he could get the steamer at Cairns, but she did not call at that port. Mr Armstrong wired at once to the Bishop and to Mr Lane saying the Mission must be postponed till next year, but Mr Lane did not think that would be wise and he wired to the Bishop asking him to come, and the Bishop came. The Mission began at Evensong on Sunday, October 13th, and ended at Evensong the following Sunday. It cannot be said that it was a success. A good deal of work had been done in preparation for the Mission, but there were many difficulties when the Mission week came—uncertainty about boats was one. It was expected that the Missioner would be three weeks in Darwin, and that he would begin the Mission about a week after his arrival, but no definite date could be fixed. The Bishop had to return to Thursday Island as soon as possible, and the Mission began the day he arrived. During that week there was a huge effort for Red Cross work, the electing of a queen, with a big market day on the Thursday of the week; three mails were in during the week; there was a go-slow strike on the wharf and among the railway men—this kept a boat in Darwin twelve days instead of six, and so enabled the Bishop to get away immediately after the Mission—and another strike at the meat works. All these things interfered with the Mission, though it must be admitted that had there been any real keenness they would not have mattered much. The cheering thing was that there were Communicants every morning at the celebration at 6.30 a.m., and as Darwin time is about 40 minutes behind zone time that meant people getting up before daylight.

The Rev. C. H. Massey has resigned the parish of Darwin. Mr Lane will continue as priest-in-charge till April of next year, and in the meantime the Bishop is trying to find a priest as rector of the parish.

By a special effort Mr Lane has collected over £50 towards paying off the debt on the parish accounts. This is about half the indebtedness. The debt was largely increased by the installation of air petrol gas, but that was necessary as the cost of carbide was prohibitive.

S. Margaret's, Croydon.

The Bishop and Mrs Newton arrived in Croydon by train from Normanton on Monday, December 2nd, and were the guests of Mrs Toohey during their stay. On the Tuesday night the Bishop preached at the Advent service in the parish church, and also at Golden Gate on the Wednesday evening. On Sunday, December 8th, he celebrated at 7 a.m., said Mattins, addressed the children in the afternoon, confirmed four candidates, and preached at Evensong. After Evensong a meeting of parishioners was held in the vestry.

The Reverend H. R. Longmore has resigned the parish of Croydon, and expects to take up work in the Diocese of Willochra early next year. Mr Longmore has been Rector of Croydon for five and a half years, and has done an enormous amount of work there and in the Georgetown district. And all his travelling has been done by bicycle.

In Memoriam.

COPLAND KING, PRIEST.

MONTAGU JOHN STONE-WIGG, BISHOP

In the month of October two men were called to their rest, whose lives of self-sacrifice and devotion have enriched the Church, and have been, and will continue to be, a source of strength and inspiration. And in particular it is the Church in New Guinea that has benefited most of all directly by the life, and work, and example of Copland King, Priest, a member of the staff up to the time of his death, and of Montagu John Stone-Wigg, the first Bishop of the Diocese, who resigned the See ten years ago on account of ill-health.

Copland King, who died on October 6th, 1918, in the fifty-fifth year of his age, was the son of the venerable Archdeacon King. He was educated at the Sydney Grammar School and at the University of Sydney, and was ordained deacon and priest by Bishop Barry. He worked for a few years in the Diocese of Sydney, and joined the Rev. Albert Maclaren, the founder of the New Guinea Mission in 1891. The story of how the young priest came to be connected with what was to be his life's work has often been told. It illustrates the characters of the two pioneer priests, and is an example of the wonderful ways in which the Holy Spirit works, the guiding hand of God. Copland King had heard Maclaren speaking in public about the Mission, but had never met him till chance, as we say, made the two priests fellow-passengers on the northern railway in New South Wales. Maclaren, intensely keen on his work and ready at all times and on all occasions to enlist the sympathy and interest of others, took the opportunity of speaking to his fellow passenger about the new Mission, and pressed him earnestly to join him. Copland King, much more reserved, a man who did not come to a conclusion in a hurry, had not committed himself when the train arrived at Quirindi, and there the two priests left the train, and they spent the rest of the night in the street walking up and down discussing the matter, and still the younger priest would not give a definite answer. After a few weeks, however, he wrote to Maclaren and offered to join him. It was characteristic of the whole life of the younger man, who having once put his hand to the plough never looked back in anything he undertook, not to make up his mind in a hurry, not to be rushed into a decision, but having made up his mind to stick to the decision to which he had come. There were, no doubt, many things for the younger man to consider which the elder, with his more impulsive and enthusiastic nature, would not take into account. Copland King had been brought up in a school of Churchmanship very different from that which moulded the character and formed the opinion of Albert Maclaren, though also in an atmosphere of wide Christian charity and loyalty to our Lord and the Church. His father, though his views differed widely from those of Maclaren, had publicly stated that the work of the Mission was the work of God, and though it might not be done on the lines he would prefer, because it was the work of God it had his blessing and he would give it his support. The honour and the glory of God, obedience to our Lord, was the first consideration. His mother once said to the writer, when her son had been twelve years in New Guinea: "I hope Copland will stay down here after his next furlough, but I would never say a word to induce him to do so." Her mother's heart yearned for the companionship of her son in her old age. She was naturally anxious about his health, but the natural longings and the anxiety of the mother were subordinated to a sense of duty. Can one wonder that the man brought up in such an atmosphere had a keen sense of loyalty and of duty. And that sense of loyalty and of duty was the characteristic of the nature and of the life-work of Copland King. It was tried, and tried severely, many times, but it never failed him. It was tried when, a few months after he and Maclaren landed, the leader died, and the responsibility for carrying on the work rested on the shoulders of the younger man, who himself had suffered severely from malaria, when the Church in Australia was apathetic in support of the Mission, and in addition, there were difficulties at Dogura that needed great courage and firm faith to overcome. But he stuck to his post in spite of difficulties and want of support, and all the time was planning developments when others were talking of failure. It was tried again when brighter times came to the Mission, and work was developed on lines even less congenial to his own ways of thinking, and when some did not realise how much the Mission owed to him. It was tried when, within two years of the consecration of the first Bishop, Copland King was administering the Diocese. The Rev. W. E. Hines had to leave the newly-opened station on the Mambare, because his health had broken down. "I must go," he said, "I am in charge and am responsible." Perhaps he never made a big decision so quickly in all his life as he did then. He simply saw his duty clearly and did it, though it needed going to what was considered the most unhealthy place in New Guinea in those days, and it meant leaving Dogura, the station he had nursed through difficult times, his first converts, and the language he had mastered and in which he hoped to do so much translation work.

He remained in the North for 18 years, always doing pioneering work, except when he was called back once or twice to administer the Diocese during the absence of the Bishop, and there he opened new stations as opportunity presented itself. He worked at and mastered the most difficult language in New Guinea. He lived a hard and strenuous life with very little of personal comfort, and undoubtedly the hardships and privations shortened his life on earth. Just because he felt it was his duty to go to the North he went, and because he felt it would be better for the Mission that he should do the pioneering work he left his first converts, and all the happiness and joy of sharing in the reaping of the harvest due to his own labours he was content to remain in the North. Others entered into his labours; to them was given the privilege and happiness of large classes for baptism and confirmation, of large bodies of communicants and of inspiring services, while he set himself once more to lay foundations on which others were to build. He was content that it should be so, but that content was the proof of a character of loyalty and devotion to duty.

Copland King was not only a pioneer missionary, who all his life chose the hard and difficult work; he was not only a linguist who mastered two difficult languages—not two dialects—but two distinct languages (Binandere and Wedauan), but he was a keen student of botany. Now one branch and now another engaged his attention. He knew more about orchids and ferns than most people, and was in communication with botanists in various parts of the world, collecting specimens and sending them away for classification, more especially to Sydney and Manila. He was of course a keen student of native customs and ever ready to use his knowledge of these to help him in commending the message of the Gospel to the people to whom he was sent.

Doubtless these varied interests helped him in many ways and relieved the heavy burden he had at times to bear. But what most of all helped him of earthly things was his keen sense of humour. He could see the humour in any situation, and his laugh could be heard dispelling gloom and restoring a situation that had become strained. Of course he could be stern and he could be firm. No one can manage New Guinea people without firmness, and if his sense of humour saved many a situation, his firmness carried him through many dangers and enabled him to overcome many difficulties.

Copland King died a comparatively young man, but the value of a man's life is not measured by length of days so much as by what is accomplished in the time allotted. He would have been the last to admit that his work was finished, but those who knew him and the great things he did have no doubt about the fullness of his life, and the greatness of his work.

To MONTAGU JOHN STONE-WIGG, the first Bishop of New Guinea, was granted the high privilege and honour of organizing the work of the Mission and placing it on sound lines, and perhaps no character could be conceived more fitted for that particular work, but it was not only in the mission field that he did great and lasting work for the Church.

The Bishop was educated at Winchester and at University College, Oxford, and he was a loyal Wykenist to the day of his death. For a few years after his ordination he worked in London, and in 1889 came to Australia to join the Reverend Bernard Wilson at St. John's Cathedral in Brisbane. In 1891 he was appointed Canon and Sub-Dean of the Cathedral. His life of self-sacrifice and devotion, his single minded sense of duty, and his organizing powers found full scope in Brisbane and were fully used. In those days the site of the Cathedral was in George Street, and it was intended to build the new Cathedral on that site, but the actual building was in the future, and the Sub-Dean devoted his energies and his powers to the building of an institute which would house the Book Depôt, provide necessary office accommodation for the diocesan authorities, a synod hall, and a gymnasium for the young men in whom he took a special interest.

This building would fit in with and form part of the whole Cathedral scheme. It was all erected and paid for when plans were altered and a new site chosen for the Cathedral. But it was not material building that was nearest the heart of the devoted priest. Spiritual building was more important to him, and he has left his great mark on Queensland by the founding of the Society of the Sisters of the Sacred Advent—a society which is spreading its good work through Queensland, and the initial success of which was due to his wise insight and fostering care.

In 1898 the Sub-Dean was consecrated the first Bishop of New Guinea, in S. Andrew's Cathedral, Sydney. The time had come when, for very shame, the Church in Australia should do something more definite for the Mission, which for seven years had struggled on in spite of difficulties and neglect, and the man chosen for the work was one peculiarly fitted for it. His organising ability, his absolute self-sacrifice and devotion, were such as were needed at once for the work of the Mission in New Guinea, and for the work of inspiring the Church of Australia with a sense of duty to support the Mission as part of the normal duty of Churchmen.

For the work in New Guinea itself, the Bishop found a small band of keen Missionaries, ready to do what was needed for extension work, and he brought others, whom he inspired with his own keenness. Difficulties there might be, but difficulties were to be overcome; and in actual physical labour, in enduring hardships, the Bishop set an example which inspired others. Mistakes might be made, but only to show how not to do a thing, not that it should not be done. If not in one way, then in another, if not at one place then at another; and so the Mission gradually and steadily developed. New workers came, new stations were opened, and the seed sown in earlier years began to grow and bear fruit. Of course, the labour and self-sacrifice of the previous seven years did much, but the time had come when there must be progress and development or failure; and the progress and development needed not only work in the Mission itself, but support and backing in funds and offers of personal service from Australia; and this was the hardest part of the work of the new Bishop. He had not much difficulty in getting such offers of service as were needed for the immediate developments in New Guinea. His personal enthusiasm and his life of self-sacrifice appealed, and did not appeal in vain, but the financial burden was heavy, and the need made it necessary for the Bishop to spend much time in Australia and in England raising funds for endowment and for the current expenses of the Mission.

At the very outset of his episcopate the Bishop met the Executive Council of the Australian Board of Missions and took upon himself the full responsibility for financing the Mission, the Board of course undertaking to do all it could to help the Bishop.

There was then no endowment of the See, the Bishop's income of £450 a year was guaranteed by certain parishes and individuals in Australia, and the guarantees were not always fulfilled. Fortunately the Bishop had some private means, and he was prepared if necessary to sacrifice all he had for the work of the Mission and for the honour of the Church, but he was wise enough to see that he should not himself pay for the actual working expenses, but rather gave and gave liberally for special things and for endowment funds. Once when matters were very serious financially he was strongly tempted to take the simple course of paying the debts himself, but he refrained from doing so.

It was an act of tremendous courage and faith, to take over a work already in debt, an income not assured, and at the same time to organize and push on developments in the Mission itself that meant more expense and needed an expanding income. It was a position which the Church should never have asked a man to take, and there are few other men who could have taken it, and performed the miracle which was the result of Bishop Stone-Wigg's ten years' work in New Guinea. At the end of that time there was an endowment fund which made the income of the Bishop secure, and left the Church a wider field for the choice of a man for the Bishopric; there was an endowment fund for the clergy of the diocese which has enabled the Bishop to pay a large part of the premiums for life insurances of the clergy and to make grants for work at Samarai and at Port Moresby; and above all the Church in Australia and in England was roused to a sense of responsibility for the Missionary work of the Church so that funds were forthcoming to carry on the work. Not yet, and perhaps never will the income be sufficient, for the work is ever expanding, and the claims are ever increasing, and for that we may thank God even if it means that there must always be some anxiety as to whether funds and staff will justify founding new stations, and occupying new districts.

But never again will the position be allowed to become so acute as it was in the sad days when the hospital at the Mambare had to be closed, and retrenchments insisted upon all round, when Missionaries offered to forego their own allowances if only children could be kept and the work of stations not be reduced. Those were sad times in 1904, the real crisis in the history of the Bishop's episcopate: may they never be as dark again.

The constant travelling—in Australia, in England, and in New Guinea—and all the privations and hardships he underwent told on the health of the Bishop, and in 1908, when he was in England for the Pan-Anglican Congress and the Lambeth Conference, the doctors told the Bishop he must not return to New Guinea. He was suffering from bronchial asthma and he could not hope to do any work if he returned to the climate. And so he resigned the See after ten years hard and strenuous labour—and he laid down his work knowing that his successor could never have such difficult times as he had had.

The Bishop's time and thoughts were not occupied with organisation and finance only. He knew how necessary and important these were. That work had to be done, and he had to do it, and he never spared himself in the doing of it. But all the time his real interest was in the people to whom he was sent, and his greatest worries and anxieties were not over finance, but about the spiritual progress of the children to whom he was father in God. Falls of native Christians hurt him far more than anything else, and in the earlier days there were times when he seemed broken-hearted because Christians had fallen back into heathen ways. He was very fond of the native children, and always followed with keen interest their life and doings. As in Brisbane so in New Guinea he was especially keen on doing all he could for them. A school was started in Samarai for the children of white settlers, though native and half-caste children were to be admitted to it if occasion arose. The then Governor Mr. (afterwards Sir George) Le Hunt made that a condition when a site in Samarai was given for the school. He also founded a home first at Hioge, afterwards removed to Ganuganunana, for half-caste children.

The Bishop lived for ten years after he resigned the See; he found a climate that suited him at Burwood, one of the suburbs of Sydney, and though he had to be careful of his health, the Church in Australia was to have the full benefit of his powers and enthusiasm.

He was, of course, whole-heartedly devoted to the work of the Australian Board of Missions, and more especially to all that concerned the New Guinea Mission. He was keenly interested in the Church Homes for Orphans at Burwood, and he was a wise and sympathetic helper, adviser and guide to the Sisters of the Church in all their work; and he founded the Church Standard to be the weekly Church paper for Australia.

Roughly, the life of Bishop Stone-Wigg since his ordination falls into three parts of ten years each—in Brisbane, in New Guinea, in Sydney. How different were the conditions when he passed from one to the other. In Brisbane the devoted parish Priest facing the problems and preparing for the future work of the Church in the diocese. In New Guinea the wise far-seeing organiser; in Sydney the general servant of the Church devoting himself without stint to what he felt was needed to strengthen her in her work; and at all times the spiritual guide and comforter of souls. He could be stern and uncompromising in whatever he felt was essential to the honour and efficiency of the Church; he was humble and devout in his own spiritual life, and demanded a high standard from others, as he himself strove to attain; he could unbend at times, and especially during the earlier days of his life in New Guinea, would use his wonderful powers of mimicry to brighten the lives of the members of the staff, reproducing voice and gesture and expressions of those he met on his travels—Missionary or trader, or miner or Papuan. Nothing escaped him, and his powers could have been used to hurt, but that he exercised them only on the humorous and grotesque.

The Rev. G. A. Luscombe went South on furlough in December. He hopes to return with Mrs. Luscombe and their two children about the end of March or early in April.

The Rev. J. T. Perry and Mrs. Perry who had been accepted for work in New Guinea, are unable to join the Mission staff. The doctors have forbidden Mrs. Perry living in the tropics.

Lessons of the War.

The Armistice has been signed and hostilities ceased on November 11th, 1918. It will be some months before the conditions of peace can be settled, but it may be taken for granted that the war is ended, and for that we have to offer to God our heartfelt thanks. It seems almost impossible that Germany could renew the struggle. The war is won, and already arrangements are being made for the return to more normal conditions of life. We have passed through four years and four months of the most terrible experiences the world has ever felt, and we are surely bound to try and know what the lessons are that we should learn, and put those lessons into practice. Perhaps what we most of all need to pray is that the Holy Spirit may come into our hearts, to enlighten our understanding that we may know, and to strengthen our wills that we may practise the lessons of the past four years. It is no use blinking our eyes to the fact that there are problems to be solved and difficulties to be faced in the immediate future which will demand all the wisdom and moral strength of the human race if the civilization of the world is to be worthy of God who created us; of Christ who died to save us, and of the blood that has been shed to preserve the world as a place worthy of civilised human beings.
